In 1985, we made it a statutory duty for local authorities to choose polling stations that offer facilities for the disabled over those which do not, where there is a choice. However, we have to recognise that in some areas choice will—for the present, anyway—be limited. Where the only building available does not provide good access for disabled voters, we provide a grant of about 50 per cent. towards the cost of a temporary ramp. Grants from election funds towards permanent adaptations to buildings could not be justified, because elections are held only infrequently.

The buildings that are used for polling stations are, however, usually ones to which the public have access on other occasions. I should have thought that it would be a priority for local authorities to make access for the disabled to those buildings at least fairly convenient. In some of the reports, difficult access is described as almost no access at all. There are two problems—first, where there is no access and, secondly, where access is possible but needs, by the use of more imagination, to be made much easier.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): I apologise for having missed the earlier part of the debate, through no fault of my own.

The all-party disablement group has been campaigning hard on the deficiencies of the existing legislation. The 1985 changes have not borne the fruit that we expected. In my constituency, rooms have been used to which people in wheelchairs cannot gain access, even though other parts of the same building would have been accessible. The existing legislation is not good enough. If the rest of the Bill is not acceptable, for the reasons that the Minister has given, it must surely be possible to use or to amend this part of the Bill so that progress on this narrow point can be made.

Mr. Lloyd: I am interested in the hon. Gentleman's remarks. If I have heard him aright he said that the part of the building used as a polling station did not have access for the disabled, but other parts of the building did. That seems extraordinarily remiss of those in charge, and I should have thought that local pressure would be the most effective way to deal with it. No doubt, as a result of the hon. Gentleman's noticing the problem, such pressure has been effective.

Polling stations are a national requirement, but also a local service provided by the local authority for a local event—the election in that constituency—and the problem needs a little more foresight, imagination and pressure from local people if it is to be solved. I shall return to the subject in my concluding remarks.

I know that ramps are necessary, as long as the slope is reasonable for people in wheelchairs. For people who are disabled and find walking difficult, but who are determined not to use a wheelchair, even a ramp with a low incline is difficult and steps are often easier to use. That is why I said that thought and imagination are required because the problems are not easily solved and different people have different requirements. The problem can only be solved with common sense and determination at a local level, although grants are available from the Home Office. An 80 per cent. grant is available for special polling booths, which are designed for use by disabled people within the polling station.

The engine of any change must come from sensible local decisions, based on imagination and foresight. Our aim is that all polling stations should be accessible to disabled people. For that reason, our working group, which is considering counting and other aspects of the voting process, has invited the Royal National Institute for the Blind to talk about its concerns. It is important to take into account the views of those who are able to offer practical advice about disabled people's problems. The RNIB last year drew up valuable guidance on polling station lay-out and equipment, which we circulated to returning officers before the election.

After the Spastics Society drew up its report, we invited it to provide similar guidance. We have had talks with Mencap about helping people with learning difficulties to register to vote; that answers a question from the hon. Member for Upper Bann. When we receive guidance we bring it to the attention of the people who need it, but considerably more needs to be done, through continued dialogue with specialist groups that serve the interests of the disabled. I assure the House that we shall continue that dialogue and will take careful note of the working group's recommendations.

The Government have much sympathy with the aims of the Bill. As I said, timing is its unfortunate aspect. I welcome this informed and concerned debate on Second Reading and can undertake to the House that issues raised in the debate will be studied carefully by the Home Office working groups—and no doubt by the political parties —with which we are committed to discuss the findings before taking further legislative or administrative action that seems right and practical in the light of what they say.

I cannot give Government support for the Bill at this time. I regret that I must say that, because I share the objectives of the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, and know that he has taken an enormous amount of trouble with the Bill. Even if it does not get on to the statute book this year, he will have brought his goals much closer than they were before he embarked on the endeavour, and I congratulate him on that.

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): It used to be a little easier to be heroic in creating democracy in this country, as I know from my local history, because the best part of 200 years ago three of my fellow citizens in Nottingham were executed on the steps of Shire hall for having had the temerity to demonstrate to secure the vote for ordinary people. No doubt the hangman was a guffawing ancient relative of he hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans). These days, however, it is much tougher.

I commend my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) for tackling the unglamorous and difficult thicket of legislation surrounding electoral registration. He has done his job remarkably well and I am sure that his hard work will be rewarded, certainly in the future, if not today. I link his name to that of Councillor Peggy Quirke whom we mentioned earlier. Almost single-handedly she managed to get about 15,000 additional people on the register in the London borough of Brent. The Conservative-controlled council opted for so-called "positive registration", which means letting people register themselves without any assistance.

I am a little saddened that the Minister did not take the opportunity to condemn the actions of the Conservative-controlled council in Brent, which initially denied about 26,000 people the opportunity to vote in just that one borough. It means that the fight to secure the vote is by no means over; it continues to this day, although perhaps less glamorously than in the past.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Will my hon. Friend comment on the lackadaisical way in which the Government threw away more than 20,000 votes in Brent but assiduously pursued votes in South Africa before the previous election?

Mr. Allen: As usual, my hon. Friend anticipates some of my remarks; I shall return to that topic shortly.

Perhaps part of the reason for the Government's inactivity and complacency is that there has been a one-party state for about 17 years. The Home Office response to under-registration may be described as at best complacent and at worst cynical. The Government have allowed a system to continue which delivered the goods to the Conservative party. From their point of view, "If it ain't broke, why fix it?" Electoral registration is too important to be left in a party political context.

I disagree with the hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble), who has now left the Chamber. He said that there was no place, at least in Northern Ireland, for an independent electoral commission. I believe that we need to consider seriously not just an independent electoral commission but an independent commission for democracy to make steady, carefully considered proposals about the nuts and bolts of our democracy. Such issues should not be dealt with through the lengthy, protracted procedure of a private Member's Bill, having to depend on the good fortune of one hon. Member and the acquiesence of a Government who feel that they will not benefit from such proposals. There must be a better way.

My view and that of my party is that we need to establish, or to consider establishing, an independent commission to make proposals when they are required, rather than having to wait for the good fortune of a private Member's ballot.

Mr. Maclennan: I fully agree with the hon. Gentleman about the importance of establishing an electoral commission. He will no doubt have read and had his argument strengthened by the 1991 report of the Hansard Society, an all-party—or no-party—commission of great authority and weight.

Mr. Allen: Indeed, I support that proposal from the Hansard Society and many of its other proposals. We constantly come up against the great difficulty that we cannot put matters before the House for a decision. If there were an independent commission of some sort it could do the valuable background work, produce considered proposals—which would, of course, have to command the agreement of all parties—and put them before the House in the form of a report would could be legislated upon. No doubt those matters will come before us at some time in the future.

The debate has been helpful, too, because it has allowed us to think afresh about some of the measures that we should consider in order to make the detail of our democracy work. Hon. Members may wish to consider whether we need registration at all. Of course, that question cannot be answered today. There are difficulties about how people are to make themselves known on polling day if they are not registered, but one state in the United States, for example, has already done away with electoral registration: provided that someone can prove who he is on the day, he is entitled to vote. I do not suggest that we deal with that idea today at any great length, but we need to think afresh about the ways in which we can make our system work.

Our current electoral system is decrepit and ancient. It survives only because of the good will and hard work of electoral registration officers and political activists, who fill in the gaps in lieu of the job being done properly by means of a modern technologically efficient system.

Every elector should have the right to vote and the Government have a responsibility to assist that process. Their failure to do so effectively meant that in April 1992 nearly 2 million Britons, having failed to register, could not vote in the general election. Many of those people were from already marginalised areas of society; many were young people and residents of inner cities. Two million people have no stake in our democratic system. Let us think on that when we talk about the young people on Meadowell or people who turn to crime and are alienated from our society. Somehow, we must give those people back their stake in our society and in the government at local and national level for which they are now avoiding responsibility.

No doubt some people deliberately left the register, thinking to avoid poll tax bills which they could ill afford. Others registered for the tax and assumed that they were also registered to vote. I am sure that my local party was not alone in having to deal with scores of potential voters who had not realised that they were not on the electoral register until election day, when they wondered why their ballot cards had not arrived. I expect that the Minister's local party had the same experience.

Many others will have failed to register because of problems of literacy or because their disability meant that they were unable to fill in the forms. Some will have failed to register due to apathy and alienation—feelings which can only be reinforced by inability to participate in the democratic process. Such under-representation of sections of the community seriously weakens our democratic system.

The boundary commission is due to report in the near future and its recommendations will be based partly on the size of local electorates, as recorded in the electoral registers. Large-scale under-registration will significantly affect the results of its deliberations. Some areas will be over-represented and others under-represented. The registers for Greater London, with only 90·3 per cent. registration, miss out more than 500,000 voters—the equivalent of almost seven constituencies of 80,000 people each.

The under-representation is worse in some areas, such as here in the City of Westminster, where one person in three is missed off the register. In one borough that has received a lot of attention this morning—the Conservative-controlled borough of Brent—only the threat of High Court action drove the council to undertake a canvass of households of the kind that the rest of us take for granted. As a result, at least 15,000 people were put back on to the register out of the 26,000 whom the borough had failed to put on in the first place.

Mr. Wigley: I am following the hon. Gentleman's argument and I agree sustantially with it. Does he agree —I suspect that he will with enthusiasm—that, apart from individuals having lost out, the outcome of the election could have been determined by the numbers missing from the register? There were 11 constituencies in which the Conservative winner had a majority smaller than the reduction in the electoral register. If the results had been different, we would not have the present Government.

Mr. Allen: I know that the hon. Gentleman feels much the same as I do. All Members of Parliament, no matter what their party, should represent every person in their constituencies. I know that the hon. Gentleman also agrees that the voting intentions of those who are not registered are not a matter for us here. Voting intentions are entirely a matter for the individual, who can vote as he or she wishes in the secrecy of the polling booth. Every individual, regardless of political leaning, is entitled to that vote. Part of our duty and, above all, the duty of the Home Office is to ensure that everyone votes. The hon. Gentleman has no better information than I have on how those missing from the register would have voted. Who can say?

How can Parliament be said to represent the British public if so many people do not have the chance to vote? Whether they have withdrawn deliberately from the democratic process or not, they no longer possess even the ability to vote. The Government have dodged their responsibilities. I am appalled that they spend only 1·2p per elector on promoting registration. If that is the extent to which the Government value our electoral system, it is no surprise that so many people do not bother to take part. Any party truly committed to the ideals of democracy—I am sure that Conservative Members claim to have that commitment—should be willing to pay for the responsibilities that that belief entails.

Lady Olga Maitland: What budget does the hon. Gentleman reckon to be appropriate for advertising?

Mr. Allen: Initially, an appropriate sum might be the amount that the Government spent on recruiting overseas voters from South Africa and Spain. I understand that 30,000 individuals were recruited in that campaign. A spokesperson for Conservative central office said that the Conservatives expected that 70 per cent. of those registered would be their supporters. For the hon. Lady's information, that budget was £750,000. I should go for that figure for a start. No doubt the hon. Lady will outbid me because she is keen to register even more people.

Mr. Barnes: A parliamentary answer I received a couple of years ago showed that out of the total Government expenditure on publicity, including publicity for selling off industries and encouraging people to go on to fancy employment schemes, the expenditure on encouraging electoral registration was 0·132 per cent. In a democracy, we must be willing to spend considerably more than that.

Mr. Allen: My hon. Friend puts his finger on the point. If we are serious about registering electors rather than registering people likely to vote for a particular party, money should be made available. Money has been made available for the latter and it should be made available for the former.

If the Government are not prepared to do the job themselves, they and their working parties should try to facilitate the task of others. They should assist political parties in registering electors, perhaps by means of free postcards which could be returned to the local electoral registration officers. I would not normally wish to associate too closely with a company as free with its writs as McDonald's is, but I pay tribute to McDonald's in the United States—a very rare tribute indeed—for its keenness on promoting electoral registration. Those of us from the United Kingdom who were around for the presidential election campaign were surprised to see that, for example, post offices and McDonald's hamburger joints were keen to promote electoral registration and were making registration cards freely available. That may be worth considering in the United Kingdom.

Ultimately, we may be able to develop a system where registration technology is such that we can allow electors to register on election day itself, as happens elsewhere in the world. I hope that such ideas will not be ruled out in the Home Office working parties' review.

The absence of a person's name on the electoral register affects not only his or her right to vote; it debars him or her from jury service, which should be a matter of particular concern to us. Juries are meant to represent local populations; if large numbers of people, particularly from the inner city, are unable to serve on them, the social spread that our system is meant to contain and represent will be seriously distorted. It is debatable whether electoral registers represent the best way of selecting jurors for service, but while the present system remains in place it is important for that reason alone that registration is as full as possible.

We should consider not only the problem of low voter registration but that of turnout. In the last general election only 77·7 per cent. of the electorate voted; 9 million people who were eligible to vote failed to do so. In the 1992 metropolitan borough elections, only 32·5 per cent. of the electorate voted. In 1990—not a year characterised by election fatigue—the figure was only 46·3 per cent. Such figures are symptomatic of the electorate's disillusionment with the democratic process and represent an indictment of our present system of government. If we cannot persuade those registered to vote to do so, how can we expect to convince those not registered of the wisdom of registering?

The Bill addresses many of the concerns about our electoral process and I applaud the sentiments behind it. But until the British public regard their elected representatives as their voice in government, be it local or national, and not merely as emasculated administrators or simply lobby fodder, it will be hard to ensure popular participation in our democracy. Such participation requires not just changes in the powers and responsibilities of electoral registration officers, but a sea change in the way in which government at all levels views itself in relation to the public and their representatives.

The Labour party's Plant committee has been considering the British electoral system. Nationwide, local Labour parties are participating in the largest consultation exercise on constitutional reform ever been embarked upon. The Labour party is the only party genuinely willing to debate issues of democracy with an open mind rather than a fixed agenda. The next Labour Government will examine the possibility of instituting a commission on democracy, which I know has the support of other Opposition parties, along the lines of the Commission for Racial Equality. The commission would be charged with reporting both to Parliament and to the country. Its task would be to ensure freedom and fairness in all aspects of our electoral system and constantly to review and tune the nuts and bolts of our democracy and electoral process.

Similarly, the Labour party is now examining a Bill of Rights. It is inconceivable that the worst excesses and abuses of the electoral system—such as that in the Conservative-controlled London borough of Brent to which I referred—would survive a challenge under Bill of Rights provisions fairly adjudicated on by a modernised judiciary.

Other aspects of the current electoral process certainly need examination. The first is postal voting.

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Allen: Of course.

Mr. Powell: Before my hon. Friend develops that point, I should like to draw his attention to the fact that I recently changed my address. My constituency was reorganised in 1983 as a result of the reorganisation of parliamentary boundaries. I tried to find accommodation in my new constituency for 10 years. I received a letter dated 2 February from the returning officer in which he informs me that I cannot possibly be registered on the electoral register in my constituency until next October. I cannot get on to the rolling programme suggested in the Bill. As the Member of Parliament for Ogmore, I am not allowed to register until next October. I shall not be allowed to vote for myself and, with the small majority that I have, I shall have great difficulty being returned to the House. That is a very important point.

Mr. Allen: When hon. Members are in the very tenuous electoral position of my hon. Friend the Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell), every vote counts. No doubt he will try to push his Bill more speedily through Standing Committee so that my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East can get his Bill into Committee and therefore allow my hon. Friend the Member for Ogmore the electoral registration that he so richly deserves.

With regard to absentee voting, the entire system of postal and proxy voting is in dire need of reassessment. In general, ignorance of procedure and of the availability of such facilities must be remedied. In the United States of America, which undoubtedly has its own electoral problems, no notes from doctors or employers are necessary for absentee ballots. Such a reform would be widely welcomed in this country. In California recently, one in five of the votes cast in presidential and other elections was cast as an absentee ballot. We shall examine the possibility of postal voting in this country for every individual who needs one, requires one and requests one. Certainly, everyone over retirement age should have an automatic right to apply for a postal or proxy vote on the ground of ill health.

The timing of elections is also an issue. Hon. Members will know that the Labour party remains committed to fixed-term Parliaments. Many people in the electorate believe that it is an outrage that an incumbent Prime Minister can choose to go to the country to suit his or her——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): Order. I draw the hon. Gentleman's attention to the fact that his contribution has nothing to do with the Bill. It would help the debate if the hon. Gentleman could return to the Bill.

Mr. Allen: Access to polling stations is referred to in the Bill and is another vital issue. I am delighted that my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East has drawn attention to that matter. We have always been committed to ensuring equality of access to the democratic process. That will not occur while there is still inequality of access to the voting booth. I therefore welcome the proposals in the Bill about accessibility audits.

In July 1992, the Spastics Society reported that only one in eight polling stations surveyed was considered adequately accessible. Although each constituency has an average of 6,000 housebound people, the Government spent just £14,500 in 1991 publicising the rights of the elderly and disabled to obtain long-term postal and proxy votes.

Accessibility audits suggested by my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East will not be enough on their own. Unless central Government take full financial responsibility for ensuring access for the disabled, there will be no way of effectively ensuring adequate standards of access countrywide. In the face of increased financial pressure from the Government, the current requirement for local authorities to find 50 per cent. of the cost of improving polling station access means that a disabled person's right to vote depends effectively on the spending priorities of the local authority.

I welcome the Bill's attempt to widen and standardise provisions for disabled persons' access to democracy. I urge the House to support the Bill. It contains many positive proposals. It is vital for the health of our democracy that we do not allow our electoral process to stagnate. We must not sit back and watch our inner cities become Americanised, populated by a class of people who are outside our conventional democratic structures. If that is not to happen, we need to act fast. The cycle of disillusionment and disfranchisement is vicious and it needs to be stopped early. The Labour party is fully committed to working towards reversing the growth of that invisible electoral population.

Opposition Members will not stop there. When the Labour party comes to power, it will create a culture of citizenship in which every Briton will take part. We shall have responsive and open government, an end to the dictatorship of the Executive, an elected second Chamber, a Bill of Rights, a reformed and accountable judiciary, Scottish and Welsh Assemblies and independent local government. All will be part of a new democracy for the United Kingdom—a democracy in which people will have pride, one in which they will participate and one which they will feel that they own.

The Bill is a worthy and valiant attempt by my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East. It is a good start on the road that beckons us on to more fundamental reform which can come only with a change of Government.

1.50 pm

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): Having been present throughout the debate, I expected that it would be an important debate, bearing in mind the topic of the Bill, but I am surprised at how lively and how wide ranging it became. The Bill begins with the laudable objective of improving the democratic process, and I welcome that, but from then on it goes into a rather severe decline. At times, even the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) appeared somewhat confused about the details in his Bill. He certainly proposed measures which are impractical and in some cases are based on an exaggerated analysis of the problem.

I do not deny the hon. Gentleman's sincerity in pursuing that objective, but I regret the late availability of the Bill. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is not to blame for that, but on a matter of such importance to everyone in this country it is most important that all elements are most carefully scrutinised and debated at length.

Mr. Barnes: One problem with a private Member's Bill is that, in going to the wire, it is produced as well as it can be. If it is produced earlier, there might be more defects in it. There is the problem of that trade-off. Many other Bills have strong pressure groups behind them, and they do much of the legal and other work. Although I had great support and people were offering ideas, I had to do much of the work myself. Unfortunately, that pushed us to the wire. I agree that the issue is of such importance that we could have done with two months in which to look at the Bill before we debated it.

Mr. Merchant: I appreciate that, but I am bound to say that if there are not many pressure groups trying to exert influence on the topic, the problem is perhaps not perceived by the population to be so great as the hon. Gentleman has portrayed it.

The hon. Gentleman concedes that matters need to be thoroughly discussed and investigated before a Bill is presented and the law is changed. That is why the main fault in the Bill is that it is premature. My hon. Friend the Minister has said that his Department is looking in detail at all aspects covered by the Bill and, indeed, others as well. The hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East has said that, given another few months, he would have been able to present a better Bill. Surely the answer is to wait until the Home Office review is complete, when all such matters have been investigated and all the ramifications, practicalities and so on are examined before such a Bill is laid before the House.

Apart from the issues incorporated in the Bill, there are two other matters that should rightly be examined at the same time and, if necessary, included in legislation.

There are wider issues such as the question whether double registration should continue to be allowed and whether it is a good thing, the extension of the absent vote, which my hon. Friend the Minister mentioned, the various implications of European agreements on EC nationals and their voting rights at some stage in the future, and electoral counting methods and the possible use of electronics or machine methods to count votes. All those issues need to be examined at length.

The United Kingdom has a precious democratic system. It is important to examine the implication of suggestions about a rolling register or access for the disabled to ensure that any changes that take place will be for the better and benefit the population in terms of ease of voting.

While some of the suggestions in the Bill at first appear attractive—they are ones with which I generally agree—the practicalities need to be taken fully into account. For example, with regard to the clauses dealing with voting for the disabled, one needs to ask whether, by imposing a requirement to have one polling station in a constituency fully equipped and designated for the disabled, one is not making the situation worse by discouraging electoral returning officers from providing adequate facilities at other polling stations, especially in a constituency that may cover a large geographical area. Such matters need to be fully weighed up before any final decision is taken.

The idea of a rolling register is quite attractive. It has many merits and has become much more feasible with the availability of new technology to speed up the process of adding or subtracting names then publishing them, certainly in an electronic form. The difficulties relate to standardisation and finding systems that work and are reliable.

We have all seen numerous examples of the hiccups—often they are more than hiccups—that occur when electronic methods are introduced. A criticism in the early days of the community charge was the difficulty that borough and district treasurers had in getting their machinery to work properly. If we introduce a system that is heavily based on a new electronic process, all the ramifications of it will need to be examined. We need to come to a conclusion on a system that will work and which can be standardised across the country.

The sale of the electoral register was mentioned at various times in the debate. I shall refer to that matter briefly, as I have some previous experience, not directly in the direct mail business but in dealing with some of the problems thrown up by the direct mail industry and the public on direct mail matters. I should add that I no longer have a connection with the industry.

I am convinced that, on balance, the sale of the electoral register is a good thing. Apart from the arguments against it being limited by practical factors, I am not sure whether we can prevent the electoral register from becoming available one way or another. Given that availability, we may as well charge for it.

In no case that I can think of is the electoral register used by direct mail houses to blanket an area and deliver junk mail—it would indeed be junk mail as it would be entirely untargeted—which they would not otherwise be able to do. That would be bad direct mailing and of no interest to direct mail houses. Direct mail houses use the electoral register for an entirely benign process—to clean up and check their existing records. People benefit from the system, because it ensures that the names and addresses used are much more accurate than they would be if they were not cleaned up by that process. Preventing direct mail houses from using the electoral register might lead to a deterioration in the targeting quality of direct mail and create many more public complaints than exist at present.

Non-registration is the ill which the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East is trying to correct by means of the Bill. There are non-registration problems, of course, but some of the figures that he quoted exaggerate the problem. Everyone accepts that no one can know accurately, without carrying out an extremely detailed exercise, how many people are unregistered. Many of the figures produced tend to suggest that it is nearer 5 or 6 per cent., not 10 per cent. as the hon. Gentleman suggested. A document produced by the Library tells us that the estimated percentage of people registered when set against the population has increased during the past year over the previous year in Scotland, England and Wales.

The decline measured in previous years was not that great. There were only marginal changes. Most interesting of all, the percentage of the younger age groups—the attainers—estimated to be registered is higher now than a decade ago and has been slowly increasing over that period. There is no suggestion that the community charge or anything else has produced a declining registration among attainers.

Opposition Members have claimed that the Labour party would be helped by greater registration or, at least that the results of elections and opinion polls would be different, but there is no evidence on which to base that claim. Anyone who assumes that all those who are not registered would vote for a particular political party and thus make a dramatic difference to the results of elections in marginal seats is greatly mistaken. The majority of opinion polls are not carried out with reference to the electoral register; they are conducted by interviewers who stop others in the street to ask them for their views. That may account for opinion polls being inaccurate, but I doubt whether electoral registration has any impact on such polls.

A valid question is whether registration should be compulsory. My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern), who unfortunately can no longer be in his place, suggested that registration should not be compulsory. I have some sympathy with that view because it strikes me as strange that in a democracy people should be forced to register. On balance, I think that the present system is for the best, even if at times I have some doubts about its ethical validity. In practical terms, however, I am prepared to accept it. To the extent that it is compulsory, I find it peculiar that it appears not to be enforced, given that there are penalties. It may interest my hon. Friend the Minister and his right hon. and hon. Friends at the Treasury that if all those who are estimated to be unregistered were prosecuted and fined, the Treasury would be able to raise about £2 billion, which would no doubt be of great help now. A degree of enforcement would help to increase registration by acting as an incentive. If that were complemented by more advertising and more thorough door-to-door canvassing, I believe that many of the problems stemming from lack of registration would be overcome.

What are the reasons for non-registration? It has been suggested that it is linked with deprived areas. I find that difficult to envisage, because deprivation existed in past years, and often at much worse levels. Yet the percentage of those reckoned to be registered was higher during those years. The community charge has been used as an excuse, but there is no clear evidence to suggest that it has had a significant effect on registration. There will, of course, always be marginal examples. If we are talking of a severe problem, I believe that deprivation and the community charge are not the causes. Some say that anonymity is a factor. Some people will always want to guard their privacy to a high degree, and I do not think that anything can overcome that wish.

A difference in administrative practice is probably a main reason, because there is a good deal of variety between electoral registration officers. That problem must be addressed.

There is also the question of dissenters. There are always those who decline to take part in any of the society's activities, including registering and voting. The effort required to overcome the resistance of that last 1 or 2 per cent. would be enormous and not worth it—particularly when one bears in mind that some dissension would be on valid ethical or religious grounds.

It worries me sometimes that once Opposition Members seize on an idea, they are tempted to go almost to totalitarian lengths to enforce it. I find objectionable the Bill's requirement that if one moves to a new address, one must inform the registration officer within three weeks. That is rather draconian, but at least it does not go so far as some Labour Members, such as the hon. Members for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron), who have long campaigned for compulsory voting. The hon. Member for Newham, North-West gets very excited at that prospect. I sometimes wonder whether he will follow it up by requiring compulsory voting for the Labour party. That hon. Gentleman told the House:

"Already we consider certain activities in our society too important for the common good to be left as options."—[Official Report, 5 May 1987; Vol. 115, c. 589.]

He includes voting among them. The hon. Member for Rother Valley went further. He said:

"I would not be prepared to make any detailed provision for the right to abstain of religious groups or of anyone else."—[Official Report, 14 February 1985; Vol. 73, c. 615.]

That takes the argument to absurd lengths.

The House must allow the Home Office review to be completed, consider and debate its implications, and then carefully and thoroughly reach its conclusions and right the problems that exist—without altering practices that operate perfectly effectively.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call Mr. Ray Powell.

2.6 pm

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is a great pleasure to be called by you, having risen in my place on this spot since last May. On odd occasions, I have been tempted—being so short—to jump on my seat, in the hope that I would catch your eye. I feel very privileged this afternoon to have caught your eye and I am grateful to be called.

I am grateful also to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) for presenting a Bill of great importance—in particular, to this country's democracy. Earlier, he told me that if there were to be compulsory voting, that should operate today. Perhaps all hon. Members will take due note. I hope that most are in the House today.

I regret that I was unable to be in the Chamber earlier, to hear the Minister and his suggestion for a Home Office review. I have grave doubts of its value, if it applies any previous Conservative legislation affecting the electoral register. I refer, for example, to the Representation of the People Act 1990 to permit British residents overseas to apply for registration, which became law prior to the last general election. I know for a fact that Labour lost one seat as a result of that legislation. Labour lost Vale of Glamorgan by 19 votes in an election in which 58 registered overseas electors cast their votes by proxy—undoubtedly for the Conservative candidate. Most of the votes were cast by overseas residents who could qualify for the electoral roll if they had at one time been resident in this country, even if they had not been resident here or on the electoral roll for as long as 20 years. Not only could they register, but they could identify the constituency in which they wanted to register, even if they had never lived in that constituency. Therefore, I would not rely on the Home Office review to resolve the problem.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is interesting to know that the hon. Gentleman is sure that any British resident overseas is bound to vote Conservative. That was not the view of the Labour Front-Bench team when it assented to the inclusion of the paragraph in the legislation. The hon. Gentleman is entirely wrong to say that overseas British residents can register in the constituency of their choice. No overseas British resident can do that. They can register only in the constituency where it can be demonstrated that they were resident and on the register immediately before they left this country.

Mr. Powell: On the first part of the Minister's answer, I cannot be responsible for actions taken by other Labour Members, whether Front Benchers or Back Benchers. If they had 15 years experience as a parliamentary constituency agent. as I have, and had studied the Representation of the People Act 1990 to ensure who was entitled to vote in an election, their opinions would probably be different.

On the amending legislation, although the Minister suggested that not all overseas residents voted Conservative, when a television programme was shown in this country involving an organisation for those with properties abroad, its president asked the audience of 500 people at a dinner to take note of their rights to register. He said that he hoped that they would all vote for the Conservative party. Those people might have been misguided, as they had been out of this country for so long—some of them for as long as 14 or 15 years. They might have been unaware of what had happened in that period under the Conservative Government, but that programme was shown in this country only a matter of weeks before the general election, and it undoubtedly had some impact.

Mr. Thomason: The hon. Gentleman appears to be saying that most overseas voters vote Conservative. Is he arguing that, therefore, they should not be allowed to vote? If so, what does that have to do with the Bill?

Mr. Powell It has a lot to do with the Bill. It is unfair to extend rights to people who have not resided in this country for 20 years when those rights go beyond those held by residents and Members of Parliament in this country. Even as an elected Member of Parliament, when I moved I was denied the right to register on the electoral roll at my new address as my name was not on the roll before October. The register of electors is open to people who have not been residents in this country for periods of up to 20 years. That was the subject of the Home Office review when the amending legislation was introduced.

Mr. Doug Hoyle (Warrington, North): Does my hon. Friend agree that, whatever the political opinions of the people, Conservative Members who went abroad made a concerted attempt to contact those people and get their names on the register? I do not think that those Conservative Members would have been making that effort if they did not believe that most of those people were Conservative voters.

Mr. Powell: I accept entirely what my hon. Friend suggests. That undoubtedly happened. It had a direct effect on a number of marginal seats. It should not have been allowed, but it was allowed, by agreement on both sides——

Lady Olga Maitland: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Powell: Let me deal with the point that has been made; then I shall gladly give way to the hon. Lady.

That should not have been allowed, because the amendment extended rights to citizens outside this country that are not afforded to citizens in this country.

Lady Olga Maitland: This strikes me as a case of sour grapes. What steps did the Labour party take to find their voters? I suspect they did not take any steps because there were no Labour voters.

Mr. Powell: The hon. Lady is making the very point that I made. The primary objective of both the Home Office and the Government was to extend this right to their own supporters.

Lady Olga Maitland: Will the hon. Gentleman give way again?

Mr. Powell: Yes, I will. If I do not do so, the hon. Lady will, I know, be up and down all day.

Lady Olga Maitland: The same opportunities can be given to Labour voters overseas. If they do not choose to vote, or if there are no Labour voters overseas, we cannot help the hon. Gentleman, can we?

Mr. Powell: No, but most of the people who live abroad and who have properties abroad are obviously those who benefited from opening shops on Sunday that they should not have opened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is now beginning to stray away from the Bill. I should be grateful if he would return to its contents.

Mr. Powell: The hon. Lady got me so excited that I was bound to go astray.

Reference was made earlier to opinion polls. Some years ago I introduced a ten-minute Bill that would have prevented opinion polls from being carried out five weeks before a general election or a by-election. One day, Members of Parliament in all parts of the House will come to their senses and realise that that is the right approach. It would save all political parties millions of pounds in carrying out opinion polls. In all probability, we should then have a true reflection of how the electorate intended to vote. I am surprised that the Conservatives are concentrating on opinion polls and the influence that they have, instead of wanting electors to vote in accordance with their political views.

Many changes occurred during the 15-year period that I was a political agent. At one time the register was collated in October, with a supplementary register being published by 16 February of the following year. If electors registered during that period they were allowed to vote. Therefore, the agents of all the political parties had the opportunity between October and February to ensure that their supporters were registered. That opportunity has been taken away from us. It is high time that the Government considered introducing a system under which there would be a rolling register and also the possibility, after the register had been compiled in October, of a cut-off date three months later so that people who were not on the register in October could be registered within that three-month period.

At the last election I was disturbed by the fact that between 400 and 500 of my constituents were not on the register. Since then, a survey has been conducted to find out the total.

On the day of the election, two residents of the Caerau area of Maesteg in my constituency went to vote. Apparently, one of them—I could not understand where he came from or his family background—went to vote Conservative, and we are conducting an investigation into that. Misguided though he was, he went to the polling station with his next-door neighbour, who had been a neighbour and a friend for years. They used to go to the Conservative club together—although the neighbour voted Labour he was an officer of the Conservative club in Caerau, which is typical of the valley people.

When that man went to the polling station he found that he was denied the right to vote because he was not on the electoral register, although he had lived at the same address and voted at the same polling station for the past 50 years—and he paid his poll tax. His neighbour aggravated the situation because he was voting for two non-residents of the Ogmore constituency, who had been recruited on to the register because of the iniquitous decision to allow voting rights to residents abroad. That highlights the problems created at the last election—the postal date of registration and the fact that people from abroad are allowed to register and to vote.

I hope that there will be a Division on whether the Bill should have a Second Reading. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East will succeed in that Division. I also hope that the Minister will concede that there is time for the Bill to be debated and will find time for early completion of the preceding Shops (Amendment) Bill, which I am promoting. I hope that the House will encourage the Minister to arrange an early Report stage for that Bill so that my hon. Friend can get his Bill into Committee.

Mr. Thomason: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the Bill would not have helped the voter from his constituency who turned up on the day of the election to find that he was not on the register? The hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East says that the Bill requires more than seven days' prior notice—in my opinion, as drafted, it requires 14 days—for a name to be put on the register. It is not a rolling register, but is fixed to two points in time—an election and the annual update. Does the hon. Gentleman concede that it will not deal with that problem?

Mr. Powell: It would be a big help if the draft register were published in October and if adjustments could be made until February, which is what used to happen. Of course, it would help if people were allowed to go on a rolling register and to ensure that their names were on it before the day of the election. As my constituent had been on the register for 50 years, it is surprising that he should find that he was not on it.

I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East will get support for the Bill. I and a number of other hon. Members will be in the Lobby to support him, and we are grateful that he has taken the time, effort and energy to promote the Bill, with the backing of a number of organisations, so that Parliament has the chance to rectify many mistakes, and to allow people to exercise their democratic right to be on the register and to vote for a Labour Government which, in all probability, is what will happen at the next election.

Isle of Sheppey (Assisted Area Status)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Arbuthnot.]

2.38 pm

Sir Roger Moate (Faversham): I thank my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry for his continuing and helpful interest in our area. He is, I know, coming to Sheppey in a few weeks' time to open a new factory. He was in Thanet and Dover only a few months ago. He also arranged recently for a full, helpful and lengthy meeting with north and east Kent Members to discuss the east Kent initiative. We found that meeting most encouraging and I hope that we were right to do so. Not least, my right hon. Friend is responding to the debate today. I should apologise to him and to his constituents for keeping him here this afternoon if it were not to debate a matter of such significance to north Kent in general and to the Isle of Sheppey in particular.

The debate is about the economic situation of the Isle of Sheppey and assisted area status. I have deliberately specified the Isle of Sheppey for reasons that I shall give in a moment. An application for assisted area status has been lodged in respect of the east Kent coastal strip, which includes the travel-to-work areas of Sittingbourne and Sheerness, Thanet, Dover and Deal, Folkestone and the coastal towns of the Canterbury travel-to-work area, which have all been brought together under the east Kent initiative.

Many of my hon. Friends asked whether they could take part in the debate. I told them that the debate was about the Isle of Sheppey—not even about the whole of my borough of Swale or the whole of the area covered by the east Kent initiative. That is because the Isle of Sheppey has specific problems that I wish to place on record. At the same time, however, let me place on record my admiration for the highly professional way in which the east Kent initiative application has been presented and processed and for the co-operation of all the local authorities and other organisations and individuals concerned with the initiative. As I said, several of my hon. Friends from north Kent wanted to be here, but, although our combined efforts are, I think, fundamental to the application, this is, none the less, a debate about Sheppey.

It is estimated that by the year 2000 the area as a whole could have a jobs shortfall of more than 40,000. Some serious structural changes are taking place in north and east Kent, which is why the application that we have lodged is so important. The Kent impact study predicts a bleak future for east Kent if nothing radical is done.

My hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) constantly reminds us how many jobs will be lost in Dover alone as a result of the completion of the tunnel and of the single market. In passing, let me thank my hon. Friend and our Member of the European Parliament, Christopher Jackson, for their work in pressing successfully for a special fund to help customs clearance agents and freight forwarders who will become redundant as a result of the changes. Three years ago, it was estimated that well over 2,000—perhaps nearly 3,000—people were employed by such companies. As a result of their lobbying, substantial sums will be available this summer, in particular to help with retraining.

I shall paint a gloomy picture, although I stress that there is another side to the coin. Sheppey is one of the strongest manufacturing areas in the south-east of England. It is a leading producer of steel, pharmaceuticals, electrical goods, ceramics and other products. It has Britain's fifth-largest port by tonnage and a ferry company with the best ships on the channel—they are second to none. It is a newly designated environmentally sensitive area. The people of Sheppey are proud of their island and rightly so. In strategic terms, it is superbly located and there is great local determination to use the advantages to create economic growth and local prosperity.

The present position was summed up rather gloomily in the Financial Times of 8 August 1992, in an article entitled "Tackling Blight in the Garden of England, Depressed East Kent is Perceived as Part of the Prosperous South East". That perception is our problem. The article states that Sheppey is the worst blackspot of all, with regeneration hampered by the bottleneck of a narrow access road and a lifting bridge over the River Swale. It refers to the 22,000 vehicles a day crossing that bridge—the figure is actually 24,100—and mentions the big blow that was dealt to the hopes of the area when the Government recently rejected a £500 million development plan for Sheppey, which included a new road and a new Swale crossing.

Unemployment in Sheppey was then running at more than 16 per cent. Regrettably, it is now estimated to be 18 per cent. and it could be 20 per cent. by the end of February as a result of a sad dispute over contracts at Sheerness docks. In November, the Sittingbourne and Sheerness travel-to-work area, which includes Sheppey, was the 13th worst-hit in England and the 17th worst-hit in the United Kingdom. Even more serious, its long-term unemployment is the highest in Kent.

We have been hit hardest by the recession—particularly by the rundown in the construction industry and by the very severe recession in London, which has had a heavy fallout in north Kent. East Kent has a fragile economy which is about to undergo severe structural changes. Sheppey is worst hit of all because of our poor road and rail links.

As we have been hit hardest by the recession, the steps that we can and should take now would allow Sheppey and north Kent to help lead the south-east out of recession. Let me tell my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry what I would like him to do—if he can—to help us, quite apart from the question of assisted area status. I should like him to use his good offices to spur other Departments to make rapid progress with projects that are in the pipeline, but which always take a long time to conclude.

There is the all-important question of the second Swale crossing. I have already referred to the daily traffic movements of 24,100 over the single carriageway lifting bridge. The volume is higher than that of the M20 east of Maidstone.

I shall not refer in detail to the Lionhope scheme, which is sometimes referred to as the Swale project. As I have said, that project was turned down by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. However, anything that my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry can do in that respect would be greatly appreciated.

The Secretaries of State for Environment and for Transport, their staff, local councils, planning authorities and many other organisations have been working very hard, and have impressed me enormously with their commitment, to produce a package to replace the

Lionhope scheme or what we might call the Swale project phase 2. They have been working hard to produce a package that is environmentally acceptable and legally and financially viable and one which would use private sector finance to speed up construction of the second bridge to allow the development of the docks at Sheerness and the creation of new business parks.

However, time is of the essence. I have a real fear that the legal complexities will cause delays that will discourage private sector involvement. If we are to make a reality of private sector involvement in public sector projects, as we are so anxious to do, and if we are to make a reality of the east Thames corridor concept, it is vital to get that type of project off the ground, cut red tape wherever it impedes us and galvanise economic growth.

I wish once again to balance the picture. It was magnificent news last week when the Government approved the £47 million dualling of the road from the M2 as far as the Kingsferry bridge. That is a stimulus to economic confidence and new investment. I record again my appreciation that that very important decision has now been taken and that construction will soon be under way. Nothing can exaggerate the importance of that to our area. It is a lifeline for jobs and I am grateful that it is under way. However, we must press on with the second crossing and the road link that is supposed to link Sittingbourne to the new road.

I urge my right hon. Friend the Minister to talk to the Minister for Energy—I am sure he does regularly. The Sheerness steelworks is one of the best in Europe. It is one of the leading steel producers in the United Kingdom. However, it is also a large, intensive energy user. Its outrageous electricity costs are a serious threat. We have made many representations, but so far with little result. My right hon. Friend the Minister will understand that there is little use in pouring new investment and infrastructure into the area if, at the same time, we are seriously undermining existing employers. I do not suggest that the problem is easy to solve. However, companies such as Sheerness Steel face unbearably high energy costs.

Although it may not be the direct responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister, anything that he can to do co-ordinate efforts in Whitehall in respect of our new community hospital would help. It is estimated that that project would cost £11 million. The signs are encouraging, but the project must be started. That would be another stimulus for economic confidence and further investment on the island.

Economic growth in north Kent was built on the back of the railway links to London. Our rolling stock is ancient and overcrowded. We have been promised new trains and, in effect, that would virtually mean a new railway. Some of the money was allocated in the autumn statement, but there is a frustrating delay and we need some serious political pressure to deliver the new investment. At the same time, we seek improved rail services—that means passenger and freight services—to the Isle of Sheppey.

We know that assisted area status would be a great boost to the area. It would help us in all the arguments that we continually make for better infrastructure, whether we are arguing with Ministers, Whitehall generally or, indeed, Brussels. It would certainly encourage existing companies and new companies with a very useful range of grants.

For example, I refer to one project—it is confidential at the moment and I should like to discuss it with my right hon. Friend—about which I have just learnt. It is certainly not yet on the record. A very large number of jobs could be safeguarded and new jobs generated by the grant that would come from assisted area status. There was a suggestion that we could create about £130 million of new investment. That is a considerable understatement, because I know of additional projects that would increase that figure substantially.

In a recession, it is very hard, even for large companies, to justify major investments when the companies concerned are not turning in adequate profits. Often a modest Government grant could be the key to opening up a parent company further away to make a significant investment, sometimes in new technology or sometimes to defend present employment. I am aware of circumstances in which a Government grant could be the factor that tilts the balance in favour of an investment decision.

I pay tribute to Swale borough council, which is not a Conservative-dominated body—three parties share the running of the council—for its highly professional work in promoting economic development in the area. I pay tribute also to the new professional chamber of commerce, which was established jointly by the local authority and local commerce, the Kent training and enterprise council, the east Kent initiative and the Sheppey Industries Association for all the work that has been done. Their work demonstrates their awareness—our awareness—that, ultimately, self-help wins through. We know that assisted area status is not a panacea by any means, but it would provide the framework in which those determined local organisations have a chance to succeed. We very much look forward to my right hon. Friend's visit. In particular, we hope that he will shortly be able to give some good news for the Isle of Sheppey.

2.52 pm

The Minister for Industry (Mr. Tim Sainsbury): I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Sir R. Moate) for his kind remarks. I very much look forward to my visit. I congratulate him on choosing this well-targeted subject for debate—as he said, not the whole of the borough of Swale but the Isle of Sheppey.

My hon. Friend has understandably referred to the granting of assistend area status. I am sure that he will understand that I cannot give any indication of whether the Isle of Sheppey, east Kent, or anywhere else for that matter, is likely to obtain assisted area status. I appreciate that there is great interest in the outcome. We shall announce the results of the review of the whole map as soon as we can. In doing so, we shall take account of the results of the coal review. We have also to obtain the necessary clearance by the European Commission. I know that my hon. Friend will understand why I cannot anticipate those decisions.

I can assure my hon. Friend that all the submissions made to us, including what he has said, will receive the same careful consideration. That is as true of the case made for Sheppey as it is for any other submissions. Our decisions will be based on the relative merits of the individual cases. My colleagues and I will be taking into account the up-to-date statistics in reaching our conclusions. I am, of course, aware of the problems that have affected parts of east Kent, to which my hon. Friend referred. They are forcefully set out in the submissions that I have received. My hon. Friend paid tribute to the work of the east Kent initiative and that of other bodies, and I am happy to recognise that, but, as my hon. Friend knows, I have also had the benefit of visiting the area. I have been shown at first hand both the difficulties and the potential of the area.

The Isle of Sheppey has to be seen in the context of the changes that are affecting the whole of east Kent. Great changes are taking place. The single European market and the channel tunnel are probably affecting east Kent more than any other area because of its position as the gateway to Europe. The changes are bringing problems—changes often do—and, as my hon. Friend has so eloquently said, the Isle of Sheppey has shared in those problems.

While not minimising the problems in any way, we must not lose sight of the fact that east Kent also has many advantages. I was pleased to hear what my hon. Friend said on that point. East Kent has a unique position between London and Europe. It has two large and attractive markets for business, with the channel tunnel making access to both even easier. It has excellent ports, including Sheerness. Road communications into the area are good. It is served by the A2/M2 and the M20, although I recognise that there are difficulties affecting access to the Isle of Sheppey itself. Its strengths make it well placed to benefit from the recovery as it comes through.

One possible approach to overcoming some of the specific problems was the original Sheppey—or should I call it Swale—project package of development proposals. The project was refused planning permission by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in July 1992 after a public inquiry. The main reason for the decision was that the proposals would cause damage to sites of national and international importance to nature conservation. There were also highways and countryside objections and significant conflicts with development plan policies. My hon. Friend is well aware that the area around the Swale is especially important to nature conservation in not simply national but international terms.

My hon. Friend referred to the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of Transport on 5 February which was extremely important to the area. I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham for the welcome that he gave to that announcement on the funding that will be provided for the improvements to the A249 between the M2 and slightly north of Iwade.

Proposals for a second Swale crossing are being examined in the context of further improvements to the A249 between Queensborough and the Iwade bypass. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State fully appreciates the need for that road and I know that every effort is being made to progress the scheme as quickly as possible.

There is land available in Sheppey for development, some of which is situated at the eastern end of the east Thames corridor. It is one of the major development opportunities of the future. The change may well bring problems. Equally, it can bring opportunities, as my hon. Friend recognised. East Kent and Sheppey are well placed to take advantage of those opportunities.

I have referred to the strength of the area, because there is an important point that must be recognised. In the past six months, I have received an enormous amount of correspondence urging on me the case for assisted area status to be granted to some parts of the country. I should make the point that assisted area status, by itself, is not a panacea, dispelling at a single stroke all the ills that are perceived as affecting an area. As its name implies, it is a mechanism for providing assistance of a specific sort. It can be used for creating and safeguarding jobs. In practice, it goes primarily to industry.

The major form of assistance that comes with assisted area status is regional selective assistance. As its name makes clear, the scheme is operated selectively to bring the maximum benefit to the areas in which it operates. It is not operated wholesale and it cannot, and nor should it, be a replacement or substitute for the efforts of all those concerned in an area to improve their position.

As my hon. Friend recognises, there is great potential in east Kent, but there is much work to be done to convert that potential into success. Work needs to be done, irrespective of assisted area status. Many potential investors are not primarily concerned about their ability to secure grants. For many of them at least, it is important to have the knowledge that they can identify suitable premises and staff, and that the local authority and others will work with business to help them succeed. I am sure that, as my hon. Friend said, that is not lost on the local authorities, the training and enterprise council or any other bodies in Kent.

Clearly, good-quality inward investment benefits the area in which it takes place and can directly and indirectly create much-needed jobs. Local authorities should organise themselves to provide speedy, detailed and high-quality responses to inquiries from potential inward investors. My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau is energetically pursuing inward investment into the United Kingdom. However, the bureau depends on individual local authorities for the detailed descriptions of available land that can attract investors' interests.

I am aware of the need to encourage investment in the Sheppey area. I am pleased to say that the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport are liaising closely with the local highways and planning authorities, with a view to enabling appropriate investment and infrastructure to be provided. Their Departments are involved in continuing discussions with a number of interested parties about future developments on and near Sheppey.

That brings me to a theme of particular importance in creating a climate locally that will encourage businesses to establish in an area and grow. It is essential that all local interests work together. The TEC, local chambers of commerce, business-support organisations and local authorities must work closely with each other in the service of the community—training the work force, assisting businesses and providing a climate in which businesses will invest.

I know that in Kent there is an effective and active training and enterprise council to which my hon. Friend referred. The TEC has received considerable support from the county council. My Department is currently discussing with the TEC the support that we shall be making available, through it, to assist small firms in the area. While those negotiations are not yet complete, it is our aim that there should be a soundly based structure of support for small businesses, particularly those operating in Sheppey and in other parts of Kent.

In many parts of the country and, I have to say, especially in Kent, the advice and support for small firms comes from many different sources. In Kent, there are many chambers of commerce, local enterprise agencies and other support bodies. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has invited bids from those concerned with the provision of support for the establishment of one-stop shops. The aim of the one-stop shop will be to create more effective organisations providing help and support for smaller businesses and to reduce the confusion surrounding the provision of support for small firms.

I am glad to say that there has been a strong response to the invitation, with 57 one-stop shop bids received from all parts of the country, including one from Kent. We are reviewing the bids with a view to drawing up a shortlist. There will be up to 15 winners from among those who have bid. Whether or not the Kent bid is successful, it is important that we continue to make progress towards the establishment of a fully effective support structure for small firms in all parts of Kent. I am sure that that is one of the ways in which we can best help to address the problems to which my hon. Friend has drawn attention. My Department stands ready to assist in that process.

I know that my hon. Friend's constituents recognise the need for such work themselves. Indeed, much has already been put in hand. The east Kent initiative has done a splendid job of bringing together local interests in pursuit of the common goal. It is important that that work should continue, ensuring that local authorities and others are working together to identify the strengths of the area and, where weaknesses exist, what can be done to remedy them. I am sure, however, that my hon. Friend is well aware of the necessary limits on public expenditure. That makes it all the more important that, in areas such as those that we are discussing, the priorities for expenditure should be identified. That is one of the valuable functions that the east Kent initiative can perform.

My hon. Friend drew attention to several matters that affect Departments other than mine. I take note of his comments about the new community hospital, and I shall bring them to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

My hon. Friend referred to the important subject of electricity prices and their effect on industrial users. In fact, the average electricity price paid by industrial customers overall has fallen by 6 per cent. in real terms over the three years since privatisation. I accept, however, that some very large industrial companies have seen significant price increases. My Department is in discussion with large users about the working of the market, and electricity prices paid by large users are being considered in the coal review. I cannot, for reasons which I am sure my hon. Friend will understand, of course, anticipate the conclusions of that review.

I note my hon. Friend's comments about Networker express trains on coastal services. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is pursuing with British Rail its plans for rolling stock. I will draw to his attention my hon. Friend's concerns about the rolling stock used on the services to his constituency—perhaps at the same time that I draw to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State the rolling stock in use when I journey to my constituency.

This has been a most helpful debate, and I congratulate my hon. Friend on the manner in which he approaches the challenges and opportunities of the Isle of Sheppey. I hope that my hon. Friend and, through him, his constituents accept that the Government recognise the problems that confront them and that the Government are willing to play their part in overcoming them. The enterprise and energy that can be brought together locally is of the greatest importance in addressing problems and taking advantage of the opportunities that my hon. Friend and I realise exist.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at five minutes past Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Harbours Act 1964

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he plans to bring into force the amendments to the Harbours Act 1964 made by schedule 3 to the Transport and Works Act 1992;

(2) what consultation he will be carrying out with organisations representing users of public rights of way on the implementation of the new provisions for enabling harbour revision orders to be made which will divert or extinguish public rights of way.

Mr. Norris: The amendments to the Harbours Act 1964 made by schedule 3 to the Transport and Works Act 1992 were brought into force on 15 July 1992 by the Transport and Works Act 1992 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1992 (Statutory Instrument 1992 No. 1347 (c.45)). We shall ensure that, when application is made for a harbour revision order which would divert or extinguish a public right of way, the applicant notifies user organisations of the application so that, if they so wish, they may make objection to it.

Braer Disaster

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the departmental investigation into the causes of the Braer disaster in Shetland will include consideration of the nature and duration of insurance arrangements for the vessel, and the arrangements which were in hand for any extensions to the period of insurance cover.

Mr. Norris: It has already been established that the Braer complied with the requirements to have compulsory insurance cover in respect of any pollution damage she may have caused up to the owner's liability under the 1969 civil liability convention on oil pollution. Other forms of insurance on the ship—for example, in respect of her hull or cargo—are not compulsory and are matters for the owner or cargo interests.

The purpose of the marine accident investigation branch investigation is to establish the cause of the accident and consider measures to prevent a recurrence. It will not look further into the insurance arrangements unless there is good reason to believe that they are directly related to the accident. The general issue of insurance is within the remit of the inquiry which has been set up under the chairmanship of Lord Donaldson to advise on whether any further measures are appropriate and feasible to protect the United Kingdom coastline from pollution from merchant shipping.

Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies had been made of the effect of the channel tunnel on the income from light dues.

Mr. Norris: The light dues income from vessels using ports adjacent to the tunnel is estimated to have been £650,000 out of a total light dues income of £45 million in 1991-92. The effect of the opening of the channel tunnel on income from light dues is therefore likely to be minimal.

English Channel (Traffic Separation)

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 270, what action is taken at the time to prevent a collision if a vessel is observed to be contravening the traffic separation schemes in the English channel.

Mr. Norris: An identified vessel observed contravening the traffic separation scheme will be contacted and a warning broadcast made to all other traffic using the scheme. In addition, this information will be included in the routine broadcasts transmitted.

London Underground

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the amount of money planned by London Underground to be spent on the Northern line during 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: London Transport has not yet finalised its spending plans for 1993-94.

Royal Train

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are under his proposals for the railways for the services provided by the royal train to be put out to private tender.

Mr. Freeman: We shall consider arrangements for the royal train in due course.

Ipswich-Lowestoft Railway Line

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the closure of the Ipswich to Lowestoft railway line.

Mr. Freeman: None. It would be for British Rail to bring forward proposals to close passenger lines or stations. I am not aware of any such proposals concerning the Ipswich-Lowestoft line. Under our privatisation plans a full statutory procedure will continue to apply to closure proposals.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications of the collapse of Charterail for his Department's franchising arrangements for British Rail and the proposed use of charging policy to freight companies for track use.

Mr. Freeman: The collapse of Charterail has no implications for the franchising of British Rail services, nor for the access charging regime for rail freight operators.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the issues discussed and decisions taken at the joint Environment/ Transport European Council meeting in Brussels on 25 January.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 28 January, Official Report, column 796.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he received, following his White Paper on rail privatisation, from (a) the passenger transport executives and (b) British Rail about the restrictions on capacity and train paths which exist on the Rugby to Stafford via Birmingham section of track over which the west coast main InterCity route operates.

Mr. Freeman: We are aware from general discussions with BR that this is a very heavily used section of the network.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what advice he received following his White Paper on rail privatisation in respect of the reduction in train paths that would be a consequence of the required or planned renewal of track and infrastructure forming the InterCity west coast main line route;

(2) what advice he has received following his White Paper on rail privatisation on the scope for allocating adequate maintenance periods on that track and infrastructure vested in InterCity west coast main line between Crewe and Carlisle.

Mr. Freeman: None. Decisions on maintenance and train paths will primarily be a matter for Railtrack.

Railways (Disclosure of Information)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers the regulator, franchising authority and Railtrack will have to demand disclosure of information concerning customer numbers using routes, and other matters which would normally be deemed as commercially confidential.

Mr. Freeman: The rail regulator will have the power to require relevant information from operators under the conditions of the licences that he will issue to train operators; the franchising director will be able to require information under the conditions of franchise agreements; and such powers for Railtrack are considered unnecessary.

Rail Safety

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which body will be responsible for certifying that a locomotive or rolling stock which has been the subject of a train failure is safe to move following the vesting of Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: The train service operator will have primary responsibility for ensuring the safety of his locomotives and rolling stock in line with the arrangements contained in his railway safety case validated by Railtrack.

Rail Incidents

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who he intends shall be responsible for marshalling and providing customer action teams and increasing at short notice the staffing levels both in the retail and operational management area following either a major delay, incident or rail crash.

Mr. Freeman: It will be for franchisees and other passenger operators to decide their own arrangements for the care of passengers.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his intention on how diversionary routes shall be charged or costed out following the vesting day of Railtrack;

(2) which body shall be responsible for deciding the apportionment of costs, charges or damages relating to delay or loss of customers due to a train failure where more than one operator had use of the track or train path, following the vesting day of Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters for access agreements.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whom he proposes shall be authorised to instigate diversionary routes, and the alteration of operators' timetables as train paths, where a train failure, crash or repair work impedes a particular route, following the vesting day of Railtrack;

(2) who would be authorised to provide the appropriate staff when it becomes necessary for emergency hand signalling to be instituted, following the vesting day of Railtrack;

(3) which body shall be responsible for managing the flow of train services around a train failure, following the vesting day of Railtrack;

(4) whose responsibility it will be to remove debris and clear and restore the track and site when an operator's train has damaged or destroyed track or equipment, following the vesting day of Railtrack;

(5) if the franchising authority would prepare the national timetabling through an iterative process; and by what criteria or basis the route which is first on the graph would be determined;

(6) which body shall be responsible for organising repair, line clearance and restoration of equipment when more than one train operator was involved in an incident which resulted in the route or train path being blocked, following the vesting day of Railtrack;

(7) which body would determine priority services and re-write the timetables of the various operators on those occasions when an engineering possession has been made to a section of track over which more than one franchise or operator of a service exists;

(8) whose responsibility it will be, following the vesting day of Railtrack, to minimise delay in clearing the track following a train failure; and who will be expected to provide the rescue locomotive.

Mr. Freeman: Railtrack would have the lead responsibility for these matters, subject to the legislation currently before Parliament.

Rail Ticketing

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedures he proposes for ensuring inter-availability of tickets following a train failure, or major interruption or delay in a particular service or route after Railtrack's vesting day or the introduction of franchising over one or more routes.

Mr. Freeman: Arrangements for the inter-availability of tickets will be a matter for operators, subject to any requirements imposed by the regulator or franchising director.

Euston Station

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received from British Rail about additional train paths, junction layouts and platform capacity that may be available at Euston station for prospective franchisers to expand services operating from that terminus during peak travel times.

Mr. Freeman: I have received no such advice.

Rail Timetables

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to indemnify or exempt the franchising authority, or operators, from charges of collusive or anti-competitive behaviour when determining the national timetable and connecting services where there exist competing operators and demands for connections of services, train paths, track and related facilities.

Mr. Freeman: There will be no need to grant such indemnities. Railtrack will allocate access to the network and prepare the operating timetable, subject to the oversight of the rail regulator, who will be responsible for authorising access agreements. The regulator will have duties to promote competition and to protect the passenger's interests, and will have to take these into account when deciding whether to authorise access agreements. The Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 will not apply to the provision of railway services. The regulator will also have the power to refer matters related to the provision of licensed railway services to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to investigate whether they operate against the public interest.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date the M3-A303-A30 southern route to the west country between London and Exeter will be entirely dual carriageway.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We intend to provide dual carriageways to replace all the remaining single carriageway sections of this route. The timetable for completing this programme of improvements depends on satisfactory progress through the statutory procedures, including public inquiries where necessary, and the continuing availability of funds.

Dual Carriageways

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the stretches of road and the distances involved of the carriageway between Andover and Exeter along the A303-A30 which are not dual carriageway; and by what dates it is intended they will be developed to become dual carriageways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer my right hon. Friend to my answer to his earlier question today. The Department's schemes to replace the remaining single carriageway sections of the A303-A30 between Andover and Exeter are as follows:

Scheme	Next key stage
A303 Amesbury-Berwick Down	Public consultation, spring 1993
A303 Wylye-Stockton Wood	Public draft orders, late 1993
A303 Chicklade Bottom-Mere	Public consultation, spring 1993
A303 Sparkford-Ilchester	Publish draft orders, spring 1993
A303 Ilminister bypass dualling	Preferred route announcement, spring 1993
A303 Ilminister-Marsh	Publish draft orders, summer 1993
A303-A30 Marsh-Honiton	Re-publish draft orders, spring 1993, for public inquiry later in year
A30 Honiton-Exeter	Decision following public inquiry, autumn 1993

Railtrack

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which body shall be responsible for surveying any crash, or incident involving damage to track, locomotive or rolling stock, with a view to assisting in the apportioning of costs, charges or damages, following the vesting day of Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: Railtrack and train service operators.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what form of regulation or arbitration he proposes in order to deal with incident costs when the charges that have been identified and attributed to a company or operator are disputed, following the vesting day of Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: The form of regulation or arbitration to deal with disputes over the attribution of costs after an incident will be a matter for access agreements which will be subject to the approval of the rail regulator.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will impose minimum response times on those charged with clearing routes, track or train paths, as well as subsequent safety inspections, in the event of train failure, crash or derailment, following the vesting day of Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: This will be the responsibility of Railtrack, as it now is of British Rail. Any related contractual obligations would be covered in access agreements.

Rail Franchising

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the franchising authority will be required to prepare a national timetable, and to seek franchises in response to bids by public or commercial bodies to operate existing or suggested services or routes.

Mr. Freeman: Railtrack, as the track authority, will plan and produce a working timetable for the rail network and will be required to ensure that a national timetable is published. The Railways Bill places a duty on the franchising director to designate services—whether existing or new—as eligible for provision under franchise agreements. It further provides that public sector operators may not be franchisees.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to maintain rail services in the immediate period following a franchiser or operator arbitrarily or unilaterally vacating a train path or service due to breach of contract or company failure.

Mr. Freeman: The franchising director will be able to step in and provide for continuity of service through the terms of the franchise agreement and the special railway administration procedures as set out in the Railways Bill.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has received from British Rail of the increase in the total number of drivers that would be required by InterCity to have its own dedicated train crews following franchising or privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: We have received no such specific estimate from British Rail. Following franchising it will be for franchisees to determine total staffing requirements in the light of their obligations to provide the services specified in their franchise contracts, and comply with the terms of their licence and their validated railway safety case.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his approach to deciding the conflicting bids for train paths, track, platforms and related facilities between the InterCity executive type services and those of the passenger transport executives where currently InterCity services are given priority in their planning and allocation.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for British Rail.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that InterCity should maintain its existing rights to priority on train paths over those sections of track where it currently enjoys the status of lead business, following the vesting day of Railtrack and the introduction of franchising.

Mr. Freeman: Our intention is that the initial pattern of franchised services should be based on the services provided by BR immediately before franchising.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public access there will be to the land offered in exchange for land compulsorily purchased along the route of the east London river crossing under compulsory purchase orders 10 and 11, 19 November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We propose to plant 89 per cent. of the exchange land and protect it until the woodland becomes established. Access to these areas will be via the "Green Chain Walk" and an extensive system of subsidiary footpaths. The remaining areas of exchange land will be fully accessible for public use.

Road Freight

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the total tonnage miles of freight carried by railways in the United Kingdom in each of the last 15 years for which figures are available; and what were the comparable actual and percentage figures for road freight transport in each of those years.

Mr. Freeman: Comparative data for Great Britain can be found in table 9.3 of Transport Statistics Great Britain 1993, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Table 1.9 contains percentage figures for the years 1981-1991; comparable data for earlier years may be found in previous annual reports. Equivalent data for Northern ireland are not available.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the key factors in determining the currently used United Kingdom search and rescue helicopter response criteria as laid down by the helicopter coverage group.

Mr. Norris: I am replying as the Helicopter Coverage Group was established under the aegis of the Department of Transport.

The key factors affecting the need for SAR helicopter coverage were:

1. The usage by merchant shipping of UK waterways
2. The increase in ferry traffic around UK waters
3. Changing fishing patterns and the effects of EEC quota regulations on fishing vessels movements
4. The increasing popularity of maritime recreational pursuits

Bridges, London

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take responsibility for the co-ordination of works on the bridges of London between Hampton Court and the sea.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 29 January 1993]: I am currently considering whether any changes are necessary to the arrangements currently in place for managing the bridges concerned. I am not currently satisfied that any change would do other than add an additional layer of bureaucracy.

Air Traffic Controllers

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Civil Aviation Authority is taking to introduce emergency training for new air traffic controllers on their initial training courses and for ongoing emergency continuation training for experienced operational controllers as recommended by the air accidents investigation branch.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority's safety regulation group (SRG) intends to consult industry shortly on proposals for additional requirements for emergency training to be undertaken in all courses for trainee controllers, and as part of the continuation training for qualified operational controllers. In the meantime, National Air Traffic Services has already implemented additional emergency training which will meet these proposals.

ENVIRONMENT

Derelict Land Grant

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region the derelict land grant projects funded in each of the last three years and the amount of funding allocation.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available in the form requested. However, the following table shows, by region, the expenditure on land reclamation incurred by local authorities which has attracted derelict land grant over the last three years. About 95 per cent. of this expenditure was supported by grant at 100 per cent.

Homelessness

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people applying to councils in each standard region were (a) accepted and (b) not accepted as officially homeless under the provisions of the Housing Act 1985 in each of the last three years.

Mr Baldry: Full information for regions is available only from April 1991. Estimates for the first complete year are as follows:

Households, 1991-92

Region	Accepted as homeless	Not accepted as homeless
North	9,010	10,460
Yorkshire and Humberside	12,930	21,020
East Midlands	10,530	10,920
East Anglia	3,610	3,670
South East	58,090	61,740
South West	9,010	10,100
West Midlands	18,550	19,790
North West	23,100	20,170
England	144,830	157,870

Those households counted as not accepted as homeless represent the sum of those whose applications resulted in a section 64 decision being issued during the year and who were found not to be homeless, or in priority need but intentionally homeless, or not to be in a priority need category and were not accepted for rehousing.

In the quarter ended September 1992, local authorities accepted 35,520 households and 43,060 decisions of non-acceptance were issued.

Regional estimates of acceptances for earlier years are published but these do not take account of the change in definition from April 1991 when intentionally homeless people were no longer counted as accepted. Consistent information on non-acceptances is not available for earlier years.

Figures for acceptances (including intentionally homeless provided only with temporary accommodation) for each quarter appear in table 1 of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England, Results for . . . Quarter 19 . . ., Supplementary Tables" and from the third quarter of 1990 in table 1 of "Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England, Statistics for the . . . Quarter 19 . . .." Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

Hedgerows

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring forward Government legislation on hedgerows.

Mr. Maclean: The Government continue to support the Hedgerows Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth). It is too soon to anticipate that my hon. Friend's Bill will fail in this session.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any of the land offered in exchange for land along the route of the east London river crossing under compulsory purchase orders 10 and 11, 19 November 1991, is designated as (a) a site of special scientific interest or (b) as being of special character and metropolitan importance under the Greater London development plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: (a) None. (b) The land within the London borough of Bexley offered in exchange for public open space to be acquired for the east London river crossing is designated as an area of special character in the Bexley borough plan, adopted in February 1985, which implemented the policy aims set out in the Greater London development plan.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outcome of the consultation on the local government finance settlement for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1993 column 854]: Unfortunately, owing to a computing error, the notional amounts for Enfield, Gateshead, and Cleveland specified in the "Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (England) 1993-94", which was laid before the House on 28 January 1993, are incorrect. We are today laying before the House the "Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) (Amendment) Report (England) 1993-94" which specifies for these three authorities the correct notional amounts which are £199,624,000, £152,785,000 and £397,941,000 respectively. I shall arrange for copies of this report to be sent to all local authorities.

Forests

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from non-governmental organisations regarding the development of the United Kingdom's national plan on forests; and how he intends to involve non-governmental organisations in the process.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

I have received one letter on this subject, from Friends of the Earth.

The Forestry Commission will be co-ordinating the preparation of the national plan for the implementation of the forest principles agreed in Rio de Janeiro, and will seek the views of non-governmental organisations before it is completed.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Allason) of 21 January, Official Report, column 327, if he will indicate to which cases the public interest immunity certificates apply.

The Attorney-General: The information is as follows:

CPS	SFO	DPP(NI)

The cases referred to in the answer to the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Allason) are set out in the table. As explained in that answer, the information is provided from the recollection of officers since such information is not recorded centrally. There are two corrections to the original answer. R v. Coren and Greenwood was originally recorded erroneously as 1987. R v. Batley was counted twice and therefore the number recorded for the CPS in 1989 was two and not three.

EDUCATION

Special Learning Needs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the size of the GEST—grants for education support and training—allocation in 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and projected for 1993-94 together with the size of the allocation (a) nationally and (b) earmarked for the training of teachers of young people with special learning difficulties; in cash and real terms.

Mr. Forth: Expenditure in England supported by the grants for educational support and training (GEST) programme is given in the table. The GEST programme in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

	Cash £ million	Real terms[2] £ million

Examinations

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students have passed O-level, GSE/GCSE and A-level examinations in languages in each year since 1982; and if he will give a breakdown of the languages concerned.

Mr. Forth: The estimated numbers of school leavers who have passed O-level/CSE/GCSE and A-level examinations in selected modern foreign languages for each year since 1982 are shown in the following table.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils entered for GCSE examinations in British government and political studies, citizenship and/or community studies, in each year since 1990; and what proportion of the total school population of 15 and 16-year-olds they represented.

Mr. Forth: Information is not readily available for 1990 or 1991 but by the summer 1992, 589 pupils aged 16 attempted GCSEs in politics and 4,617 attempted GCSEs in community studies. These numbers represent 0·1 per cent. and 0·8 per cent. of pupils reaching the age of 16 in the academic year 1991-92.

Teachers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers have left the profession in each year since 1982.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the numbers of teachers who left full-time service in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in England and Wales in each year. They include retirements and teachers who transferred to other sectors (such as independent schools, special education or further education) or to part-time teaching. In addition, many of those who leave service each year return to teaching after a career break. Surveys of teacher resignations carried out by the Local Government Management Board show that fewer than 1 per cent. of teachers annually leave teaching to take up other employment.

School Meetings

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has about attendance levels at school annual general meetings, costs of calling them and the numbers that are inquorate.

Mr. Forth: All parents of pupils registered at a school are eligible to attend the annual parents' meeting. Information as to the numbers of parents attending annual parents' meetings and the costs of calling them is not collected by the Department. It would appear that in general, parental attendance is disappointing, although there are instances of very successful meetings.

Nursery Education

48. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education by what date he will publish the January 1992 figures for the proportion of three and four-year-olds in nursery education in each local authority.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 21 January, Official Report, column 353.

City Technology Colleges

49. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which companies at present sponsor city technology colleges; and how many governorships those companies hold.

Mr. Forth: The following private sector sponsors have committed sums of £0·2 million or more to individual city technology colleges or to the development of the programme:

ADT Group plc

The major sponsors of each college form a trust which has strategic control of the management of the college. The trustees are responsible for electing a governing body, whose members will normally include representatives of sponsors, but no central record is held of the current composition of each governing body.

School Reorganisation

77. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local authority school reorganisation proposals are awaiting a decision from his Department; and how many have been awaiting a decision for more than (a) one month, (b) three months, (c) six months and (d) one year.

Mr. Forth: At 28 January, 104 proposals published under section 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 were awaiting a decision. Of these, 101 have been awaiting a decision for more than one month, 72 for more than three months, 31 for more than six months and six for more than one year.

Proposals outstanding for less than four months may in certain cases fall to the local authority for determination.

Schools (Performance)

78. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those schools which have recently been sent a letter from OFSTED about their poor performance; and when each of those schools last had a full HMI inspection.

Mr. Forth: This is not a matter for my right hon. Friend. HMI have not inspected all schools on a regular basis, and OFSTED believe it would be invidious to publish the names of those which, on the basis of inspection evidence, give them cause for concern. The new inspection arrangements being established under the Schools Act will ensure that all schools are regularly inspected, and those at risk of failing their pupils are identified in a published report.

Grant-maintained Status

79. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications from schools for grant-maintained status are awaiting a decision from his Department and how many have been awaiting a decision for more than (a) one month, (b) three months, (c) six months and (d) one year.

Mr. Forth: At 29 January, 150 applications for grant-maintained status were awaiting a decision by the Secretary of State. Of these, 132 have been awaiting a decision for more than one month, 21 for more than three months, six for more than six months and none for more than one year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the size of the earnings disregards for claimants of income support in each year since 1988; and if he will express the value of the earnings disregard against changes (a) in prices and (b) in earnings over the period.

Mr. Burt: New, increased, earnings disregards were brought in with the introduction of income support in April 1988. The standard disregard is £5 and a higher, £15, disregard applies to certain groups of people—lone parents, long-term sick and disabled people, members of a couple who are both aged under 60 and have been in receipt of income support for two years and, from April 1993, carers.

The table shows what the earnings disregards would have been if they had risen in line with changes in earnings and prices each year.

	Value of disregards against changes in:
	Earnings		Prices
1988	5·00	15·00	5·00	15·00
1989	5·00	16·45	5·40	16·20
1990	6·00	18·00	5·90	17·75

	Value of disregards against changes in: Earnings		Prices
	£	£	£	£
1991	6·50	19·55	6·30	18·85
1992	6·90	20·75	6·55	19·65

Source: The abstract of statistics general index of retail prices (all items) and average gross earnings new series index (whole economy) seasonally unadjusted.
Note: Figures rounded to nearest 5p.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many claimants of income support have taken advantage of earnings disregards to supplement their income in each year since 1988.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table.

Cases where claimant has earnings	121,000	130,000	124,000	117,000
Cases where partner has earnings	34,000	32,000	31,000	48,000

Source: Income support annual statistical enquries May 1988 to May 1991.
Note: All figures rounded to nearest thousand.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the operation or level of the earnings disregard for claimants of income support.

Mr. Burt: The earnings disregards are kept under review. From April 1993, carers will be entitled to the higher £15, disregard. We have no other plans at present to change the operations or level of the earnings disregards.

Sickness and Maternity Benefits

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he will take to ensure that all employees are paid their full entitlement to sickness and maternity benefits by their employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Employers already receive comprehensive guidance and advice on how to operate the statutory sick pay (SSP) and statutory maternity pay (SMP) schemes through the medium of guides, manuals, free telephone enquiry service and training seminars. A quick guide to enable employers to deal with most cases under the schemes is revised and issued to all known employers annually and an updated version of the employer's manual to SSP will be issued to employers next month.

Explanatory leaflets and a free telephone service are also available to inform employees of their rights. Disagreements between employer and employee can be resolved by an independent adjudication officer at the local social security office.

As part of the Contributions Agency's 1992-93 target of 114,000 survey visits to employers to check their compliance with the legislation, the agency has introduced measures aimed at improving employers' performance in administering the schemes including a programme of 17,000 educational visits. The agency is also planning a random survey of employers to obtain a more representative view of employers' performance to identify and resolve areas of particular difficulty.

Water Charges

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to the introduction of a rebate scheme for water charges payable by lower income households; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: None. Water should be treated in a similar way to other items of expenditure in the family budget.

Households Below Average Income

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the data from which figures 1 and 2 in "Households Below Average Income, 1979 to 1988-89" were constructed.

Mr. Burt: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on the basis of the assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", what he estimates (a) the upper earnings limit and (b) the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions will be, as a percentage of average earnings in (i) 2015, (ii) 2025, (iii) 2035 and (iv) 2045.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is given in the table.

	Earnings limit
		Percentage
	Lower	Upper
2015-16	12·2	91·4
2025-26	10·5	78·6
2035-36	9·1	67·9
2045-46	7·8	58·5

Assumes real earnings growth of 1·5 per cent. per annum.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the direct costs savings which would arise from equalising the pension age at 65 years for men and women during each year of the phasing-in period, assuming that the new age is phased in beginning in (a) 2003 and (b) 2010; and that phasing-in takes place at a rate of (i) one year in one, (ii) one year in two, (iii) one year in three, and (iv) one year in four.

Miss Widdecombe: The savings' which would accrue from equalising the state pension age for women and men at age 65 assuming that the phasing begins in 2010 at the rate of one year in three (option (b) (iii)) are given in the table. Other information is not available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Amounts are given rounded to the nearest £100 million and, in common with those given in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", at 1991-2 prices.

	Amount saved in each year
Year	£ million
2010	3—
2011	3—
2013	600

Year	£ million
2014	600
2015	1,100
2016	1,200
2017	1,300
2018	1,800
2019	2,000
2020	2,100
2021	2,700
2022	2,800
2023	2,900
2025	3,500

[2] Savings less than £100 million.

Notes:

Assumes real earnings growth of 1·5 per cent.

Including effects on other social security benefits, income tax, national insurance contributions and the labour market.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on the basis of assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age," if he will publish figures estimating the value of (a) basic retirement pension, (b) the average SERPs addition for men and (c) the average SERPs addition for women expressed as a percentage of average earnings in (a) 2015, (b) 2025, (c) 2035 and (d) 2045.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is given in the table.

Percentage

	2015-16	2025-26	2035-36	2045-46
Basic pension	12·2	10·5	9·1	7·8
Average additional pension (women)	13·8	12·7	12·7	11·8
Average additional pension (men)	20·3	16·9	14·4	12·9

Notes: The additional pension percentages are based on the amount of SERPS payable in each respective year to an individual whom had average earnings in every year of his or her working life. They are not based on average AP awards to new pensioners as these cannot be estimated.

Assumes real earnings growth of 1·5 per cent. per annum.

WALES

Homelessness

8. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to tackle homelessness in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Several. Most recently my right hon. Friend announced an extra £35,000,000 for Housing for Wales to provide additional homes for those in housing need.

Cardiff Royal Infirmary

9. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had concerning the closure of the Cardiff royal infirmary proposed by the South Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Three.

Discretionary Awards (Education)

10. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount spent in each of the following years by Welsh local education authorities on discretionary awards (a) in 1991-92 and (b) in 1992-93; and what is the number of students in receipt of awards in each year in each authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: About 11,500 students received discretionary awards from local education authorities in Wales in academic year 1990-91. This is the latest year for which this information is available. Details of local authorities' expenditure on discretionary awards is not held centrally.

Local Government Finance

11. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from county councils on local authority funding levels for 1993-94 and in his capping criteria announced on 14 December 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: Six.

19. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from local authorities regarding the 1993-94 settlement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from six counties and 10 district and community councils.

14. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the level of funding provided by central Government for local government at the county and district levels.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from six county councils plus 10 from district and community councils and more than 600 other representations.

Enterprise Allowance

12. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated by his Department to promote the enterprise allowance within Wales in each year since 1987-88.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The enterprise allowance scheme is administered by the TECs who are free to adapt it to local circumstances and who, in recent years, have introduced greater selectivity to ensure that assistance is targeted at those businesses with the most promising plans and prospects. We have made £5·3 million available for this purpose in 1992-93.

With permission, figures for earlier years will be circulated in the Official Report: they total some £53·4 million.

The figures for earlier years are as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	12·0
1988-89	12·9
1989-90	12·4
1991-92	7·1

Vineyards

13. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grants are available for the planting of new vineyards in Wales; and if he will make a statement on Government policy regarding existing vineyards.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. We are approaching the point where, under the terms of EC policy, planting for new vines will not be possible. That being so, there is no justification for the provision of Government assistance for new vineyards.

Cardiac Services (Report)

15. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now publish the Touche Ross report into cardiac services in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend will announce the findings of the Touche Ross appraisal as soon as he has had an opportunity to consider the conclusions of the final report.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

16. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the subject of the proposed reduction in hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from Welsh MPs, the Welsh farming organisations and individual farmers in respect of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in Wales.

Labour Statistics

17. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were unemployed in (a) Ogmore, (b) Mid Glamorgan and (c) Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: The unadjusted figures for Ogmore, Mid Glamorgan and Wales in December 1992 are 3,647, 27,374 and 134,929 respectively.

21. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently unemployed in Wales and in Clywd.

Mr. David Hunt: The unadjusted figures for Wales and Clwyd in December 1992 are 134,929 and 16,848 respectively.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the figure for male unemployment in Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: The seasonally adjusted male unemployment figure for Wales was 105,700 in December 1992.

Quangos

18. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy for appointments to quangos in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I seek those who are best suited to each post.

Bottled Water

20. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote the sale of Welsh bottled water.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh bottled water industry, like other industries, is able to take advantage of a number of schemes of assistance available from the Welsh Office, Welsh Development Agency and Development Board for Rural Wales. Advice and information on the marketing of food and drink products in Wales is also available from Welsh Food Promotion Ltd.

Welsh Language Bill

22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes making to the Welsh Language Bill to meet criticisms made of it.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's Welsh Language Bill represents a significant advance for the Welsh language and for the people who speak it. The Government have already signified their intention to bring forward amendments to the Bill concerning the use of Welsh in the courts and in statutory titles. We will consider very carefully any other suggestions aimed at improving the Bill which are put to us during its detailed scrutiny by Parliament.

Young Offenders (South Wales)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will use his influence to help secure the speedy construction of a secure unit for young offenders in south Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am satisfied that the proposals for a new all-Wales secure unit are being taken forward energetically under the direction of the joint Welsh Office/local authority working party.

Oak Woods

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is being undertaken by his Department to protect Welsh oak woods from grazing sheep.

Mr. David Hunt: Good management of all woodlands, which includes protection from grazing animals, is encouraged by grants available under the woodland grant scheme, which also offers grants for the establishment of new woodlands, including oak woods. The Forestry Commission and ADAS give advice to farmers on the management of their woods, and specific grants for protecting farm woodlands from livestock are also available under the farm and conservation grant scheme. Further support for the protection of woodlands in Wales is provided by Coed Cymru, a Government backed initiative to encourage landowners, particularly farmers, to improve the management of existing broadleaved woodlands, particularly ancient and semi-natural oak woods.

School Governors (Ring-binders)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the date on which contracts for the supply of ring-binders for school governors under the local management of schools scheme were put out to tender; if the tender was advertised in open competition or via a closed list; how many firms made bids; and if the winning bid was the lowest tender.

Mr. David Hunt: Tenders were invited from selected companies on 6 April 1989 and 17 August 1989. Four companies submitted bids for the first of these contracts and three companies submitted bids for the second contract. In each case the company submitting the lowest tender by the specified date was awarded the contract.

Schools

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those opted-out schools in Wales which have made an application to him for capital expenditure; which applications have been approved; and what were the sums approved in each case.

Mr. David Hunt: Bids were received from the three schools in the grant-maintained sector last year. I was pleased to approve the following projects:

Brynmawr
Refurbishment of ground floor toilet facilities	26,975
Canteen	55,575
Refurbishment of first floor toilet facilities	26,975
Bishop Vaughan
Improvements to gymnasium	98,000
Perimeter fencing	61,000
Creation of graphics/computer classroom	105,000
Cwmcarn
Refurbishment of two-storey block—work to curtain walling	67,000
Refurbishment of single-storey block—work to windows and doors	53,000
Remodel front entrance and entrance lobby	10,000
Remodel and refit school kitchen	25,000

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provisions he has made for 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 for (a) capital and (b) revenue expenditure on opted-out schools.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Capital grant	509,000	6,000,000
Annual maintenance grant	4,286,742	—[3]
Other revenue expenditure[1]	310,000	2,125,000

No decisions have been taken for future years.

[1] Other revenue expenditure includes transitional grant, special purpose grants, grant made to the grant-maintained schools centre, and payments to the Electoral reform Society for arranging the parental ballots.

[2] The 1993-94 details are set in Estimates which are subject to parliamentary approval.

[3] Annual maintenance grant reflects the sum the local education authority would have spent on the school if it had continued to control it. Decisions on future levels of support cannot therefore, be taken until LEAs have resolved their budgets.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Jamaica

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Jamaican Government over their planned resumption of the death penalty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Jamaican Appeal Court is still in the process of reviewing the cases of those on death row into capital and non-capital categories. Those found guilty of capital offences can appeal to a panel of Appeal Court judges. It would therefore not be appropriate for Her Majesty's Government to make representations to the Jamaican Government.

Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the peaceful re-unification of Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Our support for efforts to achieve a peaceful solution on the Korean peninsula is undiminished. We were generally encouraged by the talks between South and North Korea which took place during 1992, though much remains to be done. We hope that dialogue will resume before long.

We also hope that bilateral nuclear inspections will get under way soon. Together with continued International Atomic Energy inspections in North Korea, these are an important confidence-building measure.

Angola

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to secure the release of a British citizen held by rebel forces in Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have raised the case of the three British citizens held by UNITA in Angola with UNITA representatives in London on 22 and 28 January, and with the UNITA delegation attending the UNITA/Government talks in Addis Ababa. Our embassy in Luanda is working closely with FINA Oil and Weatherford Services, the men's employers, in order to obtain their release.

Indian Subcontinent (Visas)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for officials at the posts in Pakistan, India and Bangladesh to make brief visits to the regional centres of those countries to assist people intending to apply for visas to visit the United Kingdom; if he will discuss with those countries' high commissioners in the United Kingdom how such facilities could be provided throughout the Indian subcontinent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. Information and assistance is already available at our four posts in India, two in Pakistan and one in Bangladesh. Any person intending to visit the United Kingdom can visit, telephone or write to these posts for assistance.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what functions in connection with the royal family are covered by expenditure for the marshall of the diplomatic corps.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The duties of the marshall of the diplomatic corps are of an official nature. He makes all necessary arrangements for heads of diplomatic missions on state and official occasions, and for their duties in connection with the Queen as Head of State. There is no expenditure in connection with other members of the royal family.

European Community (United Kingdom Presidency)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the outcome of the issues which arose during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Yes. I have placed in the Library a document produced by the Cabinet Office which gives details of the achievements of the United Kingdom presidency of the Community, from July to December 1992.

Kenya

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the assessment of the treatment of the rights of opposition candidates in the recent elections in Kenya will be taken into account in future decisions of the granting of aid to Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 25 January at column 594. Grievances arising out of the electoral process are now a matter for the Kenyan courts, and we hope these will be swiftly addressed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the incidence for each year since 1986 of detected re-offending by terrorists who have already served (a) one to five years, (b) five to 10 years, (c) 10 years and (d) life sentences.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Since 1986 there have been four cases, two in 1990 and two in 1992, where individuals sentenced to life imprisonment for terrorist related offences and released on licence have been recalled to prison after re-offending. In all these cases the new offences were not related to organised terrorism.

The rest of the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

"The Committee"

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further information he has concerning the allegations about RUC involvement in terrorist activity contained in the Channel 4 documentary entitled "The Committee" broadcast in October 1991 to which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage referred on 17 December, Official Report, column 578; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am advised that police investigations in relation to matters arising from the programme are continuing. No evidence has emerged to support the programme's claims.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the absentee rate through sickness, injury and other causes relating to prison officers in (a) Crumlin Road prison, (b) Maze prison, (c) Maghaberry prison and (d) Magilligan prison during each of the last three years.

Mr. Mates: The information is as follows:

Number of days lost through sick leave

Prison	Year
	1990	1991	1992
Belfast
Injuries	2,876	5,542	5,752
Other sick leave	20,641	17,221	19,764
TOTAL	23,517	22,673	25,516
Maze
Injuries	1,438	336	637
Other sick leave	27,174	23,698	20,448
TOTAL	28,612	24,034	21,085
Maghaberry
Injuries	575	573	722
Other sick leave	10,158	12,500	13,754
TOTAL	10,733	13,037	14,476
Magilligan
Injuries	288	403	329
Other sick leave	8,655	7,871	10,357
TOTAL	8,943	8,274	10,686

Crumlin Road Prison

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what type of violent incidents have occurred (a) between prisoners and (b) between prisoners and prison officers in Crumlin Road prison during each of the last three years; how many prisoners and prison officers have been involved; and what injuries have been sustained in each case.

Mr. Mates: Details of violent incidents in Her Majesty's prison Belfast during the last three years are as follows:

Incidents between prisoners	28	71	65
Number of prisoners involved	96	179	148
Incidents in which prisoners directly attacked prison officers	12	17	29
Number of prisoners involved	11	72	42

The violence usually takes the form of fisticuffs or the throwing of hot liquid.

Details of the number of officers involved in these incidents are not recorded but the following numbers of officers were injured as a result of prisoner-initiated violence:

	Number
1990	100

Most injuries were sustained when officers intervened in fights between prisoners.

Details of injuries sustained by prisoners and officers in each case are not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, apart from the bomb explosion on 24 November 1991, as a result of which two prisoners died, the most serious injury sustained by a prisoner was a broken leg. In most cases any injuries sustained were minor cuts and/or bruises. Injuries sustained by officers included serious scalding and fractures of the wrist and jaw.

DEFENCE

International Defence Exhibition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department plans to make to the IDEX 93 international defence exhibition to be held in Abu Dhabi in February.

Mr. Aitken: The Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) has been working with the Department of Trade and Industry, the Defence Manufacturers Association and the exhibition organisers to co-ordinate and encourage participation by United Kingdom industry in IDEX '93. The DESO will be represented at the exhibition. In addition, a Royal Navy warship and a Lynx helicopter from the Armilla patrol will be visiting Abu Dhabi during the exhibition and, subject to their operational commitments, will participate in its naval element. I hope to visit IDEX 93 myself.

Defence Equipment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the operation of the code of conduct governing transatlantic trade in defence equipment between NATO partner states.

Mr. Aitken: I refer to the answer given to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 26 January at column 645.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of biological weapons research still undertaken in Russia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following Russia's admission last year that it had possessed an offensive biological weapons programme, the United Kingdom, the United States and Russia are now engaged in a trilateral process to ensure it has ended. It would be premature to make an assessment before that process is complete.

Trident

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cost/benefit analysis he has made of the Trident missile programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hamilton: The Government carefully examined a range of possible options when they considered a successor to Polaris to meet the United Kingdom's continuing requirement for a minimum strategic nuclear deterrent. Its analyses and conclusions were set out in the Defence open Government documents 80/23, 82/1 and 87/01, copies of which are in the Library of the House. As reported by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 21 January 1993 at column 419, the United Kingdom Trident programme continues on time and within budget to enter service in the mid-1990s.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships have been chartered by his Department to ferry supplies to the Falklands over the last 10 years; if he will list the period of their charter, the flags under which they operate and their ultimate ownership.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence ferries dry cargoes to the Falkland Islands using a liner service. This service is maintained by a contractor who is currently required to provide a scheduled shipping service departing the United Kingdom every 28 days. The vessels are chartered by the contractor and the Ministry of Defence is given priority in the allocation of cargo space on the scheduled voyages. In addition 10 tankers have been chartered by the Ministry of Defence over the last 10 years for periods ranging from two months to the current tanker which has been on charter since October 1987. The tankers have mostly delivered fuel to the Falklands as part of a schedule that includes Ascension Island and Cyprus. Records are not complete back to 1982 but the flags have included Bermuda, Denmark, Norway, Singapore and United Kingdom. The present vessel is on the Isle of Man register. The ultimate owner of these vessels is not generally known to my Department as the charter is with the operator who is, in most cases, not the owner.

Gulf War

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships were chartered for the Gulf conflict; and how many were under the British flag.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 162 vessels were chartered in support of the move of men and equipment to and from the Gulf, of which five were British flagged. A number of vessels undertook more than one voyage.

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vehicle breakdowns of specialist vehicles designed for the movement of nuclear warheads, bombs and other arms, whether loaded or unloaded, occurred in the counties of Durham, Tyne and Wear and Northumberland in 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1992 there was one instance where a mechanical problem with a vehicle designed for the transportation of nuclear weapons caused a military convoy to make an unscheduled stop while travelling in the specified area. After inspection of the vehicle, the full convoy was able to continue its journey.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the vehicle reliability performance of (a) Mammoth Major nuclear arms material transit vehicles and (b) Foden nuclear arms material transit vehicles in 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Truck Cargo Heavy Duty (TCHD) Mk 1 vehicle (Mammoth Major) has been replaced by the TCHD Mk 2. Despite some minor teething problems, the new vehicles represent a significant improvement in mechanical reliability over the Mk 1 vehicles. Both old and new vehicles provided a safe and secure means of nuclear warhead transport in 1992.

Rail Travel Warrants

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many railway journeys were made by service personnel using travel warrants in the latest available year; what was the total cost of that travel; and what were the normal BR fares charged for journeys over an equivalent aggregate distance.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In financial year 1991-92 the latest year for which figures are available, 703,000 warrants were issued to service personnel. Information on the number of journeys is not available as a warrant can cover a single, return or season ticket. The total cost of this travel was £32,038,000 after discounts had been applied. Details of normal British Rail (BR) fares charged for journeys over an equivalent aggregate distance are not known. All service warrants for the year in question were charged at the normal BR fares however, to which an agreed percentage discount was applied. Season tickets were exempt from this arrangement.

Job Losses

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of jobs lost since 1990 and planned to go by 1996-97 at Ministry of Defence establishments (a) in Dyfed and (b) in Wales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 27 January at column 754-55.

Immersion Temperatures (Survival)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the length of time a person can be immersed in water at (a) 8 deg C, (b) 9 deg C, (c) 10 deg C, (d) 11 deg C, (e) 12 deg C, (f) 14 deg C, (g) 15 deg C and (h) 16 deg C before standing at least a 50 per cent. chance of becoming unconscious; and how rapidly their chances of survival in percentage terms decrease at each of those temperatures.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the 1986 report of the United Kingdom civil rescue helicopter coverage working group, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions, in which years and at what cost the royal yacht Britannia has been refitted since her launch.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following is the information:

Costs of repairing and refitting HMY Britannia in Her Majesty's dockyards

Dates of refits	Financial year	£000 at outturn prices
September 1954 to December 1954	1954-55	68
October 1955 to March 1956	1955-56	100
September 1957 to January 1958	1957-58	184
November 1960 to March 1961	1960-61	218
March 1962 to January 1963	1962-63	72
December 1964 to April 1965	1964-65	333
August 1967 to November 1967	1967-68	258
August 1969 to December 1969	1969-70	481
October 1972 to July 1973	1972-73 1973-74	1,213
January 1976 to April 1976	1975-76	1,286
September 1979 to April 1980	1979-80	[1]4,990
September 1983 to March 1984	1983-84	[1]6,000
January 1987 to October 1987	1986-87 1987-88	[1]17,000
November 1991 to May 1992	1991-92 1992-93	[1]7,000

[1] Best estimates. More detailed figures can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the refit on the royal yacht Britannia in 1992 was spent on (a) superstructure, (b) engines, (c) royal apartments and (d) other.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The work carried out during Britannia's refit in 1992 can be broken down as follows:

	per cent.
Structure	24
Engines	34
Royal apartments	6
Other	36

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions, on what dates and where the royal yacht Britannia has been used as a hospital ship.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Circumstances have not required Her Majesty's Yacht Britannia to fulfil the wartime role of hospital ship. In view of her age, and the availability of other more suitable vessels, it has been decided that there is no longer a requirement for Britannia to retain this role.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of the refit on the royal yacht Britannia begun in 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Approximately £17 million.

Gulf War Chartering (Fraud)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to investigate alleged fraud in the chartering of vessels for the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence police have carried out an investigation into alleged fraudulent activity and as a result papers were passed to the crown prosecution service on 6 November 1992. The Ministry of Defence police investigations continue into certain aspects, and further comment would not be appropriate at this time.

SCOTLAND

Craftsmen

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to align the support given to craftsmen and women in Scotland with that in England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: I plan to introduce support measures to meet the special needs of individual craft makers in addition to the marketing support already provided to the crafts sector in general by Made in Scotland Ltd, set up in 1991. Following discussions with the Secretary of State for National Heritage I am arranging to make available for this purpose, through his Department, £300,000 in 1993-94. The money will be paid to the Crafts Council and the Scottish Arts Council. Through the existing mechanisms and expertise of the Crafts Council and the local resources and knowledge of the Scottish Arts Council support for individual craft makers will include: funding to equip themselves and set themselves up as small businesses; funding for training; publicity and exhibition facilities for their products on a United Kingdom basis. The details of these new arrangements, including their start date, will be publicised in due course.

Radon

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total number of houses in each regional and island authority area which may exceed (a) a radon level of 200 Bq/M3 and (b) 20 Bq/M3; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: I cannot give such an estimate. Information on radon in Scotland is contained in a report by the National Radiological Protection Board, "Radon in Dwellings in Scotland" published on 20 November 1991. Copies are available in the House Library. A further report by the board is to be published this year.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy for ensuring that disabled employees, clients and members of the public have access to all parts of (a) new-build and (b) existing buildings for which he is responsible.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The policy is to ensure the easiest possible access for disabled people to Scottish Office buildings by providing ramps, wide access doors, internal lifts, toilets for the disabled, etc. The design of some buildings, particularly older buildings and smaller local offices, makes access difficult for those with disabilities but every effort is made to minimise these difficulties.

The proposed major new office building for the Scottish Office will be designed to meet the highest standards of provision for disabled staff and visitors.

House of Commons

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) of 16 December 1992, Official Report, column 415, if he will make a statement on his proposals to enhance the position of Scotland within the House of Commons.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The Government are currently taking stock of constitutional issues affecting Scotland including the handling of Scottish business in the House. The outcome will be reported to the House.

MV Braer

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans have been drawn up for compensation payments in the event of delay in the slaughter of fatstock due to contamination by toxic residues arising from the MV Braer oil spillage.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The Government have made available assistance to producers who are suffering economic hardship through a bridging fund, which will be operated for the Government by Shetland Islands council. Details of the fund's operation were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in answer to a question from the hon. Member from Aberdeen, South (Mr. Robertson) on 21 January.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Minister for Overseas Development's recent visit to Kenya and the subjects that were discussed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development intends to visit Kenya between 5 and 8 February in conjunction with a visit to Somalia. She hopes to meet the President and other Kenyan leaders for discussions on a range of issues.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 11 November 1992, Official Report, column 808, if he will estimate the number of forest dwellers that are dependent directly upon the trade in tropical timber; and if he will outline the benefits derived by the forest peoples from such trade.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 17 December, Official Report, column 467.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will give details of the proposals put forward (a) directly by the Government and (b) through the European Community during the British presidency concerning reform of the international tropical timber agreement;

(2) what mechanisms have been established by his Department to monitor the performance of the International Tropical Timber Organisation in attaining its target of sustainable management of tropical timber by 2000.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 15 December 1992, Official Report, column 127.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 December to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike), Official Report, column 302, what total amount in United States dollars has been committed as the United Kingdom's full share of the interim multilateral fund to assist developing nations to phase out chlorofluorocarbons; and over what time scale he envisages this full share being achieved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total amount committed as the United Kingdom's full share of the interim multilateral fund (known as the multilateral fund since 1 January 1993) is US $13,826,548. This will be drawn down against a disbursement profile proposed by the fund managers up to the financial year 1995-96.

Guinea Bissau

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many aid programmes are being undertaken in Guinea Bissau; and what is their nature.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We assist Guinea Bissau mainly through our contributions to the aid programmes of multilateral development institutions. For example, the European Community has an indicative aid programme of 42 mecu (about £32 million) for Guinea Bissau for 1990-95: our share amounts to over 16 per cent. We also support the work of United Kingdom NGOs in Guinea Bissau and make available modest funds through the non-resident British ambassador for gifts with a developmental or welfare purpose.

Aid (Contracts)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to link the overseas aid budget more directly with contracts of various kinds with British companies in addition to the existing criteria for aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Around 70 per cent. of our bilateral aid commitments (£934 million in 1991) are tied to British goods and services. In addition we estimate that for every £1 we commit to multilateral agencies (£918 million in 1991) an average of £1·40 is spent on British goods and services. We have no plans to tie a greater proportion of our bilateral aid.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if tobacco curing operations carried out in relation to Commonwealth Development Corporation-supported investments in the Rusitu region of Zimbabwe have used charcoal produced locally from natural and semi-natural forests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 January 1993]: Decisions relating to the appraisal, implementation and monitoring of individual investments are the responsibility of the board of the CDC. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member on the specific question he has asked and will arrange for copies of his letter to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what activities are supported by the Commonwealth Development Corporation in the Rusitu region of Zimbabwe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 January 1993]: In the Rusitu region the Commonwealth Development Corporation has investments in enterprises producing milk, beef, coffee, tea, macadamia nuts and arable crops (primarily maize). The Commonwealth Development Corporation has also supported smalholder tea and dairy farming in the region.

International Development and Co-operation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy initiatives he is planning to undertake in the next six months to promote international development and co-operation; what meetings he is planning to attend; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 January 1993]: We shall continue our efforts to promote international co-operation and sustainable economic and social development, and to reduce poverty. With our European Community colleagues we shall undertake further work on improving the co-ordination of European Community development policy, as agreed at last November's Development Council.

We are working for effective follow-up to the United Nations conference on the environment and development last June, including the first meeting of the Sustainable Development Commission this summer. We shall continue to press for a satisfactory conclusion to the GATT Uruguay round. We shall also work for resolution of conflicts and the relief of suffering, particularly in Somalia and the former republics of Yugoslavia.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development plan to attend meetings with European Community, G7 and developing country partners, including the economic summit in Tokyo.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policies the Commonwealth Development Corporation has regarding minimum standards for the conditions of workers employed as a result of investment it supports.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 28 January 1993]: It is the Commonwealth Development Corporation's policy to make investments only when it is satisfied that employment policies are in accordance with good local practice. While the Commonwealth Development Corporation remains an investor it uses its influence to ensure that such good employment practices are maintained.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on aid to Sierra Leone.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced in Abuja (Nigeria) on 5 January 1993 that in response to the summary execution of at least 26 alleged coup-plotters on 29-30 December we would suspend all new aid to Sierra Leone, withdraw our existing offer of £4 million in balance of payments support and consider what further measures might be taken, for example, on the future of existing projects.

Our emergency relief aid, to help those displaced in the region as a result of the Liberian and Sierra Leonean crises, will continue.

Mahogany

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from members of the British timber trade regarding the circumstances of mahogany production in the Amazon rain forests of Brazil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 January 1993]: We have received information from the Timber Trade Federation (TTF) and M&N Norman Timber Ltd. about claims that British imports of Brazilian mahogany comes from illegal logging in indigenous peoples' lands. A TTF representative is visiting Brazil from 1 to 6 February to hold discussions with relevant Brazilian authorities to seek assurances that imported timber is not obtained illegally or in a manner which infringes indigenous peoples' rights.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Savoury Snack Food

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has now concluded its review of VAT on savoury snack food; and what is the result of its inquiry.

Sir John Cope: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is still consulting the trade but expects to complete its review by the end of February.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the basis upon which market testing is currently taking place in relation to the secretarial services provided to the Inland Revenue in the South Western area, including Southampton.

Mr. Dorrell: As part of the programme that we have agreed, the Inland Revenue is market testing typing and secretarial services in its South Western region. In doing so, it will compare the service provided by its own staff with tenders to be sought from external providers on the basis of the best combination of quality and price. Southampton does not fall within the Inland Revenue's South West regional area.

Pension Funds

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the tax yield from taxes imposed on surpluses in pension funds in excess of 105 per cent. of their liability in each year since the tax was introduced;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for the latest year the numbers of pension schemes proposing a contribution holiday to reduce a pension fund surplus in accordance with the Finance Act 1986;

(3) what information he has concerning the extent of occupational pension scheme contribution holidays being taken by employers or employees.

Mr. Dorrell: Statutory rules for dealing with actuarial surpluses in occupational pension schemes were introduced in the Finance Act 1986 and took effect from 6 April 1987.

Estimates of tax deducted from payments of surplus funds to employers for 1987-88 to 1991-92 are shown in table 6·9 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1992". The provisional estimate for 1992-93 is £135 million.

Available information on occupational scheme contribution holidays is shown in table 6·8 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1992".

Mr. J. Oliver

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects a reply to be sent to the letter sent by the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed to the Financial Secretary on 27 October 1992, about Mr. J. Oliver of Alnmouth, Northumberland.

Mr. Dorrell: I replied on Thursday 28 January.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take in 1993 to fulfil the requirements of the Maastricht treaty in respect of moving to stage 2 of economic and monetary union.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 22 January 1993]: The requirements for action by member states before stage 2 begins are set out in article 109e(2)(a) of the Maastricht treaty and the Government will meet the requirements, as qualified by the provisions of the United Kingdom protocol to the treaty.

Article 109e(2)(a) obliges member states to abolish restrictions on capital movements, to cease borrowing from central banks, to end the privileged access of public bodies to financial institutions and, if necessary, to adopt multiannual convergence programmes for assessment by the Council. Since the United Kingdom Government have no restrictions on capital movements, fund their borrowing each year by sales of debt to the private sector, have no privileged access to financial institutions, and regularly adopt a multiannual economic programme in the medium term financial strategy, this will not involve significant changes to current policies or monetary arrangements. But it may be necessary to make some technical changes to the methods of issuing Government debt instruments.

Transport Infrastructure Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his consultations with the chairman of the European investment bank regarding the balance between public and private sector investment expenditure on transport infrastructure.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 January 1993]: I have not had any such consultations.

Queen (Tax)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to complete the arrangements for Her Majesty the Queen to pay tax by the start of the next financial year.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 29 January 1993]: I refer the right hon. Member to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today at column 47.

PRIME MINISTER

Maastricht (Social Chapter)

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the amendments and additions to the social chapter of the treaty of Rome proposed by the social chapter of the treaty of Maastricht to which Her Majesty's Government do not assent.

The Prime Minister: The social chapter of the treaty of Rome will remain entirely unchanged after ratification of the treaty on European union. At Maastricht I made it clear to our Community partners that I was not prepared to accept treaty changes to the social chapter which would have increased industry's costs and jeopardised the jobs of British employees.

On this basis the United Kingdom will continue to play a full part in sensible Community action on social affairs and to resist measures which would prove damaging to British industry.

India

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Prime Minister what representations were made to him during his visit to India about the proposals of his Government to remove the right of appeal from visitors refused leave to visit the United Kingdom from India.

The Prime Minister: The Indian Prime Minister and I discussed our proposals and I was able to explain to him the reasons for our proposals.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will name the industrialists who accompanied him on his visit to India and the companies they represent.

The Prime Minister: The names are as follows:
Sir Brian Shaw, ANZ Grindlays Bank plc.
Mr. Roger Mabey, Bovis International Ltd.
Mr. Richard Evans, British Aerospace plc.
Mr. Norman Davis, British American Tobacco Co. Ltd.
Mr. Robert Evans, British Gas plc.
Mr. Norman Hawkins, Cadbury Schweppes plc.
Mr. Patrick MacDougall, Chartered West LB Ltd.
Mr. G. Douglas Gadd, GEC Alsthom Ltd.
Mr. Richard Reynolds, GPT Ltd.
Mr. Brian Baldock, Guinness plc.
Mr. Philip Daubeny, ICI plc.
Mr. Andrew Cummins, Inchcape plc.
Mr. Graham Hadley, National Power plc.
Dr. Terry Harrison, Rolls Royce plc.
Mr. Philip Hills, Samual Montagu and Co. Ltd.
Mr. Peter Grant, Sun Life Assurance Society plc.
Mr. Howard Davies, Confederation of British Industry

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he took to raise concerns expressed by British citizens at the destruction of the Babri mosque during his recent visit to India; and what was the response.

The Prime Minister: During my recent visit to India, I had a long discussion with the Indian Prime Minister about the situation in India following the destruction of the Babri mosque. I also restated our support for the principles of India's secular democracy, rule of law, tolerance and protection of minorities.

Terrorist Attacks

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of co-operation between the British Army and the authorities of the Republic of Ireland in dealing with terrorist attacks launched from within the Republic of Ireland.

The Prime Minister: There is very effective co-operation between the security forces in Northern Ireland and those in the Republic of Ireland. Both Governments recognise the importance of keeping existing measures under review, and that further improvements can be made wherever practicable.

European Year of Older People

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what benefits he expects to accrue to pensioners in the United Kingdom from the European Year of Older People launched on 25 January.

The Prime Minister: The Year will bring lasting benefits for older people in the United Kingdom, and I was particularly pleased to welcome the initiative during our presidency of the European Council. In collaboration with many organisations we are managing a substantial programme of initiatives, connected with the initiative, focusing on four main themes: combating ageism, volunteering, health promotion and active leisure, and social and environmental integration. The programme is designed to secure the involvement of older people themselves, professionals who work with them, and the general public. I hope that many people will play a part. The outcome will be improved understanding between the generations and an increasing recognition of the vital part older people have to play in our society.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish an updated list of ministerial standing and ad hoc committees of the Cabinet.

The Prime Minister: All the ministerial Cabinet Committees I listed in my response to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 19 May 1992 at column 110 are still in existence. In addition one Standing Committee and one ad hoc group have been established, and their membership and terms of reference are given below. Copies of the revised list, which includes minor revisions to the membership of existing Committees, are available in the Library of the House.

MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC EXPENDITURE (EDX)

Composition

Chancellor of the Exchequer (chairman)
Secretary of State for the Home Department
President of the Board of Trade
Lord Privy Seal
Lord President of the Council
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster
Chief Secretary, Treasury

Terms of Reference

"To consider the allocation of the public expenditure control totals and make recommendations to the Cabinet".

MINISTERIAL GROUP ON REFUGEES FROM FORMER YUGOSLAVIA (GEN 24)

Composition

Secretary of State for the Home Department (chairman)
Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs
The Lord President of the Council
Secretary of State for the Environment
Secretary of State for Wales
Secretary of State for Social Security
Secretary of State for Scotland
Secretary of State for Education
Secretary of State for Health
Secretary of State for Employment
Chief Secretary, Treasury
Attorney General
Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Minister for Overseas Development)
Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office

The Secretary of State for Transport and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will also receive papers and be invited to attend as necessary.

Terms of Reference

"To consider whether a visa regime should be instituted for citizens of former Yugoslavia in the context of the Government's overall policy towards that region and to review the practical arrangements for the reception and subsequent support of those arriving in the United Kingdom from this area taking account of the implications for the treatment of refugees from other parts of the world, and to report to Cabinet."

Queen (Tax)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if he will report on the up to date position regarding the tax arrangements for the Queen.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 January 1993]: Discussions are continuing between the Treasury, the Inland Revenue and the royal household. I will make a statement shortly about the arrangements for the tax year commencing 6 April 1993.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to extend the range of offences which apply to the misuse of imitation firearms, following recommendations by the Firearms consultative committee.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The committee's recommendation to extend the range of offences which apply to the misuse of imitation firearms will be implemented at a suitable legislative opportunity.

Hillsborough

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason the local major disaster plan was not implemented in respect of the Hillsborough disaster.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the police initiated their major disaster plan at or shortly after 3.06 pm (paragraphs 96 and 252 of the Interim Report into the Hillsborough Stadium Disaster (Cm. 765)).

Police (Rechargeable Services)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 the total income received for rechargeable services and the percentage this represented for each force of their total income.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Separate information on income received by police forces in England and Wales for rechargeable services is not collected centrally. Income from fees and charges is shown in the table (of which income from rechargeable services is a main component) and as a percentage of total income other than central government grant and local authority finance.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number, title and date of publication of all reports issued by the National Audit Office on the Metropolitan police since 1987.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There have been two reports:

"Home Office: Control and Management of the Metropolitan Police Estate", published 22 June 1989, HC 455 of 1988-89.

"Reducing Crime in London: A study of the partnership and other methods used by five Metropolitan Divisions", published 25 February 1992, HC 270 of 1991-92.

Fingerprinting

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken by police forces in England and Wales to improve the effectiveness of their fingerprint departments.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The effectiveness of fingerprint departments is being improved by the development of quality assurance measures and performance indicators to ensure the best use of resources and staffing; by the enhancement of training brought about by the establishment of a national training school at Durham; and by the introduction of automated fingerprint recognition equipment in the majority of fingerprint bureaux.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the projected cost of the proposed national automatic fingerprinting recognition system when it is expected to be in service; how it will be financed; what advantages the proposed system has over the fingerprint file put into operation by a consortium involving police forces in England and Wales; and what consideration he gave to adopting the consortium fingerprint file as the national system.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The national automated fingerprint identification system is expected to have cost some £45 million by the time that it comes into service in 1996-97. It will be financed as a common police service. Because it is being designed specifically to meet national requirements and because it will incorporate more up-to-date technology, the NAFIS will offer advantages of cost, accuracy, and reliability over any system which is at present in use in the United Kingdom. Under the established rules of government procurement, a system of this size must be the subject of an open competition. It will be open to all suppliers, including those of the consortium system, to bid for the contract.

Immigration

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the planned dates of meeting of the ad hoc immigration group and its sub-groups; and what will be the subject matter of its meetings.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Danish presidency has provisionally allocated a total of 38 days to meetings of the ad hoc working group on immigration and its sub-groups, as follows:

Nature of meeting	Date of meeting
Asylum sub-group	15 January 1993
Ad hoc immigration group	19 to 20 January 1993
Asylum sub-group	26 to 27 January 1993
Admission/expulsions sub-group	29 January 1993
Admission/expulsions sub-group	3 February 1993
External frontiers sub-group	5 February 1993
Asylum sub-group	10 February 1993
Sub-group meeting to be confirmed	18 February 1993
Asylum sub-group	4 to 5 March 1993
Visa sub-group	8 March 1993
Admission/expulsions sub-group (am)	11 to 12 March 1993
Forged documents sub-group (pm)	12 March 1993
Admission/expulsions sub-group	22 March 1993
Asylum sub-group	24 March 1993
External frontiers sub-group	29 March 1993
Visa sub-group	30 March 1993
Sub-group meeting to be confirmed	31 March 1993
Ad hoc immigration group	1 to 2 April 1993
Admission/expulsions sub-group	6 April 1993
External frontiers sub-group	7 April 1993
Asylum sub-group	21 April 1993
Admission/expulsions sub-group	23 April 1993
Sub-group meeting to be confirmed	28 April 1993
Asylum sub-group	30 April 1993
Admission/expulsions sub-group	4 May 1993
Ad hoc immigration group	13 to 14 May 1993
Asylum sub-group	24 May 1993
Sub-group meeting(s) to be confirmed	25 to 26 May 1993
Sub-group meeting to be confirmed	10 June 1993
Visa sub-group	14 June 1993
Forged documents sub-group	16 June 1993
Asylum sub-group	18 June 1993

It will be for the Danish presidency to determine the precise agenda for each of these meetings as they arise. In general terms, however, the presidency has indicated that the groups will continue work currently in hand under the immigration and asylum work programme agreed by Ministers at the end of the Dutch presidency in December 1991, including discussions on admission for the purpose of family reunification, admission for the purpose of employment and self-employment, harmonisation of asylum procedures and measures to combat illegal immigration. The presidency has also indicated that the asylum and external frontiers sub-groups will continue work on the preparatory measures required for implementation of the Dublin asylum convention and the draft convention on external frontiers.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the British representatives who will participate in the ad hoc group on immigration and the sub-groups which will operate during the period of the Danish presidency of the European Community.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The United Kingdom delegation to meetings of the ad hoc working group on immigration will be led by Mr. A. R. Rawsthorne, an Assistant Under-Secretary of State in the immigration and nationality department of the Home Office.

The United Kingdom delegation to meetings of sub-groups will be headed by other senior officers of the immigration and nationality department, as follows:

Sub-group	Heads of United Kingdom delegation
Admissions-expulsion	Mr. N. R. Varney-Mr. C. B. Manchip
Asylum	Mr. J. Casey
External frontiers	Mr. N. R. Varney
Forged documents	Mr. C. B. Manchip
Visa	Mr. R. G. Yates
Yugoslavia (special sub-group)	Mr. A. Cunningham

Heads of delegation will be assisted by other officers of the immigration and nationality department, and of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other Government Departments, as the business requires.

Women Police Officers

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that women police officers should have the best available equipment to defend themselves from assault in the execution of their duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Decisions about the purchase and issue of equipment are matters for chief officers. My right hon. and learned Friend would expect all officers to be provided with the best protective equipment available which is appropriate to the situation.

Prisoners (Training)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have received national vocational qualifications from their vocational training in prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the nine months up to December 1992, more than 1,000 prisoners had been registered with national vocational qualification (NVQ) awarding bodies, 276 had gained full NVQs and over 3,400 units towards full NVQs had been accredited. Prisoners do, of course, gain NVQs through work and other regime activities as well as through vocational training.

WPC Kirsty Snellgrove

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Essex concerning the assault on 25 January on WPC Kirsty Snellgrove.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. The investigation of criminal offences is an operational matter for the chief constable.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures he has on the level of juvenile re-offending after cautions or non-custodial sentences have been passed on such offenders, in the latest convenient period.

Mr. Jack: Information on this is available firstly from a sample study of juveniles during 1985 and is given in the table. The figures are subject to sampling error. More information on this study is given in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin (HOSB) "Criminal histories of those cautioned in 1985 and 1988".

Secondly, information is also available from sample studies of cohorts born in certain years. Of those born in 1953, 1958 or 1963 who were convicted of an offence before they were 16 and given a non-custodial sentence at their first conviction, 35 per cent. were reconvicted of another offence within two years. More information is available in HOSB 7/85 "Criminal careers of those born in 1953, 1958 and 1963", and results from both studies are regularly updated. Copies of statistical bulletins are available in the Library of the House.

Number of juveniles cautioned in 1985 and proportion convicted within two years

	Percentage convicted	Number cautioned[1]
Under 14	11	834
Age 14–16	16	1,327
Under 17	14	2,161

[1] = 100 per cent.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Boundary Commission is expected to commence its inquiries for a review of the European parliamentary constituencies in Essex and to make recommendations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the provisions of the European Parliamentary Elections Act 1978, the boundary commission for England is required to begin its revision of all European parliamentary constituencies in England, including those in Essex, when its current general reviews of constituencies for our Parliament has been completed, and an Order in Council has been made implementing the recommendations.

The target for completing that review has been set by the Boundary Commissions Act 1992 as 31 December 1994.

We shall, however, need to make some special arrangements, in time for the June 1994 European parliamentary elections, to give effect to the decision of the European Council to increase the number of seats for the United Kingdom by six. The Government are developing proposals on how best that might be done.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners were held in police stations in Greater Manchester on 22 January; what were the comparable numbers over the last two years; how many are being held in police cells in adjacent police forces; what progress is being made to phase out Operation Container; and when he now expects it to end.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 22 January, 202 prisoners were held in police stations in Greater Manchester. Figures for prisoners held by Greater Manchester police since April 1990 are given in the table, together with the national figures.

Date	Number of prisoners held by Greater Manchester police	All forces
1 April 1990	0	0
1 August 1990	329	790
12 December 1990	283	814
1 April 1991	245	835
1 August 1991	169	1,150
1 December 1991	217	1,677
1 April 1992	271	1,825
1 August 1992	244	1,065
1 December 1992	210	367

On 22 January, Merseyside police held 28 prisoners and Lancashire police held six prisoners.

The number of prisoners held nationally on 29 January (the latest date for which figures are available) was 166, of which 161 were held by the Greater Manchester police and five by the Merseyside police. This represents a dramatic improvement in the national police cells position, although the burden on the Greater Manchester police continues. The reduction of the number in police cells to the current level has involved transferring large numbers of sentenced prisoners from the area to establishments elsewhere in the north and Midlands. The next step will involve substantial movement of prisoners awaiting trial although the prison service recognises that this would affect other criminal justice agencies. It is therefore not yet possible to say exactly when Operation Container will be closed, but the prison service hopes to reach that position in the near future.

United States Citizens

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his practice that his Department should not provide any information it holds on a citizen of the United States of America standing for elected office without the Home Secretary's personal approval.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I do not propose to vary the policy explained in my answer of 14 January to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms. Lynne), Official Report, columns 793-94.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efforts were made by his Department during the inquiry into Shamrock (GB) Ltd. to contact the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The inquiry into Shamrock (GB) Ltd. was undertaken following the "World in Action" programme shown last June, and in the light of two reports and other video material sent to the Home Office by the BUAV in July. The Home Office took the view that the BUAV would not have withheld any relevant information, and did not feel that anything would be gained by discussing the material further with the BUAV.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about possible irregularities in study 161/212 on primates at Hazleton UK; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 15 December at column 100.

The case involving monkeys was one of a number of specific research projects using primates, the purpose or the methodology of which were queried by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection in the context of its allegations about Shamrock (GB) Ltd. and Hazleton UK. The Home Office animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate has now examined the points made by the BUAV, and its observations will shortly be considered by the animal procedures committee.

Public Alert System

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the need for a public alert system to warn the public of emergencies and disasters; and what system is to be installed following the dismantlement of the siren system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Future national arrangements for warning the public will be based on the use of television and radio broadcasts. Local arrangements are the responsibility of the authorities in the areas concerned. Home Office officials are holding discussions with local authorities in whose areas the siren system formed part of local warning arrangements.

Prison Service Agency

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the responsibilities of the planned prison service agency will be in relation to private sector involvement in the management of prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have decided that when the prison service becomes an executive agency on 1 April it should assume full responsibility for taking forward Government policy on the involvement of the private sector in the management of prisons. The framework document and corporate and business plans for the agency will reflect this position.

The objective of the agency will be to raise standards and secure better value for money throughout the prison system. I envisage an increased role for the private sector in the management of prisons in order to provide an effective source of competition, new ideas and comparison for the management of the public sector prison service. The agency will make recommendations to me later this year on the extent, form and timetable for private sector involvement. In the interim, further existing establishments will be identified for market testing.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Doncaster (Development Area Status)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it remains his policy that the Doncaster travel-to-work area will be upgraded to development area status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes.

Coal Industry

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning coal exports arising from his recently launched initiative encouraging more British companies to export to Europe.

Mr. Eggar: The reports of the independent consultants John T Boyd and Caminus Energy, published on 22 January, comment on the potential for coal exports. The Government will be considering that issue as part of the coal review. The Business in Europe programme recently announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade offers a range of help to businesses which have the capability of exporting to Europe.

197. Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the future of the coal industry social welfare organisation indoor and outdoor schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have received a number of representations concerning the future of coal industry social welfare arrangements, including such schemes.

We are giving careful consideration to the important and sensitive issues involved.

Offshore Licensing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account was taken of (a) the Her Majesty's inspector of pollution licensing procedure laid down in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and (b) the EC directive on the public availability of environmental information by his Department when deciding to maintain the confidentiality of licensing applications for oil and gas exploration in (a) the Bristol channel and (b) Cardigan bay.

Mr. Eggar: (a) The licensing procedure laid down in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 does not relate to the award of oil and gas licences.

(b) Applications for exploration and production licences are made under The Petroleum (Production) (Seaward Areas) Regulations 1988 and contain commercially confidential information, a ground for refusing disclosure under Article 3 of the directive.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to require environmental impact assessments for all offshore licensing block applications in the 14th round which are within 25 miles of offshore islands within United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Eggar: The consultation procedure which preceded the announcement of blocks available for licensing in the 14th Round enabled environmental bodies to identify all blocks which require environmental assessment at the exploration stage, including any within 25 miles of offshore islands within United Kingdom waters. Companies proposing to operate in such blocks would need to provide an environmental impact statement for assessment before approval could be given to develop any oil or gas discovery.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for the conduct of environmental impact assessments for allocated blocks for offshore licensing within the 14th round; and what opportunity experts on coastal and offshore environmental matters and the general public will have to scrutinise such assessments prior to the granting of licences.

Mr. Eggar: Companies are subject to the environmental impact assessment procedure before approval can be given to develop any offshore oil or gas discovery, where this is required in the special conditions attached to their licence.

Companies awarded licences in the 14th round will be required to liaise with the environmental and fisheries bodies consulted prior to the block's release for licensing, and with certain other local and national organisations where appropriate, as well as with the Department of Trade and Industry, with regard to the nature and conduct of any environmental assessment required under the special conditions attached to individual blocks. Such assessments may be required before seismic surveying or before exploration drilling, depending on the sensitivities of the block identified during the consultation process.

Such conditions are, however, attached to licences when they are granted. The completed assessment will be circulated to the liaison bodies and may be revised in the light of their comments. It would then be used to inform the licensee's activities in the block on matters such as seasonal restrictions on exploration, choice of drilling location, mud formulation to be used, etc.

At present there is no requirement for wider publication of this information, although some existing licensees have made such material more widely available under the Access to Environmental Information Act 1992, the general public will be able to seek access to such information where is has been required under legislation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations underlay the decision to limit the requirement for environmental impact assessment under the 14th round of offshore licensing block allocations to blocks within 25 miles of the coast and blocks within designated environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Eggar: During the consultation procedure carried out before any blocks were released for licensing in the 14th offshore round, the views of a number of relevant bodies were sought with regard to environmental conditions to be attached to all the areas nominated by the industry as being of interest. Those consulted included the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and their regional equivalents, together with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and a number of other non-statutory bodies representing, for example, fisheries interests.

The views of these organisations were the basis of the list of indicative conditions for the 14th round blocks circulated to the industry, a copy of which has recently been placed in the Library of the House. In sensitive areas, these require the licensee to liaise with the advisory bodies; in the most sensitive areas, those bodies may require the licensee to carry out an environmental assessment before exploration commences.

Since the 11th round, areas within 25 miles of the coast have been recognised as those where fisheries, wildlife and tourism interests are likely to be most intensive and hence in greatest need of protection through such special conditions. The consultation procedure which precedes the announcement of any licensing round enables the bodies listed to draw attention to any areas outside this zone which may require similar conditions to be attached, as well as to any areas within the zone which are particularly vulnerable.

Post Office

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish the results of the review of the Post Office initiated in June 1992.

Mr. Leigh: The Post Office review was announced on 29 July 1992. The review is not yet completed. A statement will be made to the House in due course.

Biofuels

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is currently undertaken by his Department to promote the use and production of biofuels.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 January 1993]: The Department of Trade and Industry stimulates the development and use of renewable sources of energy, including biofuels, wherever they have the prospects of being economically attractive and environmentally acceptable. Our programme includes work on dry agricultural wastes such as straw—a precursor for energy crops such as short rotation arable coppice and miscanthus. Recent reports on this work include "The Development of Compacted Straw Fuel, ETSU B 1189"; "Short Rotation Arable Energy Forestry, Technology Summary 048"; and "The Potential of Miscanthus as a Fuel Crop, ETSU B 1354". These reports have been deposited in the Libraries of both Houses and are available from the renewable energy inquiries bureau at the energy technology support unit, telephone (0235) 432450.

Electricity

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the distribution of subsidies to the electricity supply industry within the United Kingdom under the 20 per cent. EC guidelines.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 January 1993]: It is for the European Commission to interpret its guidelines, which are not part of Community law, as it sees fit from time to time. All state aid to the energy sector has been notified to the Commission.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Listed Buildings

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what was the planned expenditure in each financial year from 1992-93 onwards by English Heritage regarding listed buildings in Greater London to the present date;

(2) what was (a) the amount allocated to English Heritage or its predecessor bodies regarding listed buildings in Greater London and (b) the amount spent, for each financial year from 1986-87.

Mr. Brooke: English Heritage's London region has been responsible for a varying range of duties, including archaeology and conservation areas, in addition to listed building work, since April 1986. The figures for each year are not directly comparable as the region's activities and responsibilities have developed and altered over recent years. The following total amounts were allocated by English Heritage to the work of London region, in the financial years 1986-87 to 1992-93:

	Amount allocated (£ million)	Amount spent (£ million)
1986-87	5·9	4·3
1988-89	6·5	6·4
1989-90	6·9	6·4
1990-91	6·7	6·8

	Amount allocated (£ million)	Amount spent (£ million)
1991-92	5·8	5·7
1992-93	5·5	[1]

EMPLOYMENT

Genetically Modified Material

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many premises were licensed for the use and processing of genetically modified material in 1990, 1991 and 1992; how many on-site inspections were carried out in each of those years; how many premises were discovered using such material without a licence in each of those years; and what action was taken.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no legal requirements for a licence to use premises for genetic modification work but under the Genetic Manipulation Regulations 1989, persons are required to notify the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) of an intention to do so.

The information required is as follows:

Year	Active centres	HSE inspections	Centres failing to notify	Notices issued
1990	351	100	2	[1]5
1991	400	70	1	[2]2
1992	445	121	2	[2]1

[1] Improvement.
[2] Prohibition.

All the notices were served on the centres which had failed to notify. In 1992, work was stopped at both sites which had not notified. A prohibition notice was issued at one; the second complied with the requirements before enforcement action was completed.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received regarding the level of funding for TECs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have received representations from a number of sources about the levels of funding for TECs. I am satisfied that TECs will have sufficient resources to carry out the objectives agreed in their business plan.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the bonus points awarded to each TEC.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following table lists the TECs successful in gaining awards in performance-related funding during 1991-92 and gives the number of bonus points earned by each TEC.

TEC name	Bonus points
Barnsley/Doncaster	2·5
Bolton/Bury	2·0

Job Creation, Birmingham

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created in the Birmingham area in the last five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates for local areas are available only from the biennial census of employment. The latest results relate to 1989; estimates for 1991 will be published in April. Over the two years to September 1989 there was a net increase of 30,400 employees in employment in the Birmingham travel-to-work area.

Business Education Partnership

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the national increase or decrease in the budget for the education business partnership for 1993-94 compared with 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: The national budget for education business partnerships for 1993-94 is £2 million, compared with £2·4 million in 1992-93.

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the increase or decrease in real terms of the average unit price for youth training in 1993-94 relative to 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am not able to provide a comparison of the average unit prices for YT in 1993-94 and in 1992-93 as the 1993-94 price subject of negotiation between the Department and training and enterprise councils. It is estimated that the average unit price for YT in 1992-93 will turn out to be £2,630.

Trade Unions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the extra work required by employers as a result of clause 11 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Clause 11 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill gives individuals a greater right to belong to the union of their choice. There is no reason why this measure should entail any extra work for employers.

Training for Work

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the increase or decrease in the national budget for training for work between 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is unable to provide a direct comparison of planned expenditure on training for work in 1993-94 and 1992-93 as training for work does not begin until 1 April 1993. Details of planned expenditure in 1993-94 will be published in the 1993 departmental report.

In 1992-93 the equivalent training and work experience programmes for adults are employment training and employment action. In 1992-93 planned expenditure for Great Britain on employment training is £807 million and on employment action is £178 million.

Construction Sites (Injuries)

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in how many cases of fatal injury on construction sites in the north-west the victim's identity was unknown for (i) employees, (ii) self-employed and (iii) members of the public in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive has no knowledge of any cases of fatal injuries on construction sites in the north-west during the last five years where the victim's identity was unknown.

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful criminal prosecutions took place in each of the last five years as a result of investigations into deaths and major injuries on construction sites in the north-west; and what information he has on how many police investigations were undertaken into deaths and major injuries on such sites in the north-west in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the number of successful and unsuccessful prosecutions taken by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) following investigations into fatal and major injuries on construction sites is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HSE does not formally record information on the number of investigations carried out by the police.

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average (a) fine and/or (b) prison sentence for successful prosecutions following (i) deaths and (ii) major injuries on construction sites in the north west in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of (i) hypothermia, (ii) frostbite and (iii) immersion foot were reported on construction sites in the north-west in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Hazardous Substances

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many investigations have been undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive in the north-west under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 in each year since their introduction.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available. Health and Safety Executive field staff monitor compliance with COSHH at premises for which HSE has enforcement responsibility during the course of visits made for a variety of purposes including, for example, preventive inspections and the investigation of complaints, accidents and dangerous occurrences.

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people in the London East TEC area seeking a youth training place have received a firm offer.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the total number of young people seeking a YT place who have not had a firm offer is not available.

London East TEC, in common with all TECs, has been asked to use its best endeavours to ensure that it is bringing all its available resources to bear on providing places for young people who are covered by the YT guarantee.

Wages Inspectors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff of the wages inspectorate operate in Wales; and how many are office-based in Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are four wages inspectors operating in Wales. Since 1987 wages inspection in Wales has been administered from offices based in Manchester and Bristol.

Wages

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms in Wales have been found to be paying below minimum rates set by wages councils in each of the last 10 years; what is the amount of money calculated to be owed to employees in each of these years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available information is provided in the following table.

Wales—Wages Inspection

European Agency for Health and Safety at Work

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration has been given to Merseyside as a suitable location for the European Agency for Safety and Health at Work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's view is that the case for such an agency has yet to be clearly demonstrated. A number of possible United Kingdom locations were considered in 1990 in connection with a possible United Kingdom bid to host an agency; Liverpool was amongst these.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will provide the latest figures for numbers of full-time employees on adult rates in (a) Greater Manchester, (b) Merseyside, (c) Cheshire, (d) Lancashire and (e) the north-west region whose weekly earnings excluding overtime were less than £200 and less than £190 under the headings: manual males, non-manual males and all full-time males; manual females, non-manual females, and all full-time females, giving total numbers of employees in the sample in each case; and what is the number of part-time employees on adult rates in (i) Greater Manchester, (ii) Merseyside, (iii) Cheshire, (iv) Lancashire and (v) the north-west region whose hourly earnings excluding overtime were less than £5·40 and less than £4·80 under the following headings: manual females, non-manual females and all part-time females; manual males, non-manual males and all part-time males, giving total number of employees in the sample in each case.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information available from the "New Earnings Survey" is provided in the following tables. No relevant information is available on part-time men.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

No-smoking Policy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will introduce a non-smoking policy for all office accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Martin: The Administration Committee's responsibility in respect of no-smoking areas covers only offices occupied by Members and their staff and certain communal areas. I shall nevertheless arrange for the Committee to consider this matter.

HEALTH

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce capitation funding for general practitioner fund holders.

Dr. Mawhinney: A capitation element has been included in the guidance for setting fund holders' budgets for 1993-94. Work is continuing on refining the methodology used.

Dentistry

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for the deregistration of adults on NHS dental practice lists from the beginning of the current financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: Between 1 April and 30 November 1992, 4,066,101 adult patients were removed from national health service dental lists. In the same period 5,987,906 adult patients were added. This represents a net-overall increase of 1,921,805.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice her Department has given to NHS trusts concerning the practice of contracting out medicinal and laboratory services to private companies in which trust employees have a direct pecuniary interest.

Mr. Sackville: Revised guidance on standards of business conduct for national health service management and staff was issued on 20 January in circular HSG(93)5, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Royal Marsden Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has had concerning the Royal Marsden hospital; and if she will make a statement;

(2) how many petition signatures she has received to date concerning the future of the Royal Marsden hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: As at 27 January we had received 390 letters from hon. Members and members of the public and a petition containing approximately 420,000 signatures.

Orthodontic Treatment

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of waiting time for patients seeking orthodontic treatment in Newham.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by specialty for district health authorities and national health service trusts is published in "Hospital Waiting Lists, In-Patients and Day Cases", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Tobacco

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list in order for the United Kingdom, and for each country that has banned tobacco advertising which has been studied by the Department's chief economist, the estimated influence of a ban, restrictions on advertising short of a ban, health warnings, price, and parental example to children; and what estimates were made of the effect of each factor in each country.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to provide estimates for the influence of all the factors. Available information is as follows:

—in England, children whose parents both smoke are two and a half times more likely to smoke than children whose parents do not smoke;

—estimates for the reduction in tobacco consumption associated with a 10 per cent. increase in price range between 2 per cent. and 6 per cent. for the United Kingdom and the countries studied;

—estimates for the proportional reduction in tobacco consumption associated with an advertising ban range between 4 per cent. and 9 per cent. in the countries studied. It is unclear whether these figures would be replicated in the United Kingdom, given the fall in smoking in the United Kingdom from 45 per cent. of the population in 1974 to 30 per cent. in 1990 and the existing controls on tobacco advertising through the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising and promotion.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial contribution Her Majesty's Government are making to the European Year of Older People in 1993.

Mr. Yeo: The Department of Health is funding the operation of a secretariat for the year (based at the headquarters of Age Concern England). The total costs for the period to 31 March 1994 are estimated at £291,000, to which the Department of Social Security is contributing £40,000. The Department of Health is also providing an officer on secondment to the secretariat at an annual cost of £18,000. The Department has set up an advisory group for the year, the costs of which currently stand at approximately £3,000, with a further £5,000 anticipated during the next financial year.

It is estimated that the costs of publicity for the year provided through the Department of Health information division will be approximately £135,000.

Grants for specific initiatives forming part of the programme for the year are being considered by a number of Government Departments. It is not possible at this stage to estimate the level of expenditure. The Department of Health has two part-time officers working exclusively in connection with the year at an aggregate annual cost of £18,500. A substantial further, unquantifiable, level of staff input is being provided by other Government Departments.

The Secretary of State for Health launched the United Kingdom programme for the year on 17 December 1992 in the presence of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre. The Department of Health contributed approximately £14,000 to this event. Individual launch events were also held in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, where additional programmes specific to these parts of the United Kingdom have been developed. The costs of these are being met principally by the Scottish and Welsh Offices and by the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland. Together with publicity materials for the year and other core support, this additional expenditure is expected to be in the region of £150,000 in total, with further unquantifiable costs.

The budget of the European Commission for the year is 7·5 mecu (approximately £5·9 million) to which the United Kingdom's contribution is approximately 17 per cent. before abatement.

Health Authorities and Trusts

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department carries out of the requirement for health authorities and trusts to conduct their business in as open a manner as possible; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service management executive monitors regional health authorities and NHS trusts on all aspects of their performance. Regional health authorities monitor the performance of district health authorities, including the way they conduct their business.

Mr. Peter Sutcliffe

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement as to how Peter Sutcliffe, a prisoner held in Broadmoor security hospital, was able to smuggle a letter out of that establishment and make unsupervised telephone calls; and what arrangements will be made at the hospital to prevent such occurrences.

Mr. Yeo: Arrangements for patients' mail and telephone calls in the special hospitals are the responsibility for the special hospitals service authority.

The circumstances in which mail may be opened and inspected, or withheld from patients, are defined in section 134 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Broadmoor hospital policy is that patients may make telephone calls if they have the consent of their clinical team and the intended recipient of the call. All calls are subject to monitoring by the hospital staff.

The authority informs me that they are not aware of any departure from these policies in Mr. Sutcliffe's case.

Nurses, Merseyside

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the North Mersey community national health service trust on the effect of the reduction in numbers of grades C and H nurses in the current reorganisation of district nursing on Merseyside.

Mr. Sackville: None. The management of nursing services at the North Mersey Community national health service trust is a matter for the trust board. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Mr. R. James, for details.

Smoking

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many staff, as full time equivalents, and at what grade were employed in each district health authority within the Mersey region dedicated to smoking cessation work with the general public in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) how many clinic sessions were offered and in which discipline in each district health authority within the Mersey region dedicated to smoking cessation work with the general public in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Professor A. M. Breckenridge, chairman of Mersey regional health authority, for details.

Breast Screening

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the preliminary results of the breast screening programme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We intend to publish a report on the English and Welsh breast screening programme in March 1993 giving data for 1991-92. This report will be published in conjunction with the Scottish report and will cover the three key areas of the programme: acceptability of screening invitation; quality assurance and monitoring and evaluation.

Home Helps and Home Carers (Hampshire)

3. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the total number of home helps' and home carers' hours provided in Hampshire in each year since 1987; and, in each year, what was the average number of hours (a) per user and (b) per pensioner in the county;

(2) what was the charge per hour for home helps/home carers in Hampshire in each year since 1987, expressed in (a) actual prices and (b) 1987 prices.

Mr. Yeo: The Department does not collect data in the form requested. Information on hours of service received by clients, numbers of clients, and maximum, minimum and flat rate hourly charges made by individual local authorities for home help/home care services is available in "Personal Social Services Statistics—Actuals" published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA). Copies of this publication covering the years up to 1990-91 are available in the Library.

Young Offenders

54. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds are available and in which financial years to allow local authorities to build more secure places to ensure that persons aged 15 or 16 years are not remanded to prison.

Mr. Yeo: The capital allocation for 1992-93 and 1993-94 to fund additional secure places for juvenile remands is £680,000 and £3,248,000 respectively. Funding for succeeding years has not yet been confirmed.

57. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated need for more places in secure units for juveniles in each county in the east midands.

Mr. Yeo: It is estimated that an additional five to eight secure places will be required by authorities in the East Midlands as a whole for the purposes of implementing the Criminal Justice Act. Because of the small numbers involved it is not practicable to break this estimate down between counties.

The ability of the existing secure facilities in the East Midlands to cater for existing demands, and the implications of plans to develop secure units in adjoining regions, are also being taken into account in developing a capital programme for the region.

General Practitioner Surgeries

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's or health authorities' roles and responsibilities in respect of each stage followed in building a new general practitioner surgery, including how the financing is arranged throughout.

Mr. Sackville: Under their terms of service general practitioners are required to provide proper and sufficient accommodation at their practice premises for the provision of general medical services. Under the cost rent and improvement grant schemes they can apply for financial assistance in purchasing premises or improving existing premises. The details of these schemes, and the procedures to be followed, are set out in the statement of fees and allowances payable to general practitioners.

Family health service authorities have delegated responsibility for managing these schemes within the resources allocated to them in line with local service priorities. Over £126 million were spent on such schemes in 1991-92, an increase, in real terms of some 72 per cent. over 1989-90.

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has so far been made in extending the membership of the relevant advisory committees in the context of the recent announcement of the extension of the limited list prescribing system to include 10 new categories of pharmaceutical products.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received suggestions from relevant organisations and will announce the names of new members shortly.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement giving details of the different options for reducing the medicines bill to the national health service which she considered prior to the announcement of the extension of the limited list prescribing system and, in the case of each of those options, why it was rejected.

Dr. Mawhinney: The selected list scheme has been in operation since 1986 and has limited the rate of growth in the drugs bill without jeopardising patient care. Extending its scope to additional therapeutic categories was therefore an obvious step to take, so that this effect could continue. We are also re-negotiating the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme. We are in discussion with the pharmaceutical industry about other possible ways of controlling the drugs bill, and any proposals which emerge from those discussions will be carefully considered.

NHS Trusts

60. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will undertake a review of the working of the various national health service trusts to gauge how far (a) money if following patients about the country, (b) trusts are being monitored by regional health authorities, (c) what influence such authorities are exerting on trusts and (d) what further regulations she expects to bring in on trusts' responsibilities; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The increased number of patients treated in 1991-92 (7·2 per cent. in all hospital/units, 8·2 per cent. in national health service trusts) and the successful elimination of two-year waits in all regions is clear evidence that the NHS reforms are working and that NHS trusts are leading the way in improving efficiency and patient care. Regional health authorities are responsible for overseeing health care in their regions, and can exert influence over trusts through district health authorities and their purchasing contracts. There is no reason to expand the existing regulatory framework for trusts.

Regional Health Authorities

61. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to revamp the regional health authority tier in order to bring in new people and new thinking into regional strategic health care; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: As our reforms continue to be implemented, we will consider whether any changes should be made in relation to the functions of regional health authorities. We will announce any proposed changes when our considerations are complete.

Hospital Closures

83. Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the hospitals for which current plans for closure have been referred to her Department, including the proposed dates for closure.

Mr. Sackville: The following contested proposals to close facilities have been referred to, and are being considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State:

Clapham hospital
Leavesden and Harperbury hospital

Dates for closure or other changes can be announced only once final decisions have been taken.

Public Subscriptions

85. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue guidelines (a) for health trusts and health authorities when working with appeals raising money for new equipment and building works and (b) on openness between trusts and appeals in raising a public subscription.

Mr. Sackville: The Government greatly appreciate local fund-raising activities which supplement national health service funding, and continue to welcome a closer working relationship between the health service and local voluntary and community groups. We believe that the details on fund raising events are best decided at local level, and have no plans to introduce guidelines for NHS trusts and health authorities.

Smoking

87. Ms. Walley; To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will send a copy of her statement on smoking in the workplace and public places to each hon. Member; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My reply to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) is freely available in the Official Report at column 697 on 26 January 1993.

Hospitals (Brighton)

84. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place between officials from her Department and Brighton health authority with regard to the future of the Royal Alexandra children's hospital, Brighton; and if she will list the dates of and participants at each meeting.

Mr. Sackville: Representatives from South East Thames regional health authority gave me the South East Thames capital investment strategy on 2 July 1992, officials from the Department were present. Discussions are continuing between Brighton Health Care national health service trust and the national health service management executive southern outpost.

88. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the date of the meeting when her Department and Brighton health authority first advised the Rockinghorse Appeal Trust that they no longer intended to proceed with further buildings and development at the Dyke road Brighton site.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Brighton Health Care national health service trust, Brighton health authority and the Rockinghorse Appeal Trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. J. Simmonds, the acting chairman of Brighton health authority, for details.

90. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department agreed with Brighton health authority to bring forward the date of the move of the Royal Alexandra hospital, Brighton from its present site.

Mr. Sackville: The relocation of the Royal Alexandra hospital is part of the Brighton Health Care national health service trust development programme and will be submitted to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for approval in principle later this year.

91. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the funds raised by the Rockinghorse Appeal Trust for the Royal Alexandra hospital will be used to develop children's hospital services in Brighton.

Mr. Sackville: Discussions are on-going between Brighton Health Care national health service trust and the Rockinghorse Appeal Trust.

97. (P) Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will identify how much capital and revenue funding her Department has earmarked for the transfer of the Royal Alexandra children's hospital to the Royal Sussex site;

(2) what capital and revenue funding commitments have been made to Brighton Health Care trust concerning the redevelopment of the Royal Sussex county hospital for each year from 1993 to 2003.

Mr. Sackville: Revenue funding for Brighton Health Care trust is a matter for Brighton health authority and other purchasers. Total capital spending for Brighton Health Care for the year commencing 1 April 1993 is £4·649 million. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Spiers, the chairman, for details.

Chelmsford Hospice

92. (P) Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much extra money the Chelmsford hospice can expect to receive as a result of the Minister of State's announcement on 26 January increasing funding for the hospice movement in the current year.

Mr. Sackville: The funding of individual projects is a matter for discussion and agreement with the health authorities concerned.

Abortion

93. (P) Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the rate of physical complications arising following an abortion after the specified period for the notification of the abortion to her Department.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. For information about the short and long-term sequelae of abortion I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 25 January at column 536. Other information is given in two published studies; the joint study of the Royal College of General Practitioners and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists entitled "Induced abortion operations and their early sequelae." Journal of the Royal College of General Practitioners 1979; 135: 175-180; and Saha A, Savage W and George J. "The Tower Hamlets Daycare Abortion Service Study", October 1992: 49-56. Copies of both papers are available in the Library.

94. (P) Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has regarding the percentage of cases in which a blood transfusion is required following an abortion.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 536, what specific procedures are required to be undertaken prior to an abortion to bring to the attention of the woman (a) the nature and risks of the operation and alternative treatments and (b) the way in which the operation affects the foetus.

Mr. Sackville: It is normal clinical practice to inform a patient about the risks of any operation and possible alternative courses of action. If a woman wishes to have information concerning the foetus we would expect whatever information is appropriate to be provided. The abortion counselling guidance in the Department's circular HC(77)26 is extant.

Birmingham General Hospital

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is proposing to take following the submission to her by South Birmingham community health council of the Audit Commission report into the closure of medical beds at Birmingham general hospital.

Mr. Sackville: The Audit Commission report, along with other evidence, will be taken into account in reaching a decision on the proposed changes to health services in South Birmingham.

NHS (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of capital expenditure in the NHS in the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what was the split between hospital building and equipment.

Mr. Sackville: Gross national health service capital expenditure for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 was £1,603 million, £1,668 million and £2,303 million respectively.

In 1990-91 capital spending within the hospital and community health services was divided as follows:

	Per cent.
Building and engineering works	61·3
Equipment and furniture	12·8
Vehicles	1·6
Other	24·4

Figures for later years are not yet available.

Azapropazone

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure on Azapropazone in cash terms, and as expenditure per 1,000 population in each NHS region and health district in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney [Holding answer 19 January 1993]: Azapropazone is currently manufactured by one company. The release of the data requested would indicate the company's trading position and could affect the company's business. It is therefore considered commercially confidential.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pâté de Foie Gras

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 9 November to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies), Official Report, column 610, if he will provide the figures for imports of pâté de foie gras for 1992.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is not yet available. Provisional data for the whole of 1992 is likely to become available from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in mid-February. Upon receipt of the information I shall write to the hon. Member again.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the controls on the production of pâté de foie gras in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: Pâté de foie gras is not produced in the United Kingdom and there are therefore no specific controls on production methods. Were anyone to propose starting foie gras production, the Government would wish to introduce welfare rules to ensure that force feeding was not permitted.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest number of cattle born after July 1988 that have now been certified as having contracted BSE.

Mr. Soames: At 22 January 1993, 1,197 cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy had been confirmed in Great Britain in cattle born after 18 July 1988. Investigations into many of these cases are continuing but it is clear that most had access to feed containing ruminant protein. All the evidence continues to show the ban on feeding such material to ruminants will ultimately eradicate bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Salmonella

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 28 October 1992, Official Report, column 687, whether salmonella testing on eggs and poultry that takes place in the country of origin is to a similar standard as that required in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: There are no harmonised rules for the salmonella testing of poultry within the European Community. A number of member states, including the United Kingdom, have introduced testing programmes of differing standards. With effect from 1 January 1994, all member states will have to comply with the requirements of directive 92/117/EEC which includes rules for the control of salmonella in poultry breeding flocks.

Milk

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the milk quota regulations and administration that will follow the winding-up of the Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. Curry: New EC regulations on milk quotas will come into effect on 1 April 1993. The Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1991 will be amended as soon as the detailed EC rules have been agreed. These regulations will be further amended once a decision has been taken on the future arrangements for carrying out the administrative tasks which are currently performed on behalf of the Agriculture departments by the Milk Marketing Boards.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Italian Government introduced a quota scheme for milk; what was the original allocation for Italy; what it is at the present time; what assessment he has made of the reasons for the delay in implementation of milk quotas in Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Domestic legislation to implement in full the milk quota system in Italy by allocating quota to individual producers was passed by the Italian Parliament in November 1992. When milk quotas were introduced in the EC in 1984, Italy was allocated in total 8·8 million tonnes of wholesale quota and 1·1 million tonnes of direct sales quota. In the current quota year (1992-93) Italy has at its disposal 8·3 million tonnes and 0·7 million tonnes respectively. No satisfactory explanation has been given by the Italian Government for the delay in fully implementing the quota system in Italy. The enforcement of the EC quota regulations is a matter for the EC Commission.

Beef

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for his Department to use the service provided at commercial rates by the data centre for beef.

Mr. Soames: The recently adopted Community requirements for identification and subsidy controls do not require any great increase in the need for centralised computerised systems. The animal data centre would have to demonstrate that it was more efficient and cost effective than other interested organisations to obtain any work that was put out to tender.

Fisheries

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the nations exempted from the Fishery Limits Act 1976 to fish in British national waters, together with the dates of exemption.

Mr. Curry: The countries designated under section 2(1) of the Fishery Limits Act 1976 as counties whose fishing boats may fish within British fishery limits, and the dates of their designation, are Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Republic of Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands (1983) and Spain and Portugal (1986) although under the EC common fisheries policy Greece, Italy and Luxembourg have no quotas to fish in United Kingdom waters. Under their Act of Accession to the EC Spain and Portugal are currently limited to western waters. Under annual EC regulations fishing boats from the Faroes, Norway and Sweden may also fish in United Kingdom waters within the terms of bilateral fisheries agreements.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 28 October 1992, Official Report, columns 686-87, what further information is now available for farmers on CAP reform.

Mr. Curry: On 11 January a booklet on the allocation of quotas under the sheep annual premium scheme was sent to the majority (some 44,000) of sheep producers in England with the first round of allocations; we aim to deal with the second round of allocations to producers during February. An explanatory booklet, "CAP Reform in the Beef Sector" was sent to all registered beef producers on 26 January. In addition, a consultation document was sent to organisations representing the farming industry on 25 January covering aspects of implementation of the quota system in the livestock sector. Copies of all these documents have been placed in the Library of the House. Information on the implications of the integrated administration and control system will be made available as soon as possible.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the impact of GATT on CAP; and if he will make it his policy to get the relevant and appropriate information to the British farmer.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) on 30 November 1992 at column 59. My colleagues and I have regularly addressed the relationship of a GATT deal to the CAP in our contacts with farmers.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy, when further reforms to the agricultural industry are being considered, to increase the lead time to represent one seasonal cycle of the particular commodity involved.

Mr. Curry: When reforms are being considered, my right hon. Friend and I make every effort to ensure that the timing of their eventual implementation is as helpful as possible to farmers.

Hill Farmers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the income levels and prospects of hill farmers, in the light of changes in hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Income levels of hill farmers were fully considered during the recently completed autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands. I have nothing further to add to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Lloyd) on 10 December at column 757.

Slaughterhouses

7. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of the effectiveness of veterinary surgeons in identifying ante-mortem diseases including salmonellosis, listerosis and leptospirosis in the course of examining animals at slaughterhouses.

Mr. Soames: Veterinary surgeons are specifically trained to identify clinical signs of all animal disease. In the course of examining animals at slaughterhouses, veterinary surgeons make use of that training, and their experience in hygiene, pathology, bacteriology, parasitology, physiology and animal husbandry to detect diseases and conditions which may present a risk to the handlers of meat and the ultimate consumer, and which may not be detectable by routine post-mortem inspection.

Wool

44. Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the withdrawal of the guaranteed price for wool; if he will consider the phasing out of the guaranteed price over two or three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have received a number of representations on this subject. The Government have no plans to reconsider abolishing the wool guarantee on 30 April, which will implement a decision announced more than four years ago.

Shamrock (GB) Ltd.

45. Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence his Department has of breach of quarantine regulations at Shamrock (GB) Ltd., and what action will be taken.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry became aware of an alleged breach of quarantine regulations at Shamrock (GB) Ltd. through a "World in Action" documentary, screened on 22 June 1992. A full investigation of the alleged incident has now been completed and it has been concluded that no criminal proceedings can be commenced. The alleged incident took place on 5 November 1991, so by the time the Ministry became aware of it, summary proceedings, which must be started within six months of the incident, were time barred. There was insufficient evidence to commence a prosecution for an indictable offence.

Fishing Industry (EC Funding)

46. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on recent progress in defining how EC objective 6 funding may be harnessed by fishing communities.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 11 January at column 623.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Recreation

27. Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what plans they have to increase recreational opportunities on Church Commission land.

Mr. Alison: While the Commissioners are not planning any special initiatives, they are always prepared to discuss and consider any worthwhile proposal.

Bishops

28. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners for how many bishops the Church Commissioners are currently making financial provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: To total of 44 Diocesan bishops (including the two archbishops) and 68 suffragan or assistant bishops.

Church Buildings

30. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what consideration is given to the use of church buildings for the use of other denominations, cultural or social housing before disposal is decided upon in the open market.

Mr. Alison: When a Church of England church is closed for regular public worship, it first becomes the duty of a committee of the diocese to seek a suitable alternative use for the redundant building. These committees are prepared to consider uses along the lines advocated by the hon. Member and there are, indeed, many examples where redundant churches have been put to such uses.

Redundant Churches (Muslim Communities)

31. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners how many redundant churches in the last five years have been made over to Muslim communities.

Mr. Alison: None.

Clergy (Early Retirement)

32. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners if he will make a statement of the current provision made for clergy taking early retirement.

Mr. Alison: There are two forms of provision which provide an immediate pension. Voluntary retirement may take place up to five years before the minimum normal pension age of 65; pension benefits are based on actual service but reduced for early commencement. Ill health retirement may occur at any age, subject to medical evidence; pension benefits are based on actual plus prospective service.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

39. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received on his proposed changes to legal aid entitlement; and what were the proportions in favour and against these proposals.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I have received a number of such representations, the majority of which are opposed to the proposals.

37. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his current estimate of expenditure on legal aid in the Greater London area for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is estimated that net legal aid expenditure in the Greater London area in 1992-93 will amount to £245 million.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what expenditure will be incurred in legal aid during the current year; what were the figures five, 10 and 15 years ago in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Net expenditure on legal aid for the current year is expected to be £1,107·0 million. Net expenditure incurred five, 10 and 15 years ago, at current prices, is as follows.

Net expenditure

1977-78	230·6
1982-83	374·4
1987-88	596·8
1992-93	1,107

Poll Tax

40. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many poll tax cases are currently awaiting court hearing.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of summonses issued for the non-payment of the community charge is included in the information supplied to the Library of the House. Not all summonses will result in a court hearing; some subsequently will be withdrawn before reaching court, but in the last recorded quarter 7,700 people attended court in connection with liability orders.

Commercial Court

41. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take steps to restore the commercial court to full strength; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Three nominations have been made recently to the pool of judges who may sit in the commercial court, bringing the number of nominees up to 11. Additional judges are therefore available for the Lord Chief Justice to deploy there, subject to other demands for judges of the Queen's Bench Division. For a more detailed and wideranging statement of the correct position, the hon. Member is referred to the Official Report, 19 January 1993 at column 353-58.

Crown and Commonwealth

42. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent discussions he has had with other Commonwealth Governments about the common constitutional link of the Crown.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

West Midlands Serious Crimes Squad

Ms. Short: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when a High Court judge will be made available in Birmingham to try a civil action arising from wrongful behaviour in the West Midlands serious crimes squad; what waiting period currently applies to civil cases requiring a High Court judge not involving the West Midlands serious crimes squad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It has not been possible to identify the case in question from the details provided by the hon. Member. Most of the unlisted Queen's Bench Division cases being received by Birmingham crown court are being warned for trial during the period 21 April to 30 June 1993. However, if the length of the case referred to is likely to exceed two weeks it is possible that it will be heard after the long vacation.

Inquests (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department by what method inquest juries are selected in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The method used to select jurors to serve on coroners' juries in Northern Ireland is the same as that which applies to the summoning of jurors to serve in criminal cases. That is, the selection is based on a system of random computer selection.

In practice, this means that when a coroner requires a jury to be summoned, he arranges to obtain a list of names taken sequentially from the jury list maintained for the county court division within which the inquest is to be held. That list is compiled by random computer selection of electors resident within that division who are eligible to serve as jurors. A sufficient number of jurors will be summoned to allow a jury to be convened; a coroner's jury is required by statute to consist of between not less than seven and not more than 11 persons.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will re-examine the way in which inquests are conducted in Northern Ireland in the light of the inquest into the death of Seamus McElwaine.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no reason to believe that the inquest into the death of Seamus McElwaine was conducted other than regularly and in accordance with the established practice at inquests. Accordingly, I do not consider that the proceedings at this inquest necessitate a re-examination of the conduct of inquests in Northern Ireland.

Independent Tribunals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he is taking to ensure more people from ethnic minorities in Bradford are appointed to all tribunals under the independent tribunal service; if he will give the present composition of all tribunals serving Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To encourage more ethnic minority practitioners to come forward for consideration, the Lord Chancellor has made widely available to ethnic minority practitioners and representative groups the booklet which sets out the requirements for each appointment and describes the judicial appointments system generally.

The Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint to judicial office those best qualified, regardless of sex, ethnic origin, political affiliation or religion and appointments must be justified on merit. The Lord Chancellor appoints only the legal chairmen of the tribunals under the independent tribunal service.

Information held on the ethnic origin of 36 members of the social security appeal tribunal in Bradford shows that three out of the 36 are from ethnic minorities. Of the 69 members of the panel for the disability appeal tribunal covering Bradford six are of ethnic origin.

Legal Advice

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to introduce a legal advice scheme in county courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no plans to extend the legal aid scheme to provide a court-based advice service.

Judges

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judges have been convicted of a criminal offence in each year since 1972; and what was the nature of the offence.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not readily available. The Lord Chancellor expects that judges will draw information about convictions to his notice. Information is then kept on the individual records of the judge concerned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC Official Languages

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to reduce the number of languages used within the European Community as official languages.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None.

Philippines (Visas)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications were received for settlement visas for spouses from the Philippines during 1992; and how many were granted.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information is not available in London. I have asked the British embassy in Manila to provide the answer and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office shortly.

Security Council (United Kingdom Seat)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on discussions he has had on the United Kingdom's permanent seat on the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Reform and revitalisation of United Nations institutions and the United Nations secretariat is a current subject of discussions in New York and in various bilateral and other meetings. The United Nations special committee on the charter regularly discusses Security Council reform at its meetings. Cuba and Libya have been active in recent years in pressing the case for abolition of the veto. The wish of Japan, currently a Security Council member, to become a permanent member is well known. At Maastricht, we agreed that Britain and France, as permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, will in the execution of their functions ensure the defence of the positions and the interests of the union without prejudice to their responsibilities under the provisions of the United Nations charter.

Mr. Sheikh Riaz Ahmad

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response the United Kingdom post in Paris has received from the French authorities concerning the case of Mr. Sheikh Riaz Ahmad, a British citizen, of Bradford, about whom the Secretary of State wrote to the hon. Member for Bradford, West, on 4 January last; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British Consulate-General at Lille has received a report from the French frontier police on their refusal to allow Mr. Ahmed to land. This indicates Mr. Ahmed was refused entry because he was not able to prove his nationality. Since this explanation is less than satisfactory we are seeking clarification from the French authorities. I am in correspondence with the hon. Gentleman about this case and will write again when I have a further report.

Yugoslav Republics (Embargoes)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the terms of each of the arms embargoes and arms export restrictions currently in force in respect of each former Yugoslav republic.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations Security Council resolution 713 (1991) imposes a complete embargo on deliveries of weapons and military equipment to the republics of the former Yugoslavia until the Security Council decides otherwise. Additionally, United Nations Security Council resolutions 757 and 787 (1992) prohibit any trade with Serbia and Montenegro.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The following is the information:

(d) Economic and Finance Council—15 February
The Danish Presidency work programme (open debate)
National actions to promote economic recovery in Europe and review of convergence programmes
7th VAT directive
Follow-up to Edinburgh conclusions on future financing of the Community

3. The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 1-2 February. It will commence with an open debate on the Danish Presidency work programme. On Enlargement, the Council will approve arrangements for the opening session of accession negotiations, and on EEA, the Council will be asked to approve a mandate for the Commission to negotiate with EFTA an additional protocol to the EEA agreement. Ministers will then discuss Irael; East/Central Europe; Former Yugoslavia; the GATT and Commercial Defence Instruments. Cocoa will also be discussed.

4. The Internal Market Council will meet on 8 February and will discuss completion of the Internal Market; the Sutherland report and Abolition of frontier controls. Regulation of control of conformity of third country imports will also be discussed. Other agenda items are for clearance as points only.

5. The Agriculture Council will meet on 9-10 February. Ministers will discuss the price-fixing proposals for 1993-94; banana market regime; agricultural aspects of the GATT negotiations; transitional measures for Portugal; aid for durum wheat producers and aid for sheepmeat producers. They may also discuss production aid for processed tomato products.

6. The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 15 February to discuss the ECOFIN work programme and continue discussions on actions to promote economic recovery and to follow up the agreement of the Edinburgh European Council on the future financing of the Community. There will be an open debate on the Danish Presidency work programme and the proposal to amend the 7th VAT directive (special VAT regime for second-hand goods, works of art, antique and collectors' items) is also scheduled for discussion.

EC Directives

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken and is proposing to take in response to the letter of Commissioner Van Miert of 23 December 1992 concerning the implementation of directives 75/440/EEC and 79/869/EEC.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

In our response we shall set out what has been done in the United Kingdom to implement these directives. In accordance with the usual practice of the Commission, we treat such correspondence as in confidence between the Commission and ourselves.

Environmental Claims

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to bring forward his proposals to amend the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 in relation to environmental claims.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

Many environmental claims are already within the scope of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. We intend to amend the Act to put it beyond doubt that all such claims are covered as soon as parliamentary time permits.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Administrative Work

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress he has made regarding the location of his Department's administrative work in Cardiff; what influence the market testing procedure will have on such progress; what representations he has had from local authorities, the legal profession and others regarding the ultimate location of this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I have decided that the court procedures for enforcing the payment of unpaid parking charges, arising under the Road Traffic Act 1991, will be carried out at a parking enforcement centre attached to Cardiff county court. About 20 additional staff will eventually be required.

We envisaged that the Lord Chancellor's Department's pay and superannuation unit, consisting of some 40 staff, might be centralised and located in Cardiff. However, the position has been considered again as part of the market testing exercise in this area, and centralisation is now likely to take place in London. No representations have been received on this.

ENVIRONMENT

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Howard: KPMG Management Consultants have been awarded four contracts by my Department over the past 12 months. These are:

Relocation of Department of the Environment headquarters staff in London (awarded 15 April 1992);

Planning Inspectorate executive agency independent business advisor (awarded 13 May 1992);

Department of the Environment Relocation: Consultancy on Advanced Office Support System (awarded 21 May 1992);

Proposal for the Wirral Business Enterprise Centre (awarded 1 October 1992).

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to take account of the representations received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution before the consultation period on discharges licences for the Sellafield site began; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution received approximately 38,000 representations shortly before the statutory public consultation period began on 16 November 1992. The comments made will be taken into consideration by the authorising departments in their determination of BNFL's applications.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters of objection to the application for new discharges licences for the Sellafield site have been received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution from (a) statutory consultees, (b) local authorities and (c) individual members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has received approximately 75,000 letters concerning this matter of which it is estimated that more than 50,000 are objecting to the proposals. Of the total received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution there have been eight representations by statutory consultees and over 100 local authorities have written in.

Footpaths

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the procedure for extinguishing footpaths; what simple or local appeal or arbitration procedure exists to deal with requests for diverting or extinguishing footpaths; and what arrangements are made for the legal costs involved.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities have powers to make orders to stop up or divert public paths. Any order made must be advertised since it affects public rights. Although some 70 per cent. of orders are confirmed locally, if there are objections which cannot be resolved, the order may be passed to the Secretary of State for confirmation, and a local inquiry may be held. We are introducing regulations to enable authorities to recoup their administrative expenses from an applicant for an order; otherwise, parties are generally expected to meet their own costs.

Lambeth Council

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he has offered to Lambeth council to deal with matters raised by the report of the chief executive under section 5 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Robin Squire: None. The primary responsibility for the prevention and detection of fraud lies with the management of local authorities. They should have good systems of internal control and effective internal audit. The auditor has the responsibility of checking the financial control systems of a local authority.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many submissions were received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on 25 January, in response to British Nuclear Fuel's application for authorisation for the new thermal oxide reprocessing plant, and associated facilities, at Sellafield; how many of these submissions were in support of BNFL applications; and what proportion of the total submissions came from abroad.

Mr. Maclean: On 25 January, HMIP received some 16,000 representations, the majority of which appear to support the proposals, but at present HMIP does not have a detailed breakdown of these figures.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account his decision on the authorisation for the licensing of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield will make of the letter sent to him in October by the chairman of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee on the British Nuclear Fuels plc proposals to implement a curie equivalence substitution plan for the management of nuclear waste arising from reprocessing of foreign spent fuel at Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 January, at column 769.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 30 October 1992, Official Report, column 859, if he has yet received the report of the nuclear waste borehole public inquiry in Cumbria.

Mr. Baldry: There will be no report to the Secretary of State in this case. The planning appeals concerned will be decided by an inspector. That is a matter for the Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency, and I have arranged for the chief executive to reply.

Letter from Mr. H. S. Crow to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 1 February 1992:

The Secretary of State has asked me to provide the reply to your Parliamentary Question about the nuclear waste borehole inquiry in Cumbria, as this is a matter for the Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency.

The planning appeals by British Nuclear Fuels, relating to proposed exploratory boreholes near Gosforth, are to be decided by the Inspector who held the inquiry, as arranged, in November. The Inspector, Mr. P. Burden (who was appointed following the illness of the Inspector originally appointed, Mr. P. Rosser), is concluding his consideration of the case, and I expect his decision to be issued shortly.

Housing Associations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consideration he has given to the ability of people in low-paid employment to meet the level of rents for housing association properties implied by the proposed reduction in housing association grants by 1995-96;

(2) if he will undertake a full assessment of the consequences of the proposed reduction in housing allocation grant rate to 55 per cent. on the financial viability and viability of the housing association movement and the ability of individual housing associations to attract private funding.

Mr. Baldry: No decision on grant rates for 1995-96 has been taken yet. That decision will be taken in the light of a full consideration of a number of factors, including the likely impact on rents and the ability of housing associations to attract private finance.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to preserve and sustain the current scale and diversity of the housing association movement and to ensure that the housing allocation grant funding levels set by his Department will reflect and further this objective.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's expenditure plans announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement more than meet the commitment in our manifesto to spend nearly £6 billion through the Housing Corporation over the three years to 1994-95. The value of diversity is certainly one of the factors which we will take into account in making decisions about future levels of housing association grant.

Planning Appeals

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the mechanism for challenging planning appeal decisions and costs thereof; and what proposals he has to change it.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no recent representations about the mechanism for challenging planning appeal decisions. Decisions on the award of costs resulting from a planning appeal may be challenged by seeking leave of the High Court for an application for judicial review. My right hon. and learned Friend has received two recent representations in favour of a simpler procedure, but has no proposals to change it.

Rural Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete his consideration of the desirability of any changes to the legal and financial framework for the provision of rural water and sewerage services.

Mr. Maclean: We expect to complete our consideration in the course of this session.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land has been affected by opencast mining in the last 10 years; how much of such land was green field and how much despoiled or derelict; and of the despoiled or derelict land, how much was subsequently returned to useful purposes.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally. According to statistics compiled by the County Planning Officers Society's committee No. 3, however, during the last four years 6,490 hectares of land received planning permission for opencasting in England, of which 1,309 hectares was derelict. The equivalent figures for Scotland and Wales are respectively 2,525 hectares of which 563 was derelict and 635 hectares, of which 364 was derelict. The 1988 minerals survey shows that between 1982 and 1984 4,041 hectares of land granted permission for opencasting was reclaimed satisfactorily and only 39 hectares reclaimed unsatisfactorily. All permissions for opencasting carry a requirement fully to restore the land.

Housing Benefit Subsidy

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each housing authority the amount of housing benefit subsidy paid to the authority and the amount of housing benefit paid from the housing revenue account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have deposited in the Library of the House a copy of a table showing the information requested by the hon. Member. The table shows for 1992-93 each authority's estimated expenditure on rent rebates debited to the housing revenue account, the amount of that expenditure which is not eligible for subsidy, the estimated contribution from the HRA towards the cost of rent rebates granted and the estimated amount of HRA subsidy claimed on rent rebates.

Residential Homes

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that community care homes, which are occupied exclusively by severely mentally impaired adults, qualify for 100 per cent. rebate under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978, after 1 April 1993; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to exercise his powers under section 13 of the Local Government Finance Act 1992 to make regulations reducing the council tax payable in respect of persons resident in registered charitable residential care or nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Rating (Disabled Persons) Act ceased to apply to domestic accommodation when domestic rates were abolished, and is of no relevance to the council tax.

There are no special council tax provisions for occupied dwellings owned by charities. It is right that charities should continue to receive relief from non-domestic rates, because these are a tax on the premises which a charity needs to conduct its own business. But the council tax is a tax paid by residents, whether directly or through their landlord. There is no reason why some residents should be specially treated simply because their landlord is a charity. Instead we focus help by reference to individuals' needs through the discount and benefit systems.

Registered care and nursing homes will benefit from a number of council tax reliefs. Care and nursing home patients, like severly mentally impaired people, are not counted towards the personal element of the tax. Many registered care and nursing homes will therefore get a 25 per cent. discount. Most will probably have their bill reduced by one valuation band in respect of facilities for disabled residents, and very many are likely to qualify for substantial amounts of transitional relief. Care homes, like other large dwellings, will also benefit from banding arrangements which mean that the bill for the most expensive property in an area is limited to three times that for the cheapest.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the latest developments regarding the establishment of the proposed European Environment Agency; and if it is his intention to bid for the agency to be located in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: During our presidency of the EC Council of Ministers, we made strenuous efforts to overcome the blockages which have prevented the establishment of the European Environment Agency, and at the December Environment Council, 11 Council member states agreed to press the Commission to speed up preparatory work. As a first step, the Commission have called a meeting of senior officials on 9 February.

The United Kingdom has bid for the agency to be located in Cambridge.

Marine Pollution Control

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the whole area of marine pollution control, as recommended by the second report of the Environment Committee of 1991-92 (HC17) on coastal zone protection and planning, in the light of the grounding of the supertanker MV Braer.

Mr. Maclean: The Government response (CM 2011 July 1992) to the Environment Committee report stressed the need for different agencies to deal with various marine pollution control functions and pointed to their good record of close co-operation, particularly over oil and chemical pollution from ships. Lord Donaldson's inquiry will no doubt be considering whether the MV Braer incident should lead to any changes in these views.

Urban Priority Areas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking in his review of urban priority areas to ensure that local authorities which have both prosperous areas and areas of acute deprivation do not lose priority status as a result of the existence of the prosperous areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: In considering information about the incidence of urban needs, we will study results from census and other data at three levels—local authority areas, wards and census enumeration districts, the last covering about 500 persons.

Tyneside Clinical Waste Incinerator

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central of 15 July 1992, Official Report, column 836, if he is now in a position to announce his decision on the Tyneside clinical waste incinerator application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The inspector's report on this application, which is the subject of an appeal by Northumbrian Water Group plc, was received by the Secretary of State on 24 September 1992. Together with the report of the assessor, who advised the inspector on technical issues, the report runs to some 200 pages. It raises a number of complex issues, all of which have to be carefully considered before a decision can be issued.

Good progress is being made and the decision will be issued as soon as it is practicable to do so.

Architects (Registration) Acts

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take following the review by Mr. John Warne CB of the Architects (Registration) Acts; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have today published the report of the independent review of the Acts, which was undertaken following a request by the Architects Registration Council of the United Kingdom. I am grateful for the full co-operation which had been given to the review by ARCUK and the profession generally, and to those who responded in the public consultation on this matter.

The review's conclusion is clear: that statutory registration of architects has brought no added benefit to the public, to consumers, or to the profession itself and that there is no reason why architects uniquely amongst the construction professions should be regulated by statute. The established arrangements for self-regulation through the chartered professional institutions provide for satisfactory protection of the public interest, and of consumers. The Government accepts the report's conclusions. I have therefore decided that statutory registration should be abolished at the earliest legislative opportunity.

Until such time as the Acts have been repealed, the legal restriction on the use of the title of architect will remain and ARCUK will continue to perform its registration, enforcement and other functions in the usual way.

International Development and Co-operation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policy initiatives he is planning to undertake to promote international development and co-operation in the next six months; what meetings he is planning to attend; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 29 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend will continue to play a full part in the work of the European Community and other international fora. We welcome the establishment of the Sustainable Development Commission as envisaged at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio last year. My right hon. and learned Friend is also taking forward the initiatives announced by the Prime Minister at UNCED: the Darwin initiative for survival of species and preparations for an international conference of non-governmental organisations to exchange experience on the practical implementation of sustainable development to be held later this year. He will attend the global technology partnership conference in Birmingham in March, which was also announced by the Prime Minister at UNCED.

Water Charges

80. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what review OFWAT is making of flexibility in infrastructure charges.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The Director General of Water Services has announced his intention to undertake a fundamental review of infrastructure charges as part of the overall review of water company charges in 1994. He will shortly be issuing a consultation paper which will set out the options for change to infrastructure charges.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the funding from urban partnership he intends to provide to projects aimed at benefiting the ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Robin Squire: Each bid for urban partnership funding will be assessed on its merits against the criteria set out in our guidance to local authorities.

Council Debts, Gloucestershire

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the indebtedness of (a) Gloucestershire county council, (b) Tewkesbury borough council, (c) Cotswold district council and (d) Cheltenham borough council in each year since 1980.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is as follows:

Total external debt (temporary and longer-term)

Year end	Gloucestershire £000	Tewkesbury £000	Cotswold £000	Cheltenham £000
1979-80	16,100	19,900	22,000	26,600
1980-81	20,300	20,500	23,000	28,100
1981-82	21,400	19,900	20,700	26,600
1982-83	25,300	18,600	20,400	n/a
1983-84	23,900	15,300	16,300	n/a
1984-85	23,800	18,200	13,900	n/a
1985-86	45,900	14,900	13,900	n/a
1986-87	53,384	11,740	19,651	n/a

Local Government Review

149. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further guidance he is giving to the Local Government Commission for England in relation to sections 17, 18 and 19 of the policy guidance notes published last June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: We do not propose to issue further guidance on these matters at present.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he will make to transfer assets and liabilities from local authorities which cease to exist as a result of the Local Government Commission's review to existing or new authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Act 1992 provides for the Secretary of State to establish one or more residuary bodies if necessary to take over any property, rights or liabilities, and any related functions from local authorities which cease to exist as a result of the Local Government Commission's recommendations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from councils in Oxfordshire concerning disparities in the proportion of local authority budgets funded by Government grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Neither of the representations which I received from councils in Oxfordshire addressed the question of disparities in the proportion of local authority budgets funded by Government grant.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outcome of the consultation on the local government finance settlement for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1993, column 854]: I regret that the tax base information listed in the exemplifications for Manchester, Stockport, Trafford, Salford, Barnsley, Wakefield, Crawley, Tandridge, Bolsover and Ashfield does not properly reflect boundary changes. Surrey, West Sussex, Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire county councils are also affected. There are consequent changes in the authorities' revenue support grant entitlements and, because the tax base is used to apportion certain levies, in the authorities' standard spending assessments. In most cases the changes are not significant. I shall publish revised figures as soon as possible. My Department has today written to the authorities affected explaining the position to them.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines the Commonwealth Development Corporation has developed to minimise the environmental impacts of tobacco plantations or processing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 29 January 1993]: Assessment of the environmental aspects of proposed investments is an integral part of the Commonwealth Development Corporation's project appraisal and approval procedures. CDC has agreed that it should make no new investments in tobacco plantations or processing. Past investments were made in accordance with CDC's environmental guidelines which are currently under review.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Autumn Statement

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish (a) the working assumptions on outstanding central Government debt and average interest rates underlying the entries for central Government debt interest in table 2A.3 of the "Autumn Statement", Cm 2096, (b) a ready reckoner of the effects on such expenditure of increments of £1 billion in outstanding central Government debt and of increments of one percentage point in average interest rates on such central Government debt, (c) the working assumptions on outstanding local authority debt and average interest rates on such local authority debt underlying the entries for local authority debt interest in table 2A.11 and (d) a ready reckoner of the effects on such expenditure of increments of £1 billion in outstanding local authority debt and of increments of one percentage point on average interest rates on such local authority debt.

Mr. Portillo: The debt interest projections shown in tables 2A.3 and 2A.11 of the "Autumn Statement" were based on the working assumption that the public sector borrowing requirement is £37 billion in 1992-93, 7 per cent. of gross domestic product in 1993-94, and then falls as the economy recovers.

It is not conventional practice to publish projections of interest rates.

The effects of increments to the stock of debt or to interest rates on payments of debt interest will depend upon the composition of the outstanding debt and upon the average cost of funding.

Ready reckoners for local authority debt interest payments will similarly depend on the composition of local authority debt and the cost of funding.

Antiques

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the VAT revenue in 1991 under the special scheme; what estimate he has made of the sum which would be raised from the proposed 5 per cent. extra VAT on imported antiques under the new EC proposals; what was the estimated cost of raising the VAT under the special scheme; and what is the estimated cost of raising the additional 5 per cent. VAT on imported antiques.

Sir John Cope: There is insufficient information on which to base an estimate of the revenue or the cost of administration of the special scheme.

Applying VAT at a rate of 5 per cent. to imported works of art, antiques and collectors' items would probably raise less than £20 million.

Fuel (Tax Differentials)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of (a) the environmental and (b) the fiscal effects of his policy on tax differentials between diesel and other fuels.

Sir John Cope: Duty is charged on road fuels at rates which not only raise sufficient revenue but also take account of environmental considerations.

The environmental benefits of diesel rather than petrol consumption are not entirely clear cut. Diesel engines are more efficient than petrol, so they emit less carbon dioxide per mile travelled. But this advantage has to be weighed against higher emissions of nitrogen oxide and particulates (soot/smoke) than from a petrol engine fitted with a three-way catalytic converter.

It is estimated that ending the diesel duty differential with unleaded petrol would yield around £65 million in 1993-94; ending the differential with leaded petrol would yield £555 million in 1993-94.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the decision at the last Budget to widen the tax differential between diesel and other fuels on (a) the use of diesel fuel and (b) on the levels of revenue generated from diesel use.

Sir John Cope: The last Budget increased the duty on diesel and unleaded petrol by 4·5 per cent., in line with inflation. The 7·5 per cent. increase on leaded petrol widened the tax differential between diesel and leaded petrol (duty and consequential VAT) from 4·7 p per litre to 5·8p per litre. The impact of this on diesel consumption is very difficult to quantify. In the short run, however, few motorists will have had time to respond to the wider tax differential by switching to vehicles with diesel engines so the impact on diesel consumption is likely to have been insignificant. Accordingly, we do not expect the real increase on the leaded petrol duty to affect the yield from diesel duty from the present financial year.

Departmenal Employees

Mr. Cann: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people over the age of 60 years began employment in each Government Department in 1992.

Mr. Portillo: Approximately 150 people aged 60 and over began employment in the non-industrial home civil service during the period 1 January to 30 September 1992. Information for the final quarter of the year is not yet available.

Details of the numbers recruited into individual Departments could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Premium Savings Bonds

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to maintain the minimum payment for purchases of premium savings bonds for persons under the age of 16 years at £10 after 1 February.

Mr. Nelson: As announced on 12 November 1992, the minimum purchase for those buying premium bonds on behalf of children under 16 rose from £10 to £100 on 1 February. There are no present plans for further changes.

VAT

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what repayments of VAT in respect of VAT relief for bad debts were made in the last financial year for which figures are available; and what sum he estimates will be repaid in respect of subsequent financial years.

Sir John Cope: In order to keep burdens on business to a minimum, claims for bad debt relief are included with all other amounts of tax entered in traders' VAT returns and separate figures are not available.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the 12 month delay on repayment of VAT in respect of bad debts was decided; what representations he has received on this point; and whether he has the matter under review.

Sir John Cope: Section 11(1)(c), Finance Act 1990, provided for a period of two years, beginning with the date of the supply, to elapse to qualify for bad debt relief. Following representations, that waiting period was reduced to twelve months by section 15(1), Finance Act 1991.

Representations regarding the length of the waiting period are received from time to time and the matter is kept under review.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what ruling HM Customs and Excise has made on the VAT liability of controlled circulation magazines mailed to other member states of the EC with a positive rate of VAT; and what are the reasons for this decision.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Since 1 January 1993, under the 6th EC VAT directive as amended the tax treatment of goods supplied by VAT-registered traders to non-VAT registered customers in other member states under the distance selling arrangements, including mail order, has been dependent on thresholds. Each member state has adopted a threshold of either 35,000 or 100,000 ecu. If sales to a member state are beneath that member state's threshold then VAT in the member state of origin is chargeable; in the case of supplies of magazines from the United Kingdom, this would be zero. If sales exceed the threshold laid down by a member state, then all sales to that member state are chargeable at the appropriate rate of VAT in that member state and the trader will need to register for VAT or appoint a tax representative in that member state.

Where supplies are made to customers who are VAT registered in another EC member state, the removal from the United Kingdom may be zero-rated if the VAT registration number of the consignee is shown on the tax invoice, and tax will be due on acquisition by the customer.

These arrangements follow the normal rules that goods are subject to VAT in the member state of destination. Until 31 December 1992 tax was supposed to be paid in accordance with the law in the state where the purchaser was. Since 1 January 1993 the thresholds are a simplification measure so that distance sellers supplying small quantities can apply VAT at the rate applied in the country of origin.

Clearing Banks

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current clearing banks' base rate in the United Kingdom; what information he has about the nearest equivalent in the other member countries of the European Community; and what the equivalent figures were on 7 September 1992.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 29 January 1993]: The clearing banks' base rate in the United Kingdom on 29 January was 6 per cent. compared with 10 per cent. on the 7 September 1992. Commercial bank rates and official rates in other countries are not strictly comparable, so the talble compares three month market interest rates on the dates specified.

Short-term (three months) interest rates

	7 September 1992	29 January 1993
United Kingdom	10·3	6·3
Belgium	9·8	8·4
Denmark	11·2	13·0
Spain	13·7	14·0
France	10·5	12·6
Germany	9·8	8·5
Greece	20·0	24·0
Ireland	10·8	24·0
Italy	17·5	12·2
Netherlands	9·8	8·2
Portugal	14·8	16·0

Importers and Exporters (Complaints)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to set up an independent complaints procedure for those importers and exporters who have complaints about administration by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 February 1993]: Customs and Excise reviewed its complaints procedure in 1991. As a result it has improved its internal system for handling complaints. Details of how to complain are given in the leaflet "Complaints against Customs and Excise" (Notice 1000). It is intended to introduce an independent tribunal system for customs matters by 1 January 1995, in line with EC agreement.

Bloodstock (VAT)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the Prime Minister's reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 18 January, Official Report, column 21, in regard to the level of VAT on bloodstock in the United Kingdom and the rates levied in France and Ireland, what submission the Paymaster General has had from the Jockey Club on this subject; and when he expects there to be a ministerial statement on the outcome of his consideration of their submission.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 28 January 1993]: Representatives of the horseracing industry have made proposals for changes to the rules of racing intended to make ownership more of a business activity and therefore allow some owners of racehorses to register for VAT. Customs and Excise has drawn up a technical memorandum of understanding to be agreed with the industry as soon as possible.

International Co-operation and Development

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policy initiatives he is planning to undertake in the next six months to promote international co-operation and development; what meetings he is planning to attend; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 29 January 1993]: Over the next six months, my right hon. Friend will continue to work to strengthen international co-operation, in particular with EC and G7 colleagues. He will continue to press for a satisfactory conclusion to the GATT Uruguay round and to seek to improve the terms of debt relief available to the poorest countries. In the EC, my right hon. Friend will press for progress in implementing the package of measures agreed at the Edinburgh summit to promote economic recovery and in making the single market work effectively. With G7 colleagues he will be working to reduce obstacles to sustainable growth and hence foster employment. My right hon. Friend plans to attend meetings with EC colleagues as well as the EBRD annual meeting in London, the G7/IMF/World Bank meetings in Washington and the Economic summit in Tokyo.

Income Distribution

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to publish data on the distribution of income which follows on from the 1984-85 analysis published in "Economic Trends", November 1987.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 1 February 1993]: There are no plans at present to update the 1984-85 analysis.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Water Privatisation

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of state for Northern Ireland if he intends to introduce the sale of water services in Northern Ireland in the same manner as in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No decision has yet been taken on how the sale will take place. Options for the method of sale are currently being addressed as part of a consultancy study into a range of major privatisation issues.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he intends to publish the feasibility study currently being undertaken by private consultants into the privatisation of water in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to have the results of the feasibility study into the privatisation of water in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It is expected that the consultancy study will be completed by the end of March 1993. The study was commissioned on a confidential basis because of the commercial sensitives of the issues involved. I therefore have no plans to publish it.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the future employment of people working in the water services industry in Northern Ireland is included in the feasibility study at present being undertaken by consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The future employment of staff does not fall within the terms of reference for the consultancy study.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for a period of public consultation following the acceptance of the report by private consultants into the privatisation of water in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Water privatisation will require primary legislation and the proposal for a draft Order in Council will be published for consultation in the normal way.

Trade

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has for the value of trade in each direction between the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland for the whole of 1992, or for as many months as information is available.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not available from United Kingdom Government sources. However, I refer the hon. Member to table E of "External Trade" (September 1992) published by the Central Statistics Office, Dublin, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Education Reforms

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the implementation of the Government's education reforms; and what plans he has to meet representatives of the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools.

Mr. Hanley: I have received a large number of written representations on a wide range of topics related to the education reforms from a variety of sources: boards of governors, teachers, principals, teachers' unions and parents. These have been mainly concerned about the pressures created by the implementation of curriculum and assessment changes and I have taken measures, where necessary, to ease these pressures. I have also met a number of groups on reforms-related matters.

I will be meeting the CCMS in the near future, and as part of the present wide consultation about aspects of implementation I will study carefully any representations which the council or any educational interests wish to make.

Regional Development Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much European regional development fund expenditure there has been in Northern Ireland in each year since 1984-85 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1984 prices.

Mr. Mates: The following amounts were received from the European regional development fund.

£ million

Financial year	Current prices	1984 prices
1984-85	17	17
1985-86	18	17
1986-87	23	21
1987-88	46	40
1988-89	47	38
1989-90	40	30
1990-91	49	35
1991-92	50	33

WALES

School Governors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many school governors there were in Wales on 1 April 1989.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

One-stop Shops

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on one-stop shops for business and technology information dissemination; what proposals he has to grant-aid such one-stop shops; and what arrangements he will make to monitor and evaluate their progress.

Sir Wyn Roberts: An enterprise and business support working group has been set up to consider how the delivery of business and technology advice and support, including information, can be improved. The group includes representatives of training and enterprise councils, local enterprise agencies, local authorities, the development agencies, chambers of commerce and other members of the business community in Wales. Their advice will cover the operation of one-stop shops and arrangements for monitoring and evaluation.

Business and Technology Information

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the local dissemination of business and technology information; and when he expects to announce pilot projects to further such local dissemination.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government attach great importance to the dissemination of business and technology information. Consequently, my Department is directly involved in the dissemination of business and technology information, along with many other organisations in Wales which do so with my support. These include local enterprise agencies and business advice centres, the training and enterprise councils, colleges and development agencies.

Specific initiatives include the Euro info centre set up with EC support. In addition, the Welsh Office, in collaboration with the DTI and local organisations, is involved in a number of technology transfer and awareness programmes. This work has covered a range of technology in special projects in areas such as expert and open systems; new materials and sensors together with programmes covering world-class manufacturing and best management practices.

These services are being further strengthened by Government and European support. Currently, my Department is supporting technology audits designed to identify commercially viable technology in five Welsh colleges and, through the EC STRIDE programme, support totalling £800,000 is being provided to three colleges and the WDA to enhance the services they provide to industry. Information on European research and technology developments will be disseminated through the relay centre project led by the WDA, which became fully operational throughout Wales in January 1993.

We have set up an enterprise and business support working group to advise us on how the delivery of these services to businesses in Wales can be improved.

Incineration Plants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to give specific financial assistance to local authorities in Wales to monitor emission levels from incineration plants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, operators of almost all incinerators with a capacity of under one tonne per hour require authorisation from their district council. The associated fees and charges are intended, in line with the "polluter pays" principle, to recover the reasonable administration, monitoring and inspection costs of local authorities.

A similar system applies in relation to larger incineration plant subject to the control of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many householders in Wales received home improvement grants during 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and how many have been paid to date in the current financial year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Home improvement grants under the 1985 Housing Act were replaced in July 1990 by a new renovation grant system. Grants completed under the earlier arrangements are detailed in the table.

Total number of grant completions under the Housing Act 1985

	Number
1989-90	19,818
1990-91	24,866
1991-92	6,394

Welsh Office Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 22 January, Official Report, column 454, what representations he has had from the British Printing Federation regional office covering Wales in relation to the routeing of responsibility for placing printing of Welsh Office contracts via the Central Office of Information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Certificate of Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils sat the certificate of education in each year since 1985.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers of candidates who sat the Certificate of Education from 1985 to 1992 are given in the table.

Number of candidates[1]

	Number
1985	2,611
1986	3,859
1987	6,252
1988	7,514

	Number
1989	8,612
1990	8,336
1991	8,038
1992	8,379

[1] Includes a small number of candidates sitting examinations in centres other than in schools.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the replacement of the certificate of education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This proposed change is an integral part of wider arrangements for the assessment of 16-year-olds, at the end of key stage 4. The changes are being made on the basis of advice which I sought from the School Examinations and Assessment Council. All pupils will in future be required to study each of the relevant national curriculum subjects in accordance with statutory programmes of study to the end of key stage 4. SEAC advised that the certificate of education does not meet those requirements.

Around 7,700 pupils in Wales are currently entered for the certificate of education. Most of those pupils should, in future, be well capable of achievement under the new GCSE arrangements. The minimum attainment level on the national curriculum 10 level scale for the award of a GCSE will be level 4—the performance expected for a typical 11-year-old. Pupils who are entered for the GCSE and who narrowly miss the GCSE award at level 4 will still be awarded a level 3, provided they have displayed evidence of that level of attainment in their examination.

The remainder of pupils expected to achieve levels 1 to 2—level 2 is the performance expected of a typical seven-year-old—in each of the national curriculum subjects will be assessed by teachers' own assessment. These pupils will represent a small minority at age 16 and teacher assessment is considered to be the most appropriate way of meeting their special and individual needs.

All performance at every attainment level will be recognised and recorded on an individual pupil's national record of achievement. The record is being developed by schools to reflect a pupil's total achievement, both academic and non-academic. The NRA is recognised by employers and colleges of further education in their selection of candidates for employment, training and further education courses.

The certificate of education will not be fully phased out until 1996. This phased programme will allow teachers maximum flexibility to manage the adjustment with sensitivity and in accordance with individual pupils' needs.

The full range of approved qualifications under Section 5 of the Education Reform Act 1988 for use by schools in Wales in 1995 will be listed as part of the annual consultation exercise with examining groups and LEAs. This consultation, administered through SEAC, is due to take place very shortly.

Disability (Schools)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered disabled teachers are employed by each local education authority; and what proportion of total teacher numbers this accounts for in each authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the numbers of registered disabled teachers is not held centrally.

Advance Factory Building

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures in terms of (a) units and (b) square metres to show advance factory building by the Welsh Development Agency by county for each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The amount of factory space provided either directly or through joint ventures by the Welsh Development Agency in each county since 1979 is as follows:

Help Helpline

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the Welsh health helpline will be operational outside normal office hours on (a) an answerphone and (b) an operational basis; and what proposals he has to monitor its effectiveness.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since its inception on 30 November 1992, Health Line Wales has been manned from 9 am to 5 pm every weekday, and an answerphone service operates outside those hours. All calls are monitored, and this information will be part of the evaluation of the service.

Health Service (Catering)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further progress he has to report on guidance to South Glamorgan health authority in relation to the suspended catering contract awarded to Gardner Merchant.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Further guidance will be issued to South Glamorgan health authority as soon as possible.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish an independent environment agency in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 15 July 1992, Official Report, column 857-58.

Offshore Emergencies

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are currently being undertaken by his Department to secure access to night-time helicopter coverage to deal with offshore emergencies off the coast of Wales and in the Irish sea between 1994 and 1996.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

Sea King SAR flights at RNAS Prestwick and RAF Chivenor will provide night-time search and rescue helicopter coverage off the coast of Wales and in the Irish sea for the period in question.

Welsh Economy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations he has had for public funding of Cardiff Business School Welsh economic research unit's proposed input-output model of the Welsh economy;

(2) what consultations he has had with the south Glamorgan training and enterprise council regarding public funding for the Cardiff Business School Welsh economic research unit's proposal for an input-output model of the Welsh economy.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A request for the Welsh Office to contribute to the funding of the model is being considered.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Professional Boxing

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to place statutory controls on professional boxing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans to place statutory controls on professional boxing. The responsibility for the management of individual activities rests with the governing bodies of sport.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set up an inquiry into the management of professional boxing and its medical control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans for such an inquiry. The British Boxing Board of Control has considerably enhanced its medical safeguards over the past year.

Tourist Bodies

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether, at the end of the term of office of the present incumbent, he will separate the posts of chairman of the English tourist board and chairman of the British Tourist Authority.

Mr. Key: The present arrangement, whereby the chairmanship of the British Tourist Authority and the chairmanship of the English tourist board are held by the same person, has worked well for the past eight years. The bringing together of these two posts has increased the effectiveness and efficiency of the two bodies, which complement each other's efforts on behalf of the tourism industry. I therefore have no plans to separate the posts.

Public Swimming Pools

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the council-owned public swimming pools which have been closed in 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Brooke: The Great Britain Sports Council estimate that the number of council owned swimming pools in the United Kingdom increased from around 1,100 in 1982 to 1,300 in 1992. In addition it is estimated that there are another 200 pools available with an element of community use. Closure figures are not readily available.

National Lottery

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to set the regime for tax and money for good causes for the national lottery so that the combined total is the same as that for the football pools; and if he will estimate the total of tax and money for other good causes from football pools.

Mr. Brooke: Taxation regimes are a matter for the Chancellor. The amount of pool betting duty paid in 1991-92 was £319·46 million. The pools companies contributed over £20 million to the Football Trust in 1991-92, following the reduction of 2·5 per cent. in pool betting duty introduced in the 1990 Budget. A further reduction of 2·5 per cent. in the 1991 Budget, combined with the 5p levy on every £1 staked by players, yielded over £60 million for the Foundation for Sport and the Arts in the same year.

TRANSPORT

InterCity

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what expectation for surplus revenue has been set down for British Rail's InterCity operations for the next five year planning period.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is currently reviewing the financial projections of all its businesses.

Shipping

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many ships were classified in the British Register of Merchant Ships as (a) general cargo, (b) tanker including ore bulk, oil, (c) container ship, (d) roll-on roll-off ferry and (e) offshore supply vessel in each of the years since 1969.

Mr. Norris: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many United Kingdom registered vessels had crews of which (a) over 25 per cent. and (b) over 50 per cent. were non-EC nationals in each year since 1979.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details for each of the last five years of the number of port state control inspections of (a) British registered ships, and the percentage of those failing to meet safety standards and (b) foreign ships, with the percentage of all foreign ships entering United Kingdom ports that figure represents, and the percentage of those failing to meet safety standards.

Mr. Norris: The number of inspections of British-registered ships (excluding fishing vessels), and the percentage of those detained for failing to meet safety standards, for each of the last five financial years is as follows:

Year	Number	Percentage detained
1987[1]	1,086	0·8
1988-89	956	0·2
1989-90	[2]3,894	0·2
1990-91	3,414	0·2
1991-92	3,954	0·2

[2] Following the Marchioness disaster it was decided to both increase numbers of inspections of United Kingdom ships and revise the statistical basis of their calculation. The figure for 1989-90 onwards reflects this change in policy.

The number of port state control inspections of foreign registered ships, the percentage of all foreign registered ships entering the United Kingdom that this represents, and the percentage of those detained for failing to meet safety standards, for each of the last five financial years is as follows:

Year	Number	Percentage inspected	Percentage detained
1987-88	2,188	34·0	0·8
1988-89	1,830	29·7	2·5
1989-90	1,783	27·7	3·0
1990-91	2,197	31·1	3·8
1991-92	2,397	[1]33·8	5·3

[1] Provisional figure.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vessels exceeding 100 NRT were on the British Register of Shipping in (a) 1965, (b) 1970, (c) 1980, (d) each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Steven Norris: Information is not available for vessels of 100 NRT or above. The table gives data for vessels of 100 GRT or above.

Vessels on registers of United Kingdom, Channel Islands and Isle of Man 100 GRT or more

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British registered vessels, at the last available date, had crews of which more than 50 per cent. were Polish nationals; and how many of these ships were (a) tankers and (b) roll-on roll-off ferries.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available.

Tyne and Wear Metro

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to alter the ownership and control of Tyne and Wear Metro.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the transport by air of radioactive materials and waste from nuclear installations should not take place over the north-east of England.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No: there are no safety reasons for adopting a policy of avoiding such transport over particular areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the current regulations which govern (a) the transport of radioactive material and (b) the movement by air of radioactive waste from nuclear installations.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The regulations governing the safe transport of radioactive material by all modes are:

Internationally recommended regulations

International Atomic Energy Agency's Safety Series No. 6: Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Materials 1985 Edition (As Amended 1990).

National regulations for the transport of radioactive materials based on the IAEA safety series No. 6

Sea

International Maritime Organisation (IMO) International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code (IMDG Code) (Class 7).

Air

International Civil Aviation Organisation's Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air (Class 7).

The regulations for air transport cover all types of radioactive material.

Oil Spills

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oil spills of over 2 tonnes were recorded for waters around the United Kingdom in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: The published survey of the Advisory Committee on Pollution of the Sea shows that in 1991 there were 95 spills of oil over 1 tonne in United Kingdom waters from all sources (ships, rigs, land-based etc.). Figures are not available for spills in excess of 2 tonnes.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oil spills requiring clean-up operations by the marine pollution control unit occurred in the last year for which figures are available; and what proportion of all clean up treatments in that year took place in the Bristol channel and south Wales coastal region.

Mr. Norris: None. In 1991, all ship-related pollution incidents reported to the marine pollution control unit were assessed by them and monitored where appropriate (including aerial surveillance). In no case was it necessary to mobilise MPCU's clean-up resources.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oil spills were reported for waters around the United Kingdom (i) between 1980 and 1990 and (ii) in 1990; and how many successful prosecutions were carried out in 1990.

Mr. Norris: The survey of the Advisory Committee on Pollution of the Sea shows that (i) in the period 1983-1990 there were 4,170 incidents of oil spills reported in United Kingdom waters from all sources (ships, oil rigs, land-based etc.). No figures are available prior to 1983. (ii) In 1990 there were 791 incidents. In 1990, there were 22 successful prosecutions.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made to implement in his Department the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Mr. Norris: These regulations, in so far as they embrace transport, apply to employers who conduct undertakings from which a radiation emergency is reasonably foreseeable, and first-tier local authorities: the Department therefore has no direct responsibility for their implementation.

MV Braer

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects (a) the marine accident investigation branch inquiry into the MV Braer and (b) the public inquiry to complete their investigations.

Mr. Norris: It is far too early to give any completion dates for either the comprehensive marine accident investigation branch inquiry into the cases of the Braer accident or the complex Lord Donaldson inquiry on the protection of the United Kingdom coastline from merchant shipping.

Birmingham Relief Road

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further plans he has for consultation in relation to the Birmingham northern relief road in the area of North Warwickshire borough.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The formal non-statutory public consultation has been undertaken for the Birmingham northern relief road. I expect liaison to continue, however, between my Department, its concessionaire Midlands Expressway and those in North Warwickshire borough, as elsewhere.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the line orders in respect of the Birmingham northern relief road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Within the next few months.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many duplicate vehicle registration documents have been issued by the DVLA in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The application form for a replacement vehicle registration document serves either as an application for a duplicate of the original document or, if the vehicle has changed hands without it, for a registration document in the name of the new vehicle keeper. About two thirds of all applications are in the latter category.

The number of applications made in both categories in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1988	1,546,678
1989	1,757,121
1990	1,871,290
1991	2,033,694
1992	2,027,970

Rail Electrification

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has received from British Rail for the electrification of the Manchester-Preston-Blackpool railway lines.

Mr. Freeman: I have received no investment submission from British Rail for the electrification of these lines.

Road Lighting

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when (a) the M6 between its junction with the M1 and junction 3 and (b) the Coventry eastern bypass will be provided with lighting.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is no case yet for lighting either of these roads. However, a scheme to widen the M6, including the stretch between the M1 and junction 3, is in the Department's road programme, and as part of that scheme we will be reassessing the case for lighting any of the unlit stretches.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has drawn from the use of plastic lighting shields fixed to the central barriers of part of the M6 between Coventry and Birmingham; and what plans he has to extend their use to other motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The plastic vane type anti-glare screen on the section of the M6 in Warwickshire above the central reserve safety fencing was erected as a trial in the mid-1970s. The trial showed that, while the screen was effective in cutting off light from oncoming vehicle headlights, the installation had no significant effect on the number of injury accidents along this length of motorway.

The results of the trial are reported in report No. SS 1058:1976 published by the social survey division of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys; TRRL report No. SR 327:1977 and TRRL report No. 955:1980. Copies of these reports are in the House Library.

I have no general plans to install anti-glare screens on other motorways. However, should a specific problem of headlight glare be identified due to the alignment of a section of road then the provision of an anti-glare device might be considered.

M6

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the southbound access to the M6 at junction 1 to re-open; and what work is currently being undertaken.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The southbound access slip road is expected to re-open on 11 February. Some further overnight closures will, however, be necessary before the works are fully completed in mid-March. The closure of the slip road is to allow strengthening works to be carried out on both carriageways of the M6 between junction 1 and the M1.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the effect on road accident figures of a new junction on the M6 west of Corley services.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Secretary of State has no plans to build a junction on the M6 west of Corley services. Consequently, no such estimate has been made.

Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the report, "Guide to Environmental Best Practice for Company Transport", produced in November 1992 by the Government's Advisory Committees on Business and the Environment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment is to be congratulated on producing this timely and practical advice. Getting the best from company transport fleets will save money, save energy and help save the environment. The guide rightly stresses the importance of companies making the environment a major concern in formulating their transport policies. I urge both businesses and public bodies to do what they can to adopt the best practice approach set out in the guide.

Rail Passengers (Compensation)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to seek to extend compensation payments for railway passengers to cover overcrowding, unavailability of seats and lack of cleanliness on trains.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail has no plans at present to extend the compensation arrangements introduced by the passengers charter. The current arrangements relate mainly to punctuality and reliability which are the factors passengers say are of most importance to them. Where passengers book a seat, compensation may also be available if the seat is not provided.

Young Drivers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to publish a Green Paper on possible restrictions on young drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am considering various options for reducing the high accident rate associated with young drivers. We hope to issue a consultation paper in the summer.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the result of comparisons of injury crashes of drivers aged (a) 17, (b) 18 and (c) 19 years in Northern Ireland, Wales, Scotland and England.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The available information for injury accidents involving drivers aged 17, 18 and 19 in Northern Ireland, Wales, Scotland and England is shown in the table for 1991. Estimates of accidents within each of the specified age groups are not currently available for Northern Ireland but they are being produced for future reference.

Accidents	Northern Ireland	Wales	Scotland	England
Involving drivers aged:
17	—	508	704	8,663
18	—	744	971	12,294
19	—	715	1,117	12,195
TOTAL (17 to 19)	955	1,967	2,792	33,152

Disabled Parking Places

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the action taken in respect of persons who park in spots reserved for disabled people.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Legislation already exists to control the use of parking places reserved for disabled badge holders, both on-street and in local authority car parks, which have been designated by an Order made under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. In both circumstances the police and local authority have powers to prosecute offenders and those parked on-street can be issued with a fixed penalty notice. If prosecuted, able-bodied people who misuse such spaces face a fine of up to £1,000. The level of enforcement given to these offences is a matter for individual chief constables and local authorities to determine.

In privately owned and operated car parks, it is for individual operators to take whatever steps they consider necessary to see that reserved spaces are not misused.

M1

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has so far been made on widening the M1; what are the anticipated start and finish dates for the work; and what is the likely cost.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Proposals to widen the M1 between the M25, junction 6A and the M18, junction 32, were added to the road programme by the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity", in May 1989. The estimated works cost, at November 1987 prices, was given in "Trunk Roads, England: Into the 1990s" as approximately £1 billion. The work is being carried forward under a number of consultant commissions. We expect to let a construction contract shortly to add a fourth lane northbound between junctions 9 and 10, and work should be completed by the end of the year. Other commissions are at earlier stages. Public consultation has been carried out for two sections between junctions 6A and 15 and the results will be announced later this year. Other consultations are in prospect. Subsequent progress will depend on the outcome of the statutory procedures and the availability of funding.

Liberian-registered Ships

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Liberian Government as to the level of expenditure on inspecting the condition of foreign vessels registered in Liberia in each of the last five years and the frequency with which ships are required to be inspected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: None. The Liberian registry is managed on behalf of the Liberian Administration by an American company, International Registers Incorporated, which operates from Reston, Virginia, USA. Details of International Registers Incorporated's expenditure on surveys are not available. We understand that Liberian vessels are inspected at least once a year by classification societies or independent surveyors appointed by International Registers Incorporated.

Company Cars

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the relative accident rates for company cars and for privately owned cars and of the proportion of road accidents in which company cars are involved.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Company-owned cars were involved in 17 per cent. of injury road accidents in 1991. An assessment of the relative accident involvement and casualty rates for company-owned cars is contained in the publication "Car and Driver: Injury Accident and Casualty Rates: Great Britain 1990", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Roads Programme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is his policy to offer land (a) equally advantageous and (b) with comparable public access where land is compulsorily purchased as a result of his Department's roads programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 1 February 1992]: Where my right hon. Friend is authorised to acquire certain special types of land, such as an open space or common, he is required to follow the provisions of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981. The compulsory purchase order is the subject of special parliamentary procedure, unless the Secretary of State for the Environment certifies either that equivalent land has been or will be given in exchange; or that the land does not exceed 250 square yards in extent.

British Rail (Redundancies)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many employees British Rail is seeking to make redundant; how many have so far been accepted for redundancy; and how many of those accepted are (a) management, (b) clerical, (c) supervisors, (d) drivers and (e) guards.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 28 January 1993]: British Rail expects that some 7,000 staff will be accepted for redundancy as a result of the response to the voluntary severance offer made last November. Final decisions have yet to be made on those to be accepted.

Plutonium

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what forecast has been made of the number of movements of plutonium by air out of Carlisle if the Thorp and Nirex proposals are granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The current usage of Carlisle airport by British Nuclear Fuels (12 to 24 flights per year) is not likely to change in the foreseeable future.

Seat Belts

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what resources have been allocated to provide advice to (a) pregnant women and (b) parents on the installation and wearing of seat belts and restraints for children.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department provides information of a general nature on the installation and wearing of seat belts and child restraints. Specific advice concerning the installation of particular products is best obtained from the manufacturers or a competent installer.

Road Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance has been issued to road safety officers in the past 12 months; and what discussions and consultations there have been with road safety officers prior to their publication.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department offers frequent guidance and advice to road safety officers on relevant developments in road safety education, training and publicity. We also alert them in advance to particular road safety campaigns, and hold regular liaison meetings with road safety officer representative bodies to discuss matters of common interest.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent publications have been made available, and to whom, relating to road safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following publications have been issued in the last three months.

Circular Roads 1/93 Local speed Limits
"Killing Speed and Saving Lives—The Government's strategy for tackling the problem of excess speed on our roads"
The Highway Code

Copies were sent on publication to local authorities, local authority associations, police, interested professional organisations, lobby groups, motoring organisations, and individuals who have requested copies. I also sent copies of the first two documents to Members who have written to me on the subject of speed in recent months.

In addition, a number of leaflets and posters have been issued to road safety officers, the police and motoring organisations dealing with winter driving, drinking and driving, including rehabilitation courses for drink-drive offenders; and seat belts.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statutory duties of local authorities in respect of road safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Local authorities have a statutory duty to prepare and carry out a programme of measures designed to promote road safety and make contributions towards the cost of measures for promoting road safety taken by other authorities or bodies. They also have duties in regard of speed, pedestrian crossings, street furniture and other safety aspects.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the local authorities which do not employ road safety officers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. It is for individual local authorities to assess their own requirement for road safety officers, having regard to the needs of the local community.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what advice he has issued to local authorities on the appointment of road safety officers;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the numbers of road safety officers required per 1,000 population.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is for individual local authorities to assess their own requirement for road safety officers, having regard for the needs of the local community.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Race Relations

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the proposed reductions in section 11 funding.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government remain firmly committed to the reduction of racial disadvantage, and section 11 grant continues to play an important role in our programme. My right hon. and learned Friend and I regret, however, that in the present economic circumstances it is not possible to sustain throughout the next three years the level of expenditure that had earlier been planned.

Persistent Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the full results of his Department's recent survey of police forces, designed to identify the number of persistent juvenile offenders;

(2) how many persistent juvenile offenders were identified by his Department's recent survey request to police forces for details of juveniles known or alleged to have committed 10 or more offences between 1 April and 30 June 1992;

(3) if he will place in the Library full results of the recent survey of social services departments, designed to identify the number of persistent offenders;

(4) how many persistent juvenile offenders were identified by the recent request to social services departments for details of juveniles known or alleged to have committed 10 or more offences between 1 April and 30 June 1992.

Mr. Jack: I intend to place a full report of the results of the survey in the Library as soon as it has been completed. The report will show that the survey, in which all police forces and local authority social service departments in England and Wales were invited to take part, was intended to improve our knowledge and understanding of the extent and nature of the problem of persistent juvenile offending. For this purpose, respondents were invited to provide information about juveniles who were known or believed to have committed ten or more offences in the period between 1 April and 30 June 1992.

Although the results of the survey have improved the level of our knowledge and understanding of the problem, not all respondents (including two of the largest police forces) held their information in a way which allowed them to produce precise numerical data. It is, therefore, evident that the total figure of 106 juveniles identified by this exercise considerably underestimates the extent of the problem.

Seat Belts (Prosecutions)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions there have been in the last 10 years for breaches of the regulations on the wearing of seat belts in cars.

Mr. Jack: Findings of guilt at magistrates courts for not wearing a seat belt in England and Wales are shown in the following table. From 1 October 1986, the police have been able to issue fixed penalty notices for these offences as an alternative to prosecution and estimates of the number of such notices are also shown.

Year issued	Findings of guilt	Fixed penalty notices
1983	6,909	—
1984	10,935	—
1985	14,115	—
1986	19,211	18,100
1987	7,504	58,400
1988	6,837	71,700
1989	7,275	89,100
1990	8,466	127,200
1991	9,856	122,800

Convicted Murderer (Television Broadcast)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of how the interview with a convicted murderer broadcast on television on 26 January was (a) arranged and (b) supervised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It would not be appropriate for me to discuss matters which are awaiting trial.

Prisoners (Cell Occupation)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners shared (a) three to a cell, (b) two to a cell and (c) occupied a single cell at the latest available date; and what proportion of each category were (i) convicted and (ii) remand prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following table shows how many prisoners shared three and two to cells certified as normal accommodation for one person on 18 December 1992. Information is not available for the proportion of convicted and remand prisoners held three or two to a cell, and instead the table provides a breakdown of figures by type of establishment.

Information is not available on the number of prisoners occupying single cells.

Establishment type	Three to a cell	Two to a cell
Local prison	201	4,072
Remand centre	3	570
Adult training prison	6	118
Young offender institution	0	228
Female establishment	0	34
Total	210	5,022

Prison Education

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, columns 715-16, how many existing providers of education have responded to his request; and when he expects to be able to indicate how many and which organisations will be contracted to provide education in prisons between 1 April and 30 September.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: By 1 February 1993, the Prison Service had received responses from 42 local education authorities and 61 colleges and institutions of further education. Existing providers have been offered the option of continuing to provide education services on the present terms until 31 August 1993. Where they are unable or unwilling to do so, contracts will be awarded under the current competitive tender. Decisions are expected to be reached within the next two weeks.

Channing's Wood Prison (Education)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to respond to the letter of 29 December from the hon. Member for South Hams about the tendering for the provision of prison education at HM Prison Channings Wood by Chris Brimecombe and colleagues directors of Vygo, of 42 Churston Way, Brixham, South Devon.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I expect to reply to my hon. Friend this week.

Prison Cells (Capital Cost)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average capital cost of a new prison cell in 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average cost per place for new prisons opening in 1992 was £130,000. This includes both living accommodation and the other facilities needed.

Wolds Remand Centre

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average weekly cost in 1992 of keeping a person in (a) the Wolds remand centre and (b) a state-run prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average weekly cost of keeping a person in Wolds remand prison from April 1992, when the prison opened, until December 1992 was £626. This compares with an average net operating cost for 1991-92 for all prisons run by the Prison Service of £442 per prisoner per week. This comparison is misleading, since unit costs are higher in the period during which a prison opens and is filling with prisoners, as Wolds was doing in 1992. Wolds is now more than 95 per cent. full.

Seat Belts (Regulations Enforcement)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been issued to police forces concerning enforcement of the Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Seat Belts) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. The enforcement of road traffic law, which would include the Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Seat Belts) Regulations 1982, is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Anthony Charles Jeffs

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will intervene in the planned release of Anthony Charles Jeffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I took the decision in accordance with normal policy and practice for the release of mandatory life sentence prisoners.

Police (Audit Commission Reports)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the changes effected by police forces in England and Wales to the recommendations made in each of the Audit Commission police papers published since 1988; and if he will give details of the main changes implemented by the police service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The 11 reports which have been published so far are addressed primarily to police authorities and police forces and offer thematic guidance for auditors who review the work of the authorities.

Many of the changes recommended in the reports have been introduced by forces. They are also actively promoted in forces by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and progress in implementation is reflected in published inspectorate reports.

Main changes include:

(a) Increased use of civilians which has released officers for operation duties;

(b) The implementation of a standing offers scheme for the purchasing of police vehicles which has identified substantial savings;

(c) Improvements to police communications rooms through: further civilianisation, more flexible shifts, better technology and increased centralisation;

(d) Introduction of enhanced performance measures including activity sampling;

(e) Improved management structures—more than three quarters of all forces have undergone, or are in the process of carrying out reviews of their management structures, including shift systems.

Police (Education)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 (a) the number of graduates recruited and (b) the percentage of officers who are graduates;

(2) what was (a) the number and (b) the percentage of police officers in each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 who had (a) no GCE or GCSE grade A-C passes, (b) four or fewer GCE or GCSE grade A-C passes, (c) more than four GCE or GCSE grade A-C passes but no A level passes, (d) one A level, (e) two or more A level passes and (f) a degree.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Much of the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information which is available is given in the table. The total number of graduate recruits who began initial training in 1981 was 468. The number of graduate appointments in 1991 was 441, a breakdown of which is shown in the table.

Number of Graduates in Police Forces in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991

Police National Computer

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which companies are being considered to assist in the project to convert criminal records on to the police national computer; and what is their country of ownership;

(2) what stage has been reached in the project to load United Kingdom criminal records on to the police national computer; and when the project is likely to be completed;

(3) what steps are being taken to seek bids for British companies to put criminal records on to the police national computer;

(4) who are the consultants advising on the project to load United Kingdom criminal records on to the police national computer.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Work is in hand to assess the likely costs and practicality of converting the information contained in the criminal records held on microfiche at the national identification bureau into electronic form for inclusion on the police national computer. Hoskyns Group plc supported by Expert Systems Ltd., is assisting the Home Office in this work. When it has been completed my right hon. and learned Friend will consider how and where the back record conversion process can best be undertaken.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sets of microfiche hold the records on the police national computer.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The police national computer database includes an index of the names of all those for whom there is a record at the national identification bureau. These records, which relate to some 5.25 million individuals, are held on microfiche. There is at least one microfiche for each individual.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many names are held on the police national computer records.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The names database on the police national computer holds 5,292,439 records (excluding aliases). The PNC also holds records of 42,480,704 vehicles, including the name of the registered keeper.

Police (Sick Leave)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days per officer for each police force in England and Wales were lost due to (a) assault-related sick leave and (b) sick leave not due to assaults, in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested for 1990 and 1991 is shown as follows. The figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to introduce a common methodology for the reporting of manpower requirements, crime statistics and clear up rates by police force in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Each of these matters is dealt with by a methodology which is common to all police forces.

Mr. Allan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage change in levels of recorded crime since 1979; and what has been the percentage change in the total establishment of the police since 1979.

Mr. Jack: The number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in England and Wales rose by 108 per cent. between 1979 and 1991. Over the same period, the authorised police establishment rose by 7 per cent. whereas the actual police strength, including civilians, rose by 17 per cent. to a total of 172,014.

Police Numbers

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police force area in England and Wales in 1971, 1981 and 1991 (a) the resident population, (b) the police officer establishment, (c) total police expenditure, (d) the police officer-population ratio and (e) expenditure per resident expressed both in current and at 1971 prices.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The requested information for 1981 and 1991 is set out in the following tables.

The local government rearrangements of 1974 mean that it is not practicable to provide comparable information for 1971. Expenditure per resident is, therefore, expressed in current and 1981 prices.

Police (Flexible Shifts)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police forces in England and Wales which are introducing a flexible shift system.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Many forces are examining the possibility of introducing alternative shift systems following the introduction of the appropriate amendments to the Police Regulations 1987. The following forces are currently holding experiments with alternative shift systems:

Avon and Somerset
Bedfordshire
Cambridgeshire
Cleveland
Derbyshire
Devon and Cornwall
Dorset
Durham
Greater Manchester
Hertfordshire
Kent
Merseyside
Northamptonshire
Northumbria
Nottinghamshire
South Wales
Sussex
Thames Valley

Safer Cities Projects

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reinstate the previous level of the safer cities budget for Birmingham to help fund projects for youth and community resources in areas with high juvenile crime rates.

Mr. Jack: No. As part of our crime prevention strategy, the grants budget of the Birmingham safer cities project, together with those of the other 15 longer established projects, has been set at £100,000 in 1993-94 enabling funds to be released for work to be started on a new phase of safer cities projects elsewhere.

Having seen the value demonstrated by Safer Cities, we hope that local communities and interests will be willing to take over the projects and continue their work after Home Office funding for the 16 projects ends in March 1994. Some additional funding from a central budget of £500,000 will be available to Birmingham and the other 15 projects to assist work aimed at leaving in place satisfactory continuing arrangements for the maintenance and development of local multi-agency crime prevention work.

Through the safer cities project, the Home Office has supported a wide range of work in Birmingham focusing on juveniles including schemes providing football coaching and other sporting activities, tackling bullying, promoting junior crime prevention panels and tackling graffiti. These illustrate what can be done often with modest funding. In addition, the Home Office provides funding for three projects in Birmingham organised by the probation service in partnership with the voluntary sector to provide programmes of supervision for young offenders.

Youth Crime

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to deal with car crimes committed by young people and other youth crime in Birmingham and the west midlands.

Mr. Jack: The Government have encouraged the police and other agencies in the development of effective crime prevention programmes aimed at tackling youth crime and has funded a number of initiatives. The Home Office safer cities projects set up in Birmingham, Coventry and Wolverhampton in 1989 have all funded schemes aimed at diverting the young away from car crime and other types of crime. We have also established local drugs prevention teams in Birmingham and Wolverhampton with the aim of tackling the spread of misuse, particularly among the young. In addition the probation supervision grant scheme provides funding for nine projects in the West Midlands probation area which, in the main, provide programmes of supervision for young offenders. Three are based in Birmingham, one of which specifically tackles car crime.

The Department of Education announced last month that Coventry and Dudley are to receive £147,000, Solihull £99,000 and Wolverhampton £73,500 under its grants for education support and training (GEST) programme for youth crime prevention schemes in 1993-94. The Department of the Environment's city challenge programme in Wolverhampton is providing funding for activities for young people including a vehicle project to divert juveniles from car crime. In addition Birmingham propose to tackle youth crime, amongst other things, under the city challenge programme once their action plan has received approval.

As part of its programme of action on youth crime for 1993, Crime Concern is planning a series of regional seminars, including two in the midlands, on best practice in diverting young people from crime.

The Government are also considering what means might be needed to reduce offending by the small group of persistent juvenile offenders.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badgers

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for licences were received in the last year for terrier men to send dogs into badger setts; how many were granted; and to whom.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry received seven applications in the last year for licences to permit terrier men to enter dogs into badger setts for the purpose of fox control. No licences were issued.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost of introducing CAP reform to (a) the activities of his Department and (b) the British farming industry.

Mr. Curry: The total estimated cost to the Ministry for the introduction of the CAP reform measures is £25 million in 1993-94, falling to £20 million in subsequent years. This represents a small proportion of total programme costs.

There will be higher costs to the British farming industry in the first year, when the Community anti-fraud rules require the submission of a good deal of basic information relating to the farm, but we hope to reduce the costs to farmers in subsequent years.

Sea Fish (Conservation) Bill

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest estimate of the costs of enforcing the Sea Fish (Conservation) Bill.

Mr. Curry: The Government have made provision for the cost of enforcing days at sea and extending licensing to vessels of 10 m overall length and below. The estimated cost of these operations is £1·5 million a year for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the allocation of fishing days to individual boats under the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992; and whether the allocation in 1993 will be retrospective from 1 January.

Mr. Curry: The Government will shortly be laying before Parliament an order which will set out principles governing the allocation of days at sea. This order will clear the way for the issue of provisional allocations to fishermen, and subsequently for the attachment of days at sea conditions to licences. Such conditions will not be retrospective.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to issue 1993 licences to the British fishing fleet.

Mr. Curry: The 1993 fishing licences have been, or are currently being, issued for vessels which require licences.

Agriculture Returns

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, columns 393-94, what is the reason for the replacement of acres by hectares as the only acceptable measurement on most returns.

Mr. Curry: Council Directive on the approximation of the laws of the member states relating to units of measurement No. 80/181 EC as amended by Council Directive No. 89/617 EC requires the phasing out of acres by the end of 1994 for these returns.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current number of full-time equivalent jobs, including family labour, on every 100 acres on farms of (a) under 100 acres, (b) from 100 to 200 acres, (c) from 200 to 300 acres, (d) from 300 to 500 acres, (e) from 500 to 1,000 acres, (f) from 1,000 to 2,000 acres and (g) over 2,000 acres.

Mr. Curry: The number of full-time equivalent jobs, including family labour, on every 100 acres on farms in England for the categories requested is shown in the table.

Number of full-time equivalent jobs[1] per 100 acres of total area on agricultural holdings[2]

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the current total labour force employed in agriculture and the equivalent figures for 1991, 1990, 1985, 1980, 1975 and 1965.

Mr. Curry: The total agricultural labour force on holdings in England as at June for each of the years requested is shown in the table:

Total agricultural labour force on holdings in England as at June each year

Year	Total labour force[1] (thousands)
[4]1975	503·0
1980	523·8
1985	495·3
1990	455·9
1992	440·2

[1] Includes all workers on the holding i.e. farmers, partners, directors, spouses, managers, regular family and hired workers, seasonal and casual workers with the exception of persons engaged as trainees under an official scheme and not paid AWB rates or more.

[2] Data for 1965 exclude occupiers or principal partners and their wives.

[3] Workers on holdings of less than 1 acre are excluded.

[4] Data for 1975 exclude spouses (doing farm work) of farmers, partners and directors on main holdings.

Set-aside

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list his estimate of the amount of set-aside in the current growing season in each county of England and Wales.

Mr. Curry: The table gives the latest available figures for the amount of land currently set-aside under the five year set-aside scheme in each county in England. Information on land set-aside under the new arable area payments scheme will not be available until growers have to declare the area later this year. Figures for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

European Court

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions matters under his jurisdiction have been referred to the European Court; and if he will give details in each case.

Mr. Curry: All European Court of Justice cases since July 1985 involving the United Kingdom are listed in the White Papers on Developments in the European Community published bi-annually. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Fishing Days (Allocation)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he is giving to producer organisations on the management of their quota pending the introduction of days at sea restrictions.

Mr. Curry: The management of quotas allocated to producer organisations (POs) is, in general, a matter for them, operating within a framework of rules which Fisheries Departments lay down in the interests of the United Kingdom fleet as a whole. Days at sea will not have retrospective effect from the date of their introduction. Management of days at sea will be entirely up to the individual fishermen, since the allocations are to individual vessels not to POs.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will announce details of individual days at sea allocation transfer and any possible licence aggregation.

Mr. Curry: The Government will shortly be laying before Parliament an Order which will set out principles governing the allocation of days at sea. This order will clear the way for the issue of provisional allocations to fishermen, and subsequently for the attachment of days at sea conditions to licences. Such conditions will not be retrospective.

Conifer Plantations

Mr. Cynog Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to amend guidelines on conifer plantations in the United Kingdom relating to (a) siting, (b) species composition and (c) felling regimes.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 29 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans at present to amend the existing guidance on the establishment and management of conifer plantations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many successful claims were made for family credit since April 1992 by lone parents who are employed between 16 and 24 hours a week.

Mr. Burt: Between 7 April and 30 September 1992, the latest date for which information is available, about 35,000 family credit awards have been made to lone parents working between 16 and 24 hours a week.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in receipt of income support in March 1992 became ineligible, following the changes to the definition of full-time work from 24 to 16 hours a week in April 1992; and what is this figure as a proportion of the total number of lone parents claiming income support.

Mr. Burt: No one who was working between 16 and 24 hours a week and receiving income support at the point of change has had that benefit withdrawn simply as a consequence of the change in the hours threshold. Many lone parents will be better off because of their decision to claim family credit. Those who chose not to claim family credit may remain on income support under special provisions giving them indefinite protection.

State Pensions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what grounds British subjects who retire to one of the old dominions do not receive the annual uprating of their state pension.

Miss Widdecombe: Regulations prevent the payment of annual pension increases to United Kingdom pensioners living abroad. There are exceptions to this rule under social security agreements with some countries. Our agreements with Australia, Canada and New Zealand do not alter this. We have no social security agreement with South Africa. In view of the substantial additional cost —about £275 million at April 1992 rates—involved in paying pension increases to all United Kingdom pensioners abroad, there is no prospect of allowing further unfreezing in the present financial climate.

PRIME MINISTER

India

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had during his visit to India concerning human rights abuses in Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I raised British concerns about human rights in Kashmir with the Indian Prime Minister. He assured me of his Government's commitment to respect human rights and determination to take firm action against wrongdoers.

Democracy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward proposals for an elected second chamber.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's progress towards improving democracy in the United Kingdom since 1979.

The Prime Minister: We have implemented policies approved by the electorate in four general elections.

Lord Chancellor's Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward a transfer of functions statutory instrument under the Ministers of the Crown Act 1975 to transfer the legal powers of the Lord Chancellor to a Secretary of State for Justice in a Department of Justice; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Transfer of Functions Orders

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1975 Her Majesty's Government have used transfer of functions orders to abolish, create or amalgamate Government Departments.

The Prime Minister: Twelve. They are:

1976/1775	Established the Department of Transport
1979/907	Created the Office of Arts and Libraries
1979/1451	Dissolved the Ministry of Overseas Development
1981/207	Office of Arts and Libraries merged with Department of Education and Science
1981/1670	Civil Service Department changed into Management and Personnel Office
1983/879	Office of Arts and Libraries became a separate Office
1983/1127	Departments of Trade and Industry amalgamated into Department of Trade and Industry
1987/2039	Management and Personnel Office changed into Office of the Minister for the Civil Service
1988/1843	Department of Health and Social Security split into Department of Health and Department of Social Security
1992/1311	Department of National Heritage established
1992/1314	Department of Energy dissolved

Family Policy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what action he proposes to co-ordinate family policy across those Government Departments actively concerned with family policy.

The Prime Minister: We already have proper and adequate co-ordination of family policy across Government Departments. There is frequent consultation between Departments about a range of issues which touch upon the family. In addition an interdepartmental working party—the family law and administration working party—oversees a rolling programme of work directed at improving family law and business.

Moscow (Communications)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the discussions between his security officials and Russian officials over the installation of a secure communications line to Moscow during his recent visit to India.

The Prime Minister: Given the close proximity of the two visits and the fact that we were both staying in the President's residence, it was necessary to discuss Mr. Yeltsin's communications requirements with both the Indians and the Russians. Arrangements acceptable to all concerned were agreed.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has for submission to the 1996 intergovernmental conference.

The Prime Minister: It is too early to say. The first priority is to ratify the Maastricht treaty and put it into practice. Then we will be able to build on the gains won at Maastricht—subsidiarity, inter-governmental co-operation, codification of competences—in the years between now and the next treaty revision.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Financial Assistance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, by industrial sector, the firms and projects which applied for financial assistance under section 8 of the Industry Development Act 1982 in (a) 1991-92 and (b) the current financial year.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of assistance schemes, including assistance for exceptional projects, are operated under the powers of section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. Only in the case of AEP is comprehensive information recorded centrally.

AEP applications by industrial sector have been submitted as follows:

Sector	Number
1991-92
Engineering	2
Newsprint recycling	1
Pharmaceuticals	1
1992-93 (to end January)
Computer hardware/software	3
Waste disposal	2
Metal manufacture	2
Newsprint recycling	1
Medical research	1
Entertainment/leisure	1
Commercial property development	1

Details about the individual firms and their projects is commercially confidential.

Teaching Company Partnership Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many projects have been established under the teaching company partnership scheme in each region; and how many students will be placed under the scheme in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Leigh: The regional and territorial distribution of live teaching company scheme programmes is:

	1 April 1992	31 December 1992	+/−
Northern Ireland	28	38	+10
Scotland	35	30	− 5
Wales	24	27	+ 3
North West	57	50	− 7
North East	64	90	+26
West Midlands	48	54	+ 6
East Midlands	30	41	+11
South West	29	37	+ 8
South East	65	78	+13
London	13	17	+ 4
Total	393	462	+69

Two hundred and twenty-nine graduates began participating as teaching company associates between 1 April and 31 December 1992. By the end of March 1993 a total of about 300 new associates will have been placed in this financial year.

News Distribution

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission was asked to report on news distribution; and when he expects it to report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading referred the supply of newspaper distribution in England and Wales to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in August 1992. The commission was asked to report back to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade within 12 months.

Denim Cloth

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the quantity and value of denim cloth imported into the United Kingdom from (a) the United States of America, (b) India, (c) Hong Kong, (d) Italy, (e) Germany, (f) Belgium, (g) Ireland and (h) other European Community countries for each year since 1987.

Mr. Needham: The available information on quantity and value of denim imports is given in the table.

Ship Building

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce new legislation or proposals to stimulate investment in new ship building to augment the United Kingdom register of merchant ships.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have no plans for additional assistance to shipbuilders. The shipbuilding intervention fund and the home shipbuilding credit guarantee scheme are already available to help shipbuilders construct vessels for any register.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many tonnes of methyl bromide have been (a) produced within the United Kingdom and (b) imported in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is not available. Methyl bromide is not separately identified in United Kingdom statistical classifications.

EC Regional and Social Funds

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will discuss with the European Commission the possibility of upgrading Merseyside from objective 2 to objective 1 status within the framework of EC regional and social funds.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government are currently considering which regions, including Merseyside, should be put forward, for special reasons, for eligibility under objective 1 of the EC structural funds.

State Aid for Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the Competition Commissioner Karl van Miert about the proposed softer line on state aid for industry in EC countries; and what representations he has made.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has met Mr. van Miert to discuss the coal review. He is looking forward to discussing other issues with Mr. van Miert over the coming months.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to make representations to the GATT to secure that clear and explicit commitments to (a) the environment, (b) the promotion of sustainable development and (c) to raise incomes of the poor in third-world countries are written in to the preamble and articles of the Multilateral Trade Organisation.

Mr. Needham: It is not open to the United Kingdom to negotiate directly on the text establishing the proposed Multilateral Trade Organisation (MTO). The European Commission, which negotiates in the Uruguay round of GATT on behalf of the European Community and the member states, has made proposals to include language on sustainable development, including environmental protection, in the preamble of the proposed MTO text.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recommendations have been made by his Department to GATT concerning (a) revisions to the disputes procedures of the Multilateral Trade Organisation and (b) the accountability of MTO panel members.

Mr. Needham: It is not open to the United Kingdom to negotiate directly on the text establishing the proposed Multilateral Trade Organisation (MTO), which is being negotiated in the Uruguay round in GATT. The European Commission acts as sole negotiator on behalf of the EC and the member states. Dispute settlement is not, in any case, part of the MTO proposal, but is covered by a separate draft understanding. No proposals have been made to change this understanding since the draft Final Act was tabled in December 1991. Under the terms of this understanding, dispute settlement panel members would act for, and be accountable to, the Governments who are members of the MTO, acting collectively through a special dispute settlement body.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he has used in reviewing the assisted areas map.

Mr. Sainsbury: The criteria to be used in the review of the assisted areas map were set out in the consultation paper issued in June last year.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for a capital moratorium on payments of regional selective assistance.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to adjust the cost-per-job limits on maximum regional selective assistance in line with inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no such proposals. The scheme is kept under continuous review to ensure the scope for encouraging worthwhile and efficient investment in the assisted areas remain unimpaired.

Regional Development Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much European regional development fund expenditure there has been in the United Kingdom in each year since 1984-85 at (a) current prices and (b) 1984 prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: European regional development fund allocations to the United Kingdom since 1984 are as follows:

	(a) Current prices	(b) 1984 prices
1984	367	367
1985	344	326
1986	342	308
1987	445	386
1988	373	311
1989	343	273
1990	330	253
1991	410	301

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that coal production is resumed in the 10 pits currently subject to the court judgment detailing that the modified colliery review procedure should be followed.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The resumption of coaling at the 10 pits is a matter for British Coal. However, I do not understand there to be anything in the judgment which either makes the cessation of coaling in these pits unlawful or requires this to re-commence while consultation takes place.

The judgment does not require the modified colliery review procedure to be followed. It requires that British Coal shall not reach a final decision on the closure of any of the 10 pits until a procedure substantially to the same effect as the modified colliery review procedure, including some form of independent scrutiny, has been followed.

I have placed a copy of the approved transcript of the Lord Justice Glidewell and Mr. Justice Hidden's judgment of 21 December 1992 in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals for a statutory extension of the redundancy payment scheme for the miners in the 10 pits scheduled for closure until the consultation and review procedure has been completed.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 1 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade assured the House on 21 October that no miner at these pits will be disadvantaged as regards redundancy terms. That holds good both during and at the end of the current consultation process, and both before and after the end of March.

Insolvency

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the application of the insolvency laws to Gallidoro Trawlers of Lowestoft.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1993]: My hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) wrote about this matter on 22 September 1992; I replied on 18 October 1992.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review the insolvency laws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1993]: No. Officials in the insolvency service continue to monitor the operation of the insolvency legislation.

Warship Builders

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing), 10 December, Official Report, column 752, if he will now make representations to the European Commission that agreement be modified to permit subsidy to those companies which were privatised as warship builders.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 1 February 1993]: Not at present, but I am keeping the situation under review.

Export:Import Ratios

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has concerning the export:import ratios in each member country of the European Community in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The figures required are shown in the following table.

EC countries ratios of exports to imports 1991

Country	Export:Import ratio 1991
Belgium/Luxembourg	0·98
Denmark	1·11
France	0·93
Germany	1·03
Greece	0·40
Ireland	1·17

EDUCATION

English

11. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will meet the National Association of Teachers of English to discuss key stage 3 of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: The National Association of Teachers of English has not asked to meet my right hon. Friend.

12. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received concerning standard attainment tests in English at key stage 3.

16. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received on the implementation of key stage 3 of the national curriculum in English.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations he has received complaining about or asking for changes in the key stage 3 English tests.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Members to the oral answer that my right hon. Friend gave earlier to the hon. Members for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) and for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) and to my hon Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Milligan).

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools have indicated that they will not carry out the key stage 3 English tests in the current year.

Mr. Forth: Head teachers and school governors are under a statutory duty to implement the national curriculum and its assessment arrangements. I expect all maintained and grant-maintained schools with 14-year-old pupils to administer the English tests to their pupils in June this year as they are required to do.

Nursery Education

13. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of four-year-olds have a local authority nursery place.

Mr. Forth: Eighty-one per cent. of all children in England who were aged 4 on 31 August 1990 and still below five at the end of the year were in maintained nursery or primary schools in January 1991.

Education Funding

14. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from local authorities cutting budgets to avoid capping in 1993-94 and the implications on the position of education.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations.

15. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received in the last three months from the Association of County Councils on the funding of education services.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from the Association of County Councils about the funding of education services.

Grant-maintained Schools

17. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he received a copy of the annual survey of the grant-maintained schools centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend received a copy of the GSMC survey on 30 November. The survey demonstrated clearly the benefits of grant-maintained status, which enables schools to manage their own affairs and gives them the flexibility to target funding at classroom level. Copies of the survey are available in the Library.

18. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the latest figures for the number of grant-maintained schools in both the secondary and primary phases.

Mr. Forth: To date, there are 262 secondary schools and 75 primary schools operating as grant-maintained. A further 49 secondary schools and 14 primary schools have been approved for grant-maintained status; 161 secondary schools and 61 primary schools have applications in the pipeline after voting in favour of applying for grant-maintained status.

NNC and Ofsted Reports

19. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what actions he has taken following the recent presentation of reports by the National Curriculum Council and the Office for Standards in Education.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has sent to primary schools a five-point strategy designed to promote good teaching practice and improved curriculum management in primary schools. He also proposes to ask the new Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority to advise him on the institution of a rolling review of national curriculum subjects.

Students Unions

20. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent representations he has received about the future of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on student unions in the course of the Department's consultations.

Newspapers (Essex)

21. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education from which Essex newspapers his press cuttings services provide cuttings for his office.

Mr. Boswell: The Department's press cuttings service is not asked to monitor Essex regional newspapers automatically. However, the Department has other arrangements enabling it to receive press cuttings from all regional papers on request.

National Curriculum

22. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he next plans to meet the chair of the National Curriculum Council to discuss the progress being made in the implementation of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State have regular meetings with the chairman of the National Curriculum Council. Progress in the implementation of the national curriculum is a normal part of the agenda of such meetings.

Youth Service

23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest information he has about English local authority budgets for the youth service in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: Separate information on youth service expenditure for these years is not yet available.

Teacher Education and Training

25. Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for the reform of teacher training.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for the reform of teacher education and training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend announced last June a decisive shift to more school-based training for secondary teachers, which is being introduced over the period up to September 1994. He is now considering reforms to the training of primary teachers in the light of the recent advice from the National Curriculum Council and OFSTED on primary education; and he intends that they should be introduced in September 1994. The quality of teacher training is critical to our school reforms and the raising of educational standards. My right hon. Friend will keep under review the possibility that further reform of teacher training is needed to this end.

Voluntary Organisations

26. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from voluntary organisations during the last three months; and what were their major concerns.

Mr. Boswell: Over the last three months we have received a number of representations from voluntary organisations on a range of issues. These included the ending of the Department's initial three-year interim grants scheme to education voluntary organisations in London, and the funding of courses which fall within schedule 2 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

Local Management of Schools

28. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to extend the system of local management of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We issued the consultation paper, "Local Management of Schools: the Future Framework", on 11 January. This seeks views on proposals to extend local managment of schools. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Truancy

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance regarding the connection with bullying has been given to local authorities when using extra money to combat truancy.

Mr. Forth: Under the "Reducing Truancy" component of the grants for education support and training scheme for 1993-94, local education authorities (LEAs) could, if they so wished, include in their bids an element designed to promote whole-school action on bullying. A number of authorities have done so on the basis of schemes designed to meet local needs. Practical advice on bullying was contained in the "Action against Bullying" pack distributed by the Department to all LEAs and schools in July 1992.

Higher Education

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to increase the number of young people entering higher education.

Mr. Boswell: Government policies have led to substantial increases in the number of young people participating in higher education. More than one in four young people now enter higher education compared with only one in eight in 1979. As explained at the time of the autumn statement, the Government's funding for the next three years reflects our assumption that the participation rate of young people in higher education will be maintained at a record 28 per cent. over the next three years, and will rise to about one in three by the year 2000.

School Governors

24. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice and assistance is being made available to school governors in order that they can effectively carry out their responsibilities.

Mr. Forth: All LEAs arrange for training and support for school governors. Authorities either provide this themselves, or may commission it from other organisations. Central Government grant towards LEAs' expenditure is available through the GEST (grants for education support and training) programme. Nationally, expenditure of £10 million is being supported in the current year. This increases to just over £15 million in 1993-94. In addition, department for Education has funded several governor support projects run by diocesan bodies and governor organisations.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will publish the results of his Department's survey of the membership of school governing bodies conducted in autumn 1992.

Mr. Forth: The results of the survey will be published as soon as possible after they have been received.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provisions have been made governing the conduct of first governors of grant-maintained schools elected parent governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The instrument of government of a grant-maintained school makes provision for serving governors who become bankrupt, are convicted of certain crimes or who do not attend governors meetings to be disqualified from holding office. Clause 56 of the Education Bill will, if enacted, provide additional power for the Secretary of State to replace any or all of the first governors in circumstances where there is a serious failure of duties, the school has had a bad inspection report and is unable or unwilling to put matters right or where the behaviour of governors has damaged, or appears likely to damage the education of pupils.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what requirements are laid on parent governors in reporting back to parent electors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: There are no specific requirements on parent governors to report back to parent electors. The governing body as a whole must produce a report and hold a meeting for parents in every school year to inform parents of the governing body's actions over the previous year and to give them an opportunity to discuss these actions.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to monitor changes in articles and instruments of grant-maintained schools' governing bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Changes to the instrument or articles of government of any grant-maintained school can be made only if an amendment order is issued by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what requirements are imposed concerning changes to the membership articles and instruments and the removal of parent governors of grant-maintained school governing bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Amendments to the instrument of government of a grant-maintained school to reflect changes in the composition of the membership of the governing body can be made only if an amendment order is issued by the Secretary of State.

The instrument of government makes provision for serving governors (including parent governors) who become bankrupt, are convicted of certain crimes or who do not attend governors' meetings to be disqualified from holding office. Clause 56 of the Education Bill will, if enacted, also provide power for the Secretary of State to replace any or all of the first governors in certain circumstances. These circumstances are: a serious failure of duties, a bad inspection report coupled with the inability or unwillingness of the school to put matters right, or where there is behaviour by governors such as has damaged, or appears likely to damage, the education of pupils.

Grants (Gwynedd)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the reasons why his Department (a) did not reimburse Gwynedd county council with the sum paid by way of mandatory education grants, following the completion of form UG 8/91 on 5 October by that authority, (b) indicated that provisional payments would be made soon after 9 October and (c) delayed payments until January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Form UG 8/91 is a certificate of each local education authority's spending on mandatory student awards in 1991-92, and is used as a basis for adjustments to the specific grant already paid for that year by the Department. Provisional adjustments may be paid after scrutiny of authorities' pre-audit forms due in October, and final adjustments after receipt of audited certificates due on 31 December. Last autumn, however, many authorities' pre-audit forms contained errors, and the Department deferred all adjustments until audited certificates had been received and reconciled. The adjustments will be paid in full shortly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for what reason his Department has not yet replied to the letter from the treasurer of Gwynedd county council of 30 November and 10 December.

Mr. Boswell: The Department telephoned the county treasurer, and also wrote on 22 December and again on 19 and 29 January.

Secondary Schools (Inspections)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many secondary schools will be inspected over the next four years.

Mr. Forth: Every publicly funded secondary school will be inspected over four years starting this September; nearly 4,000 reports will be published as a result.

Special Needs

27. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the availability of professional services to children with special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: I have this last week, in the Committee stage of the Education Bill, tabled a new clause which puts beyond doubt the ability of local education authorities to continue to provide a range of professional support services to all pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what specific action is currently undertaken by his Department to assist parents who wish to move their child with special education needs from the special school sector to the integrated mainstream school sector.

Mr. Forth: The Education Act 1981 and the Education Bill presently before Parliament place local education authorities under a duty to secure that a child with special educational needs is educated in a mainstream school, so long as certain conditions apply and such integration is compatible with the wishes of the child's parents. Both that Act and the Bill provide for the annual review of statements of special educational needs. Part of the purpose of such reviews is to consider whether the school placement remains appropriate. As a result of a Government amendment the Bill provides for the Secretary of State to make regulations governing those reviews.

Schedule 9 of the Bill provides a new right for parents of children with statements, subject to certain timing conditions, to ask the LEA to substitute a particular named LEA-maintained or grant-maintained school of their choice for the one named in the statement. Subject to certain conditions, the authority will have to comply and regulations may set time limits within which the authority must take action. If the authority do not comply, the parent will have a right of appeal to the tribunal.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the number of INSET courses and the numbers of teachers completing training from them, for teachers of young people with special learning difficulties for 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and that projected for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: All the figures requested are not held centrally. However, this Department provides funds to LEAs under the grants for education support and training (GEST) programme to support them with the costs of such training. In 1992-93, funds were allocated to support the INSET training of 296 teachers of children with severe learning difficulties (SLD). Of these, 206 were teachers beginning new courses.

In 1993-94, the eligibility for grant under the GEST programme has been extended to support teacher training in all areas of special educational needs. As a result, the amount of eligible expenditure to be supported has been increased by nearly 40 per cent. to £10 million in order to meet the expansion in training activities. It is too early to say with certainty how many teachers of children with severe learning difficulties will be trained by LEAs under GEST in 1993-94, but preliminary indications suggest that figures will be comparable with those for previous years.

HEALTH

Smoking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients were admitted to NHS hospitals for smoking-related diseases in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many hospital beds, on average, on a daily basis, were occupied by patients being treated for smoking-related diseases in the last year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is available only for 1988-89, as given by the Health Education Authority, in its 1991 publication "The Smoking Epidemic". This estimated that 226,000 patients were admitted to hospital in England for treatment of smoking-related diseases and these cases occupied an average of 7,000 beds each day.

Limited List Drugs

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations were received by her Department between 9 April 1992 and 12 November 1992 seeking assurances on behalf of companies in the pharmaceutical industry that there were no plans to extend the limited list regulations; and what was the response.

Dr. Mawhinney: A number of representations were received and the companies were informed that there were no plans at that time to extend the selected list scheme.

Psychiatric Patients (Deaths)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 540, what timetable is proposed for the inquiry of the Royal College of Psychiatrists.

Mr. Yeo: The inquiry will produce an initial report later this year.

GP Fund Holders

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the general practices which are fund holding in the area covered by (a) the Mid-Staffordshire health authority and (b) the South East Staffordshire health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The West Midlands regional health authority is responsible for the management of the general practitioner fund holding scheme in these areas. The hon. Member may wish to contact, Sir Donald Wilson, the RHA chairman, for details.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the number of (i) male staff, (ii) female staff and (iii) staff working in wards/units caring for patients suffering from cancer employed at (a) University College hospital, (b) Middlesex hospital, (c) St. Bartholomew's hospital, (d) Royal London hospital, (e) St. Thomas's hospital, (f) Guy's hospital, (g) Charing Cross hospital, (h) St. Mary's hospital and (i) Queen Charlotte's hospital on 25 January;

(2) how many (i) in-patients and (ii) out-patients were receiving treatment for cancer at (a) University College hospital, (b) Middlesex hospital, (c) St. Bartholomew's hospital, (d) Royal London hospital, (e) St. Thomas's hospital, (f) Guy's hospital, (g) Charing Cross hospital, (h) St. Mary's hospital and (i) Queen Charlotte's hospital on 25 January; and what kind of cancer treatment is given at each hospital.

Dr, Mawhinney: The information requested is not held centrally.

Nurses

Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to increase opportunities for all enrolled nurses to convert to first level registration.

Mr. Sackville: It is for regional health authorities, in consultation with employers, to plan for enrolled nurse conversion as part of their responsibility for identifying the level of demand for qualified nurses and for allocating appropriate budgets.

In addition, we are committed to increasing the number of places available for enrolled nurse conversion as part of the Project 2000 reforms. Central funding has been made available to facilitate this.

The English National Board for Nursing Midwifery and Health Visiting has been encouraged to develop flexible options which have made it possible to reduce both the length and cost of conversion courses.

Plastic Surgery

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards there are to ensure that all surgeons carrying out plastic surgery are suitably qualified, and to protect those individuals undergoing plastic surgery; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Plastic surgeons securing consultant appointments in the national health service have to meet the requirements of employing authorities' advisory appointments committees. These include representatives of the Royal College of Surgeons who ensure that the experience and training of a candidate is appropriate to the particular appointment.

Self-governing Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the chairpersons and non-executive directors of all self-governing trusts and the annual remuneration paid to each.

Dr. Mawhinney: A list of all trust appointees has been placed in the Library. All non-executive directors are paid at the rate of £5,000 per annum. The remuneration for trust chairmen is paid in three bands according to the unit turnover in 1988-89.

Band 1 (Turnover in excess of £50 million)	19,285
Band 2 (Turnover in between £20-£50 million)	17,145
Band 3 (Turnover less than £20 million)	15,125

Accidents (Children)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children received hospital treatment following road accidents who had been (a) wearing and (b) not wearing seat belts, in each of the last 10 years;

(2) what are the assessed costs to the national health service for treating children injured by (a) accidents in the home, (b) as the result of motor vehicle accidents where they were passengers and (c) suffered as the result of road traffic accidents where they were pedestrians.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. In the "Health of the Nation" White Paper we indicate that the development of information systems in accident and emergency departments is a key measure in our strategy for reducing accidents. From this April a new minimum data set will be introduced in A and E departments which will record both the cause and the nature of patients' treatment, thus enabling such costs to be assessed. In further developing this data set we will consider whether seat belt usage in road accidents should also be recorded.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are employed by the health education authority to promote (a) the installation and wearing of child seat belts and restraints and (b) child safety in the home.

Dr. Mawhinney: Several staff are employed by the Health Education Authority on child accident prevention, but none exclusively. The authority produces information for parents and the public, and support for health professionals in their role in accident prevention. This includes information on the installation and wearing of child seat belt restraints.

Home Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allocation of funds exist for accident prevention in the home.

Dr. Mawhinney: No information is held centrally about the cost of the continuing efforts and special initiatives by people working in health and social services which help combat home accidents. Direct expenditure by central Government on home safety is by the Department of Trade and Industry whose consumer safety unit allocate about £1 million per annum to home safety campaigns targeted at the general public and at high-risk groups and in addition funds the home and leisure accident surveillance systems.

Chlamydia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has regarding the links between the development of pelvic inflammatory disease and abortions on women infected with chlamydia.

Mr. Sackville: We are aware of medical discussions on the nature and extent of the link between infection with chlamydia and pelvic inflammatory disease in pregnant women including those who undergo a termination of pregnancy.

Articles on this topic have appeared in professional journals in this country and abroad.

Community Care

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the local authorities who have been offered free consulting time prior to the introduction of community care; what was the basis for their selection; which local authorities have accepted; what was the cost to the Department of this initiative; and which consultancy firms were used in this initiative.

Mr. Yeo: Since September 1992 the community care support force has provided practical assistance to local and health authorities in their final preparations for implementing the caring for people reforms. As part of its programme, it has visited individual local and health authorities, by invitation. The support force has offered authorities assistance, including, consultancy support and expects to have committed, by the end of March when it finishes work, about £250,000 in this form of help to authorities. The support force has used a number of consultancy firms and its work also includes: the production of practical guidance and working seminars on key implementation tasks, an implementation helpline and a regular newsletter.

Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the original estimate of expenditure of the Royal Victoria infirmary, Newcastle, new ward block when the project began; and what is the total expenditure incurred so far.

Mr. Sackville: Based on actual building costs and standards prevailing at the start of construction, the original estimated cost of the new ward block was £23·3 million excluding fluctuations. The contract was completed on time in July 1991 and the cost incurred was £27·2 million including £3·4 million for fluctuations. Fluctuations are the sums paid to reimburse the contractor for increases in labour, plant and material costs as the work proceeds. Four small additional contracts have since been let to provide additional facilities on site.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 536, what provisions exist for identifying maternal deaths following complications after abortions which occur after the notification form has been passed to his Department.

Mr. Sackville: As with all maternal deaths, district directors of public health assemble confidential information regarding deaths following legal abortion. This information is collected by the Chief Medical Officer and published anonymously in the "Reports on Confidential Enquiries into Maternal Deaths", copies of which are available in the Library. This information is collected independently of the system for notification of abortions under the Abortion Act 1967.

DEFENCE

High Energy Beam Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests are either currently conducted or planned to be conducted by his Department at his Department's site at Dundennan in Scotland into high energy beam weapons in conjunction with the United States Defence Advanced Research Projects Agency.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. A. R. Chisholm to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 2 February 1993.

In today's written answer the Secretary of State for Defence informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding tests on high energy beam weapons at Dundrennan, Scotland.

The tests to which I think you are referring are part of a DRA research programme into the feasibility of using electromagnetic energy for the propulsion of a solid projectile to enhance the armour penetrating performance of tank gunnery. This is a collaborative research programme between the United Kingdom and the United States which has nothing to do with so-called high energy beam weapons. The tests will be carried out at a facility that is still in the process of construction on the MOD range at Kirkcudbright; it is due to be completed by the end of May 1993.

Porton Down

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the source of the biological and chemical nerve agents used in prophylactic research at Porton Down chemical research establishment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is a matter for the chemical and biological defence establishment (CBDE) under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 2 February 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what is the sourse of the biological and chemical agents used in prophylactic research at Porton Down Chemical Research Establishment (Question 6, Order Paper 25 January 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures (including prophylactic measures) against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work it is necessary to investigate the effectiveness of protective measures against the range of potential chemical and biological agents. This involves the use of small quantities of chemical agents which are largely synthesised as required. Some of the chemical agents are provided from residual stocks originally prepared at Nancekuke and on occasion it is necessary to obtain compounds from external suppliers. In respect of biological agents, these are usually produced from cultures held at CBDE Porton Down although again on occasion it is necessary to obtain culture samples from external sources.

3. The Chemical Weapons Convention which recently opened for signature in Paris allows States Parties to carry out work on protective measures and permits each State Party to the Chemical Weapons Convention to have a single small scale facility in which small quantities of Schedule 1 chemicals for protective purposes can be prepared or stored. The United Kingdom small scale facility will be at CBDE Porton Down.

Reservists (Annual Reporting)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many army reservists have not been able to undertake an annual reporting exercise during the last 12 months due to the inability to their units to fund such events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The annual reporting exercise for army reservists was funded centrally by the Ministry of Defence and not by units, but the exercise has been suspended since autumn 1991 as a result of the restructuring of the reserve forces. The suspension will be reviewed once the restructuring is complete.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given by his Department to the level of investment in specialist training and equipment undertaken to date by Dyfed county fire brigade to deal with offshore emergencies in tandem with the search and rescue helicopter squadron at RAF Brawdy within his Department's review of the search and rescue service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The level of investment in specialist training and equipment, by Dyfed county fire brigade is a matter for that brigade.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consideration was given to the overlapping of circles of coverage in his Department's review of the search and rescue service in the United Kingdom;

(2) what assessment has been made by his Department of the impact of a withdrawal of the search and rescue helicopter squadron from RAF Brawdy upon response times in dealing with coastal and offshore emergencies in and around the Ceredigion and Pembroke, North constituency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the open government document "The Future Provision of Royal Air Force Search and Rescue Helicopters", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the average response time taken by Sea King helicopters from RAF Brawdy to reach the scene of a coastal or offshore emergency in and around the Ceredigion and Pembroke, North Constituency in each of the last three years; and if he will publish estimated response times for helicopters from (a) RAF Chivenor and (b) RAF Valley to reach future coastal or offshore emergencies in or near the constituency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on average response time taken by Sea King helicopters from RAF Brawdy for the area and period in question can be provided only at disproportionate cost. For future estimated response times from RAF Chivenor and RAF Valley, I refer the hon. Member to the open government document "The Future Provision of RAF Search and Rescue Helicopters", a copy of which is in the Library of the House and which shows that the civil search and rescue criteria will be met.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what research has been conducted by his Department on the effect of withdrawing the search and rescue helicopter squadron from RAF Brawdy upon established contingency plans drawn up by the Dyfed fire brigade to deal with offshore emergencies;

(2) what assessment has been made by his Department into the effect of withdrawing the search and rescue helicopter squadron from RAF Brawdy upon the training needs of local county fire fighters in tackling offshore emergencies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. The RAF search and rescue helicopter flight will continue to assist fire brigades in their training for dealing with offshore emergencies when this flight is transferred from RAF Brawdy to RAF Chivenor.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of lives saved in and around the Ceredigion and Pembroke, North constituency in each of the last five years, as a result of the response of the search and rescue helicopter Squadron at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such estimates are not made. For information on the number of call-outs involving the rescue of people I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 2 November 1992 at column 51-2.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long a person could be immersed in water at (a) 6°C and (b) 7°C before experiencing at least a 50 per cent. chance of becoming unconscious; and how rapidly, in percentage terms, their chances of survival would thereafter diminish.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the 1986 report of the United Kingdom civil rescue helicopter coverage working group, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Atomic Weapons Establishment (Accidents)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of the unclassified reports of inquiries into accidents and incidents which occurred at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston on 15 May 1961, 19 December 1976, 23 July 1978, 29 November 1978, 2 December 1987 and 19 February 1991.

Mr. Aitken: It would neither be appropriate nor practicable to place in the Libary unclassified versions of reports into accidents and incidents which occurred at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston over the last 30 years, nor could this information be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Landing Platform Helicopter

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for the landing platform helicopter.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 15 January to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) at column 840.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which firms have been invited to tender for the main engines for the landing platform helicopter.

Mr. Aitken: Tenders for the main engines form part of the tenders for the landing platform helicopter currently being evaluated by my Department. Details of these tenders are commercially confidential.

Crossley Engines, Manchester

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD contracts have been placed with Crossley Engines of Manchester in the past 10 years.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's direct contracts with the Crossley Engines division of NEI Allen Ltd. are for spares and repairs only. Complete engines would normally be supplied on a sub-contract basis through a prime contractor such as a shipbuilder.

To minimise administrative effort, both by my Department and the company, one enabling arrangement was set up in July 1990. This permits nominated officials to order spares from Crossley Engines as and when required, without having to negotiate separate contracts each time. Since July 1990, we have also placed 15 small contracts for special requirements outside the scope of the enabling arrangement.

Data on contracts before 1990 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

B Flight 202

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of call-outs flown by B Flight 202 squadron RAF Brawdy in 1986 and 1992; and how many operations in each year were in response to military incidents.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures in brackets show the number of call-outs that involved the rescue of people, including incidents such as the transfer of sick or injured people from ship to hospital.

Year	Total Call-outs	Military Call-outs
1986	98 (46)	11 (4)
1992	158 (50)	7 (2)

St Anne's Head and RAF Brawdy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which bodies, organisations or individuals he has received objections to, or statements of concern about, the proposed removal of search and rescue helicopters from RAF Brawdy; and how many objections or expressions of concern he has received in total.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has received a number of representations from a variety of sources on the withdrawal of the RAF search and rescue flight from RAF Brawdy.

NATO Status of Forces Agreement

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in the renegotiation with the German authorities of the supplementary agreement to the NATO status of forces agreement; when he expects the negotiations to be concluded; and when he expects a new agreement to come into force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1992, col. 718]: The negotiations on the review of the supplementary agreement to the NATO status of forces agreement have now been concluded. The outcome is a good one from the United Kingdom's point of view. The agreement ensures that our forces in Germany will be able to train effectively and that the quality of life of the forces involved has been preserved. Signature of the agreement is likely in the late spring.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobcentres

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will re-open the jobcentre in Barnoldswick, Lancashire; and if she will make a statement on the criteria used in deciding whether to re-open jobcentres

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 2 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the Employment Service office in Barnoldswick. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The decision to close the office at Barnoldswick in April 1991 was taken only after a full consultation process. The representations we received were considered very carefully and all the relevant factors were taken into account. The office at Barnoldswick had offered only a limited service and did not reflect the full range of services available at our nearby fully integrated office at Colne. It was mainly for this reason that it was decided to close the office.

There are no plans to re-open the office. However, to ensure that local clients have ready access to job opportunities we have provided two vacancy display boards and a freephone facility in the local library.

You also asked what criteria are used when considering the re-opening of offices. A number of factors are taken into account when such decisions are taken and these would apply equally to the initial siting of offices. Such factors include:

—levels of business to be generated.
—number of clients to be served.
—the level of service offered to our clients.
—the proximity of other offices.
—availability of suitable premises.

Other factors may be taken into account when looking at specific locations but the overriding consideration is to provide the best possible service to our clients within available resources. We cannot, I am afraid, provide an office in every location.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Trade Unions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which employers' associations or employers have asked for trade unions to be required to review members' written authorisations to deduction at source of union subscriptions every three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no such representations. Under proposals in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill it is employers who will be required to seek renewed consent to check-off deductions from their employees every three years.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individual claimants have registered as unemployed since (a) April 1990 and (b) November 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the period April 1990 to December 1992, and on the unadjusted basis, about 354,300 people on average per month joined the claimant unemployment count and 313,900 people on average per month left the count. The corresponding figures for the period since November 1990 are 371,600 and 321,600 respectively. Of those becoming unemployed about a quarter leave unemployment within the first month; a half leave within the first three months and two-thirds within six months.

Work Permits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for the last five years the number of employers whose applications for a work permit are refused who ask for a review; and what percentage of those reviews result in a reversal.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research and data collection are carried out by her Department to assess which skills are in short supply to inform decisions on work permit applications.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department draws on a range of labour market information and consults employer and professional bodies and other relevant organisations to inform decisions on work permit applications.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average time taken to inform (a) tier 1 applicants for work permits and (b) tier 2 applicants for work permits whether their applications have been successful.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available in the form requested. During 1992 more than 80 per cent. of work permit applications were decided within eight weeks of receipt.

Employment Training

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what has been the average administrative cost to her Department of a place on the employment action scheme;

(2) what has been the average administrative cost to her Department of a place on the employment training scheme;

(3) what will be the average administrative cost to her Department of a place on the training for work scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that this information is not available.

Health and Safety Executive

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of reportable accidents in the north-west resulted in a visit by an inspector from the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

Unemployment Benefit Disqualification

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes the constituency of Newcastle under Lyme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mrs. Llin Golding, dated 2 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the Newcastle-under-Lyme area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Information about the length of disqualification periods imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes Warley East.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Andrew Faulds, dated 2 February 1993.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the Warley East area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

SCOTLAND

Fife Health Board

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the resignation of Mrs. Ann Ferguson from the chairmanship of Fife health board; and what severance or compensation payment was made on her resignation.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has nothing to add to the statements issued by Mrs. Ferguson and by him on 22 January. Any payment made to Mrs. Ferguson at the time her resignation takes effect will be subject to normal rules for reporting expenditure to Parliament.

Sight Tests

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people had sight tests in all health board areas for which figures are available in (a) the last 12-month period for which figures are available and (b) in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested for each of the financial years from 1987-88 to 1991-92 is shown in the table. Information for the period October 1991 to September 1992, the last full 12-month period for which information is available, is shown separately in the table.

[1] One person may have more than one sight test in the period.
[2] Since 1 April 1989 free National Health Service sight tests have only been available to children, full-time students under 19, those in receipt of Income Support or Family Credit, the registered blind and partially sighted, complex lens users, those who hold an AG2 exemption certificate from the Health Benefits Unit, diagnosed diabetic or glaucoma sufferers, and close relatives aged 40 or over of glaucoma sufferers. Information is not collected on private sight tests.

Littlewoods Pools

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will visit the Littlewoods Pools operation at Inchinnan, Paisley.

Sir Hector Monro: Littlewoods Pools is located at Hillington, Glasgow. My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to visit Hillington.

Special Educational Needs

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the outstanding appeals under section 70 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, relating to children with special educational needs, will be expedited.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Work is proceeding as quickly as possible on complaints to the Secretary of State under section 70 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980. Such complaints are made by parents of children with records of needs alleging that an education authority has failed to discharge its duty.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to issue revised guidance to education authorities on records of needs for children with special educational needs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I hope to do so later this year.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce reforms to the records of needs procedure for children with special educational needs, so as to (a) provide for an appeal to an independent tribunal and (b) specify a time limit for completing records of needs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The incidence of appeals against the terms of records of needs—around five per annum—is insufficient to justify the setting up in Scotland of a statutory tribunal to hear them.

The Scottish Office education department has issued guidance specifying the timescale within which a record of needs should normally be completed. Research by Edinburgh university in 1989 showed that over one half of all records of needs in Scotland are completed in under six months and nearly three quarters in under eight months. I regard that as a sound achievement, but I shall continue to encourage education authorities to improve on this performance.

Green Belts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy for the protection of green belts in and around urban areas of Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend's policy for protecting green belts is set out in Scottish Development Department circular 24/1985. Our consistent policy has been to maintain and enhance green belts.

EC Committees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings of committees of the EC each Scottish Office Minister chaired during the most recent United Kingdom Presidency.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to meetings of the Council of Ministers. Scottish Office Ministers did not chair any meetings of the Council of Ministers during the United Kingdom presidency. However, my hon. Friend, the Minister for Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, lead for the United Kingdom at the Fisheries Councils on 19 October and 23 November and shared the lead for the United Kingdom at the Fisheries Council on 19 December, and also attended the Agriculture Council on 26 October. My hon. Friend, the Minister for Education for Scotland, attended the Education Council on 27 November. On the occasions where Scottish Office Ministers do not personally attend, they are represented at all meetings of the Council of Ministers by senior officials or by their colleagues in the United Kingdom Government.

Dounreay (Radioactive Leak)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department was informed of the leakage of radioactive liquor at the Atomic Energy Authority's Dounreay nuclear power development establishment on 21 November 1992; what off-site contamination resulted from the leakage; and how many such incidents have been brought to the attention of his Department since 1988.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: A report of this incident was made to my Department on 26 November 1992. No off-site contamination occurred; radioactivity was confined within the immediate plant area.

Since 1988, four incidents involving radioactive liquor have been reported to my Department from civil nuclear installations in Scotland.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to make a statement on the results of his consideration of representations received on the consultation document, "Competing for Quality: Competition in the Provision of Local Services;" and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: My right hon. and learned Friends the Secretaries of State for the Home Department and for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage announced the outcome of the Government's consideration on 10 November 1992. These announcements covered England, Scotland and Wales. My hon. Friend the Minister for Education and Housing made a separate announcement on 10 November in relation to home-to-school transport in Scotland.

Officials are currently holding detailed discussions with representatives of local government, including the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, on the practical aspects of implementing the Government's decisions.

European Parliament

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last formally and collectively met members of the European Parliament representing Scottish constituencies; what matters he discussed; when he next plans to meet them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland last met Scottish MEPs formally and collectively on 9 July 1991. Various issues relating to Scotland and the European Community were discussed. There are no immediate plans for a further such meeting.

Ambulance Service

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the work force of the Scottish ambulance service to discuss the efficient operation of services within (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board area and (b) Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]:My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet representatives of the work force. There are recognised procedures and channels for communication between staff and managers and between trade unions and management on issues relating to the efficiency of the operation of the Scottish ambulance service.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will hold a full public inquiry into the operation of the ambulance service within the Argyll and Clyde health board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Until my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has reached a decision as to whether a fatal accident inquiry into the death of Mr. Adleigh should be held, it is not appropriate to consider whether any other form of formal inquiry should be undertaken into the service within Argyll and Clyde health board area.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the percentage of ambulances in each service in Scotland that responded within (a) eight minutes and (b) 14 to 20 minutes to emergency calls in 1991-92.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: There is only one ambulance service for the whole of Scotland and the information in 1991-92 is as follows:

	Percent
0-8 minutes	49
14-20 minutes	95

Super-quarries

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what environmental impact assessment has been carried out of the proposal by Redland Aggregates for a super-quarry in South Harris; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 January 1993]: As required by the Environmental Assessment (Scotland) Regulations 1988, an environmental assessment of the proposal accompanied the planning application by Redland Aggregates Ltd. to the Western Isles islands council. The matter is currently before the islands council, although my right hon. Friend issued a direction in September 1991 requiring the application to be referred to him should the council be minded to approve it. Because of my right hon. Friend's possible involvement in this matter at a later stage, I am unable to comment further.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what planning policy guidance he has issued with regard to super-quarries and aggregate mining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 January 1993]: National planning guidelines on the working of aggregates in Scotland were issued in 1977. These guidelines, which are still extant, acknowledge the economic potential of coastal super-quarry developments and suggest that they would, in principle, be acceptable if damage to the environment is limited through careful choice of location and detailed site proposals. Following the commitment given in the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) all planning guidance is now being reviewed. In July 1992 a draft national planning policy guideline (NPPG) entitled "Land for Mineral Working" was issued for consultation. This will supersede the 1977 guidelines later this year and will provide the context within which local authorities should prepare up to date development plan policies for mineral working, including super-quarries where appropriate, in full consultation with the local community, and with regard to the economic needs and environmental considerations of their area.

KS Properties Ltd.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 457, what information his Department had on the company named on the mortgage deed filed at Companies House, Edinburgh, when approving the writing-off by the Scottish Development Agency of moneys due under the mortgage deed from KS Properties Ltd., and on the availability of assets in KS Properties Ltd. for the purposes of repaying the loan.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 January 1993]: My answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 457 related to the writing off of the balance of a loan owed to the Scottish Development Agency by KS Construction Ltd. The Scottish Office has never been invited to approve the writing off of any debt owed to the agency by KS Properties Ltd.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which present or past directors of KS Construction Ltd. or KS Properties Ltd. are or have been members of area boards involved with Scottish Enterprise, its predecessor body or any other publicly funded enterprise board or organisation in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 January 1993]: I am not aware that any person whom my right hon. Friend has appointed to any enterprise board or organisation in Scotland is or has been a director of KS Construction Ltd. or KS Properties Ltd. Membership of boards to which my right hon. Friend does not make appointments is generally a matter for the bodies concerned; and information is not held centrally.

Dentistry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate his Department has made of the total fixed capital in the hands of dentists in Scotland, and of return on that capital, over the last three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: No such estimate is made by the Department. The return on capital is one of the factors that the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration takes into account when recommending the target average net income for dentists.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is planning to maintain the current level of NHS dental services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The Government remain committed to a comprehensive NHS dental service. Health boards in Scotland are responsible for making arrangements for adequate provision of general dental services in their areas. Health boards have been reminded that they may seek approval to employ salaried dentists if they think this is necessary to ensure the continued availability of NHS dental services in their areas.

Engineering Industry

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department has taken to assist engineering manufacturing industry in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: The Scottish Office Industry Department assists the engineering industry in Scotland by providing advice on exports, technology and best management practice and by providing grant-aid. Grants are available to help companies to introduce new products and processes, to obtain specialist advice and, in certain areas, to undertake capital investment projects.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on Monday 11 January, c. 635, what financial provision is to be made either by his Department or by Scottish Nuclear Ltd. for the eventual permanent storage or disposal of high-level nuclear waste following its removal from the planned temporary dry stores at Torness and Hunterston.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: As indicated in my earlier answer, no decision has yet been taken about Scottish Nuclear Ltd's proposed dry store for spent AGR fuel. In the circumstances described in the hon. Member's question, financial provision would be a matter for Scottish Nuclear Ltd.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he applies in determining whether an area should be awarded enterprise zone status; which areas currently meet the criteria; which areas currently enjoy enterprise zone status; if he has any plans to review the criteria; if he has any plans to make further awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Enterprise zones are essentially policy instruments to encourage the physical and economic regeneration of areas with particular environmental, physical and economic problems. Since 1987, following an interim evaluation of the enterprise zone experiment, it has been Government policy that enterprise zone designation is an instrument to be used only in exceptional circumstances, where the costs can be justified and where there are no alternative, more cost-effective measures available.

The case for enterprise zone designation for an area is measured against three basic criteria, broadly the nature and severity of problems in the area; the likely cost-effectiveness of enterprise zone designation compared with other available measures; and the extent to which authorities and agencies can ensure the success of the zone. If these basic criteria are met, the case is considered in greater depth by reference to a range of more detailed issues. Enterprise zone arrangements are, however, kept under constant review. European Commission approval is required for any designation proposals.

Enterprise zones are currently designated in Inverclyde, Invergordon and Tayside in Scotland. Orders were laid before Parliament on 12 January proposing enterprise zone designation for sites in Lanarkshire with effect from 1 February 1993.

My right hon. Friend has no plans for further designations in Scotland other than as set out in the orders for Lanarkshire referred to above.

Renfrewshire Enterprise

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the annual cost of renting or leasing the premises of Renfrewshire enterprise in Causeyside street, Paisley; what is the annual cost of providing heating and lighting for these premises; what is the cost per square foot for each year of these respective charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 27 January 1993]: These are operational matters for Scottish Enterprise, and I have therefore referred the hon. Member's question to the chairman of Scottish Enterprise.

Small Businesses

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what schemes his Department operates to provide assistance to small businesses; if he will indicate the eligibility criteria for each scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 January 1993]: My Department itself operates the following schemes of assistance to small businesses.

Regional Investment Grant

Available to businesses in development areas with fewer than 25 employees for investment projects. It covers 15 per cent. of the cost of fixed assets to a maximum of £15,000.

Regional Innovation Grant

Available to independent businesses or groups in the development areas with fewer than 50 employees for innovation projects. It covers 50 per cent. of agreed project costs to a maximum of £25,000.

Small firms also have access to a number of schemes designed to meet their needs and funded by the Department of Trade and Industry. Other more widely available forms of assistance such as regional selective assistance are open to small firms and they can also benefit from a full range of schemes operated and delivered through Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the network of local enterprise companies.

Textiles

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of people employed in the textiles industry in (a) Scotland (b) Strathclyde and (c) Renfrew district in each year since 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The information requested is given in the table.

Textiles industry employment in Scotland, Strathclyde region and Renfrew district 1973-1990

1990	25,652	8,854	1,640

Source: Scottish Register of Employment.
Note: The Scottish Register of Employment only holds information for manufacturing units with 11 or more employees.

As the table shows, textiles industry employment in Scotland declined considerably between 1973 and 1990. This decline was, however, accompanied by a significant improvement in labour productivity.

Over recent years the industry has faced particularly difficult trading conditions but levels of activity are likely to increase as the economy recovers.

The Scottish textiles industry has a fine export record and export orders increased between 1991 and 1992.

Whisky

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers employed in Scotch whisky distilling for each year since 1979; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) parliamentary constituency, (b) regional/island council and (c) district council in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 January 1993]: Figures from the Scottish Register of Employment relating to plants manufacturing Scotch whisky are as follows:

	Number of employees
1979	22,600
1980	21,900
1981	20,100
1982	18,000
1984	14,600
1985	12,900
1986	12,300
1987	11,100
1988	10,100
1989	10,000
1990	10,700
1991[1]	10,400

The breakdowns requested are available on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information if necessary.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much each district local authority received in per capita contribution of aggregate external finance in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 January 1993]: The information is provided in the table for each year since aggregate external finance was introduced. The per capita figures have been calculated using the Registrar General for Scotland's mid-year estimates of total population.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each local authority in Scotland the proportion of local authority finance (a) including and (b) excluding housing, derived from (i) central Government, (ii) business rates, (iii) rents, fees and charges and (iv) poll tax in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 January 1993]: The information requested is given in tables 1 and 2. Table 1 shows proportions of local authority income in 1992-93, excluding housing and table 2 shows the proportions including housing. The proportions shown in respect of community charges are inclusive of community charge benefit receipts from central Government. Figures on income from rents, fees and charges on services other than housing are not available centrally.

1. Column 1 consists of Revenue Support Grant, Specific Grants and Housing Support Grant.
2. Column 3 includes standard rental income from unrebated rents.

Forestry Sales

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in respect of Forestry Commission plantations sold since October 1991 (a) those in respect of which access agreements have been concluded and (b) those in respect of which access agreements have not been concluded, indicating the reasons why access was not given in each case.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 January 1993]: The arrangements for securing continued public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission were introduced in October 1991. The Commission has sold 18 areas of forest land since then, in addition to those sales which were too far advanced in October 1991 to be included for consideration under the new arrangements.

An access agreement has been concluded in respect of one of these areas, Steam Mills in Gloucestershire. Access agreements were not concluded for the other areas, which are listed, for the reasons given.

Newbridge and Chirk By-pass, Clwyd
Newport-Worcester Trunk Road, Gwent
These were sales for highway improvements.
Ifton Quarry, Gwent
Valley Woods, West Glamorgan
These were sales which arose from the exercise of reserved powers in the title, eg a landlord's right to resume possession of a leased area.
Blackwater Copse, Dorset
Markshall, Suffolk
Penyrallt (land at), West Glamorgan
These sales were to former owners under the offer-back procedures.
Barton Manor Woods, Isle of Wight
Fishpond, Hampshire
Oxendean, Borders
Oxlease, Hampshire
Patervan, Borders
Tall Boys, Hampshire
These areas were subject to third party rights, eg where the access to the area was over land owned by a third party who was not willing to join in an access agreement.
Dromore, Dumfries and Galloway
Glenscripesdale (part), Highland
These areas were sold to Scottish Natural Heritage.
Corrieour, Tayside

Mount Pleasant, Highland

The local authorities decided not to take up the offer of an access agreement for these areas.

Court Procedures

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to remove the need for witnesses in a trial, including police officers, to provide oral evidence to prove facts where the facts have been included in a statement submitted to the defence and the defence has served no counter-notice challenging their validity; and if he will estimate the saving in police time consequent on such a provision.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1993]: A similar proposal was made in part VI of the Scottish Law Commission's number 137—"Evidence: Report on Documentary Evidence and Proof of Undisputed Facts in Criminal Proceedings". We are considering that proposal as well as seeking to identify other means of minimising unnecessary court attendance by witnesses. The time saved by such a proposal would depend on the use made of counter-notices and it is not possible to predict that.

Hospitals

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many applications have been received from units or hospitals seeking trust status; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many expressions of interest have been received from units or hospitals seeking trust status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 February 1993]: Two trusts are currently operational. These will be joined by a further 15 in April 1993. Twenty-three other hospitals/units have expressed an interest in trust status and are currently developing possible applications.

MV Braer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the duration, frequency and geographical coverage, of monitoring activity undertaken by or on behalf of his Department in Shetland or coastal waters around Shetland, following on from the grounding of the MV Braer on 5 January; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 February 1993]: Extensive monitoring and sampling is being carried out covering sea and fresh water, sediments, fish, air, livestock and wildlife. Wherever appropriate, studies include control samples elsewhere in Shetland as well as from areas potentially affected by the oil spill. The information already available is copious: for example, on 28 January the marine laboratory in Aberdeen made available to local interests an 11-page bulletin reporting on seawater, sediments and fish monitoring, of which I have sent a copy to the hon. Member. Longer-term monitoring will be co-ordinated by the ecological steering group, which is to be chaired by Professor William Ritchie.

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of capital expenditure in the national health service in the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what was the split between hospital building and equipment.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 February 1993]: Expenditure on capital in the national health service in each of these years was as follows:

Year	£ thousands
1990-91	183·065
1991-92	254·300
1992-93	[1]262·360

[1] Estimate.

Information on the split between hospital building and equipment is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Paisley Pattern

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to promote the Paisley pattern; what steps he intends to take to encourage the development of the industrial manufacture of Paisley pattern goods in the town; and what resources are currently available to propagate the importance of the town's role in the worldwide commercial heritage of textiles.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: The local enterprise company, Renfrewshire Enterprise, is involved in a number of ways in the promotion and development of Paisley pattern. I consider that the actions which it has taken and is taking are likely to have a useful impact. If the hon. Member wishes details of Renfrewshire Enterprise's activities in this respect I know that the company will be pleased to provide further information.

The resources which Renfrewshire Enterprise and other interested bodies choose to devote to the propagation of the importance of Paisley's role in the worldwide commercial heritage of textiles is a matter for those bodies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) if he will make a statement on progress towards improving the working of the House of Commons;

(2) what proposals he has to reform the House of Commons.

Mr. Newton: Reform of the working of the House of Commons is being taken forward by following up the recommendations of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House.

Discussions through the usual channels are seeking to identify an acceptable basis as to when the House can take decisions on the Select Committee's report.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Accommodation

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the schools in Northern Ireland which have located Portacabin-type accommodation units on their sites, showing in each case the number of such units in use and the number of years that have elapsed since the first such unit was placed on site.

Mr. Hanley: There are over 1,300 schools in Northern Ireland and information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the latest estimate of schools with temporary classroom units on site is as follows:

Number of schools	Number of temporary classroom units
550	1—5
80	6—10
45	11—15
25	over 15

Care in the Community Fund

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money will be made available through the care in the community fund.

Mr. Hanley: The total amount of funds to be transferred from social security to the community care budget held and managed by health and social services boards will be £24·63 million in 1993-94, rising to £65·28 million in 1994-95 and to £100·33 million in 1995-96. A further sum of £4·822 million, over and above the transfer sum, will be made available to health and social services boards in 1993-94 to help operate the new arrangements.

Independent Living Fund

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have received payments from the independent living fund for each of the last three years.

Mr. Hanley: I understand that the information requested can be provided only in terms of the average numbers—based on quarterly counts—who received payments, and is as follows:

Year	Number
1990	748
1991	1,217
1992	1,929

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money in total was paid out to people in Northern Ireland under the independent living fund.

Mr. Hanley: I understand that the amount paid up to December 1992 was £10·787 million.

DEFENCE

AWE Aldermaston

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will order an independent safety investigation into the Aldermaston atomic weapons establishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We have no plans to order an independent safety investigation at the Aldermaston atomic weapons establishment, which is already subject to independent inspection under the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Safety is, and will remain, of paramount importance at the establishment.

Southern Lebanon (Helicopter Deployment)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what charge will be raised from the Foreign Office by his Department for the deployment of three RAF Wessex helicopters from Cyprus on 23 January to southern Lebanon.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Final figures are still being collected in Cyprus, but it is anticipated that the charge, based on extra cost, will amount to some £20,000.

Health and Safety

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy relating to the release of official information on health and safety issues at (a) the atomic weapons establishment and (b) the Defence Research Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It is my Department's policy to make available all information required in order to comply with health and safety legislation at the atomic weapons establishment and the Defence Research Agency.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to changing his policy relating to the release of official information on health and safety issues at (a) the atomic weapons establishment and (b) the Defence Research Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We have no plans to change our policy.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received relating to the release of information concerning health and safety issues at Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others on this subject.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current health and safety arrangements at Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: The current health and safety arrangements at Aldermaston are designed to ensure that the well-being of the work force, and the safety of the site and the surrounding environment are and will continue to be of paramount importance.

RAF Ground Training

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 November 1992, Official Report, columns 536-537, if a decision has now been taken on the proposal to rationalise Royal Air Force ground training.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has consulted thoroughly with the trade unions on the proposal to concentrate training at RAF Cosford, RAF Halton and, subject to further review, RAF Locking. No issues have been raised which call into doubt the viability of the proposal and I have therefore decided that it should be implemented as I set out on 6 November.

Every effort will be made to find alternative employment for the staff affected by these organisational changes and action will be taken to assist those involved in relocation. The personal preferences of staff will be carefully and sympathetically considered and all possible measures will be taken to minimise civilian redundancies. Where redundancies do occur, all staff will be entitled to the appropriate periods of notice or pay in lieu and to compensation in accordance with the relevant pension scheme. The MOD redundancy and outplacement service and the relocation scheme will be available for staff wishing to make use of these services.

Attack Helicopter

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the procurement of an attack helicopter for the British Army.

Mr. Aitken: We have previously advised the House of our intention to order a complete attack helicopter weapons system to replace the Lynx in the anti-armour role; and to procure the aircraft, together with an associated support package "off the shelf" through a prime contractor, following competition. I am pleased to announce that the invitation to tender, which will initiate this competition, is being issued to potential bidders today.

St. Anne's Head and RAF Brawdy (Winds)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the annual percentage of winds of at least (a) 5 knots, (b) 10 knots, (c) 15 knots, (d) 20 knots, (e) 25 knots, (f) 30 knots, (g) 35 knots and (h) 40 knots recorded at St. Anne's head and RAF Brawdy during each of the last six years;

(2) what was the annual percentage of winds coming from each point of the compass recorded at St. Anne's head and RAF Brawdy during each of the last six years;

(3) what was the annual percentage of winds coming from each point of the compass at speeds of at least (a) 5 knots, (b) 10 knots, (c) 15 knots, (d) 20 knots, (e) 25 knots, (f) 30 knots, (g) 35 knots and (h) 40 knots recorded at St. Anne's head and RAF Brawdy during each of the last six years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These matters are delegated to the Meteorological Office under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 2 February 1993.

I am responding to your three written Parliamentary Questions concerning the wind at St. Anne's Head and RAF Brawdy for each of the last six years.

The figures that follow all refer to RAF Brawdy as information from St. Anne's Head is not available for the period requested. Wind directions are given in 30 degree sectors, e.g. 'east' will be for winds from directions between 075° and 105°. Wind speeds are in knots. The information is based on hourly mean winds (i.e. winds averaged over an hour).

Rosyth and Devonport Dockyards

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will commission independent financial advisers to carry out costings comparisons of the bids of Rosyth and Devonport dockyard managements with respect to the future maintenance requirements of Trident submarines.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's work on future refitting arrangements, including assessments of the various proposals put forward by the dockyard contractors, has, for some considerable time, been informed by the use of independent consultants. They will continue to advise on all appropriate aspects of proposals under consideration.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Finance and Services Committee

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Lord President of the Council what arrangements will be made in respect of answering hon. Members' questions relating to the work of the Finance and Services Committee.

Mr. Tony Newton: I intend to amend the question rota shortly to take account of the establishment of the Finance and Services Committee. After consultation with the House of Commons Commission, I have agreed that oral questions to the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee should be included in the same "slot" as questions to the Member answering for the House of Commons Commission. The Chairman, my right hon. Friend the Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon), will respond in particular to "questions concerning the estimates for House of Commons expenditure (which will be prepared under his Committee's supervision), the financial performance of Departments of the House, and the financial implications of any new or expanded services which may be proposed by the committees appointed under Standing Order No. 125 (Domestic Committees)" (Official Report, 11 February 1992 column 452).

The oral questions to the Commission and the Finance and Services Committee will be printed in one combined order created by the random selection process. They will be taken every sixth Monday, at 3.15 pm. In order to reflect the changes in direct responsibility for House services, ten minutes will be allocated to the new combined slot, and questions to the Lord President of the Council will follow at 3.25 pm.

In addition, questions for written answers may also be tabled to the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee concerning the exercise of the responsibilities of the Committee.

VAT

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what VAT treatment has been agreed between the British Bankers Association and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise with regard to the VAT treatment of supplies of non-executive directors' services made by investing institutions to investee companies.

Sir John Cope: There has been no specific agreement concerning non-executive directors' fees. These fall to be treated in the same way as management fees which are included in the list of guidelines agreed between Customs and the British Bankers Association. Where a director is appointed to the board of the United Kingdom investee company as a condition of a loan, any charges for the director's services are part of the consideration for the loan, an exempt supply. Alternatively, where the investor acquires shares and exercises the right to appoint a director, Customs take the view that there is no supply for VAT purposes, as any shares are supplied to the investing institution by the investee company. In either case, any associated VAT incurred by the investing institution would not be recoverable.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the net revenues raised by the increase in VAT from 8 per cent. to 15 per cent. in June 1979 in the first full year thereafter, in cash and current prices.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 2 February 1993]: As shown on page 31 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1979-80 £430 million was expected to be raised from unifying the rates of VAT at 15 per cent. in 1980-81.

Bank Fees

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what VAT liability is applied to arrangement fees charged by a bank to its customers in connection with a debt for equity exchange by that bank.

Sir John Cope: The VAT liability of arrangement fees charged by banks depends strictly on the terms of the contracts between the parties. Without further details, it is difficult to be precise about the liability. Arrangement fees charged by the banks in respect of loans or other forms of credit form part of the consideration for the loan, an exempt supply. Moreover, where a borrower issues shares in return for loan capital, any arrangement fee would also be exempt from VAT. In either case, any associated VAT incurred by the bank would not be recoverable.

Charities

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of VAT receipts to Her Majesty's Treasury from charities in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) on 28 January 1993 at column 791.

Commuters (Tax Relief)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate such information as he has available about tax relief for people commuting to and from work by rail, for OECD countries.

Mr. Dorrell: No OECD country allows tax relief specifically for rail travel to and from work. But the following countries allow various levels of tax relief for journeys to and from work by public transport:

Germany
Netherlands

The following countries allow various levels of tax relief for home-to-work travel by any type of transport:

Austria
Belgium

Denmark
France
Japan
Luxembourg
Norway
Sweden

Remaining OECD countries either do not allow any tax relief for travel to and from work, or the information is not available.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Securities and Investments Board concerning the future of LAUTRO and FIMBRA and their proposed successor bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Recognition of a self-regulatory organisation is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board. It would be inappropriate for the Treasury to be involved in drawing up detailed plans for the Personal Investment Authority. Nevertheless, I welcome the progress made so far and see imporant advantages for investor protection if the PIA were established to regulate private investor business with the support of firms who do business in that sector.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to seek to reform the Financial Services Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend has asked the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board to review how SIB carries out its regulatory responsibilities.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage change in (a) real terms and (b) cash terms of his Department's budget from 1992-93 to 1993-94.

Sir John Cope: The Treasury's budget includes expenditure on certain Bank of England services, United Kingdom coinage, Parliament and Privy Council in addition to the running costs of the central Treasury. The percentage change between 1992-93 and 1993-94 based on the latest 1992-93 forecast outturn is:

(a) −4·1 per cent. in real terms; and
(b) −1·4 per cent. in cash terms.

Tax (1981 Budget)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the net revenues raised by the tax changes introduced in the 1981 Budget in the first full year thereafter, in cash and current prices.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 February 1993]: An estimate of revenues in cash terms is contained in table 2 of the 1981-82 "Financial Statement and Budget Report". An estimate in current prices can be obtained using the series for the GDP deflator published in the 1993 "Economic Trends" annual supplement. Both are available in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Seat Belts

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken to ensure co-ordination between the Home Department and the Department of Transport regarding the campaign on the wearing of seat belts scheduled for February.

The Prime Minister: The campaign is a matter for the Department of Transport. It has consulted the Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Officers, who support the campaign.

Needle Exchange Schemes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if he will co-ordinate ministerial consideration of a centrally funded approach for needle exchange schemes to work towards the elimination of illegal needle and syringe disposal.

The Prime Minister: There are about 300 needle exchange schemes. In 1988, general guidance on such schemes was issued to health authorities including advice on the disposal of used equipment.

The Department of Health issued further guidance when it made £1·4 million central funding available to health authorities in 1992-93 to expand the number of such schemes based in pharmacies. Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, managers of such schemes must take all resonable steps to ensure that the waste is handled and disposed of safely and legally.

India

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his discussions with the Indian Prime Minister on the status of Kashmir and the human rights of Kashmiri people during his recent visit to India.

The Prime Minister: I discussed the situation in Kashmir with the Indian Prime Minister. I restated our view that the best way forward is through dialogue between India and Pakistan; improvement in human rights and a genuine political process in Kashmir; and an end to all external support for violence in Kashmir. Mr. Narasimha Rao assured me of his determination to hold elections in Kashmir as soon as possible and of his commitment to respect for human rights.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Prime Minister what were the full terms of the agreement reached with the Indian Government during his visit on the importation of Scotch whisky.

The Prime Minister: During my visit to India, I took the opportunity to urge the Government of India to accelerate the liberalisation of its import regulations, which would include such products as Scotch whisky. We are continuing to press for an early resolution of this matter.

Secretaries of State (Powers)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland have equal delegation of powers.

The Prime Minister: The powers of the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland reflect the different constitutional positions of Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the principal responsibilities of (a) the Secretary of State for Wales, (b) the Secretary of State for Scotland and (c) the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and the principal differences of those responsibilities; and what changes he is planning to make to the responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Scotland.

The Prime Minister: The principal responsibilities of the Secretaries of State are set out in the list of ministerial responsibilities, a copy of which is in the Library. A review of a wide range of aspects of governance of Scotland, including the responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Scotland, is under way. The Government will make an announcement to the House about the results of the review once it is complete.

Cabinet Office Budget

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister what is the percentage change in (a) real terms and (b) cash terms of the Cabinet Office budget from 1992-93 to 1993-94.

The Prime Minister: The percentage reduction in spending plans for the Cabinet Office, excluding the Office of Public Service and Science, between 1992-93 and 1993-94 is expected to be (a) 23·9 per cent. in real terms, and (b) 21·8 per cent. in cash terms. The reduction is due mainly to the fact that capital expenditure is expected to be less in 1993-94 than in 1992-93.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will bring forward proposals for procedures for the House to scrutinise the way in which its decisions on proposed European Community directives and regulations are reflected in voting in the Council of Ministers when the proceedings of the Council become public; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements are being made within the European Community for the implementation of the decision by the Edinburgh conference that votes cast in the Council of Ministers will be published; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As agreed at Edinburgh, the Council secretariat will make arrangements to publish the record of the vote, including explanations of the vote where delegations request these, whenever a formal vote is taken in Council. This information will be provided to the House.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister which members of the royal family have carried out engagements overseas on behalf of the Government in each year since 1989.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The information is as follows:

The Queen
The Duke of Edinburgh
The Prince and Princess of Wales
The Queen Mother
The Duke and Duchess of York
The Prince Edward
The Princess Royal
The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester
The Duke and Duchess of Kent
Princess Alexandra

1990
The Queen
The Duke of Edinburgh
The Prince and Princess of Wales
The Princess Royal
The Princess Margaret
The Duke of Gloucester
The Duke and Duchess of Kent
Princess Alexandra

The Queen
The Duke of Edinburgh
The Prince and Princess of Wales
The Prince Edward
The Princess Royal
The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester
The Duke and Duchess of Kent
Princess Alexandra

The Queen
The Duke of Edinburgh
The Prince and Princess of Wales
The Prince Edward
The Princess Royal
The Princess Margaret
The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester
The Duke and Duchess of Kent
Princess Alexandra

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions overseas visits have been made by members of the royal family in each year since 1989 at the request of Government Departments.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The number of overseas visits made by members of the royal family at the request of Government Departments, including the British Overseas Trade Board, in the years concerned was as follows:

	Number
1990	28
1991	35
1992	41

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments have requested members of the royal family to carry out engagements on behalf of the Government in each year since 1989.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 February 1993]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecutions

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions were brought by the Crown prosecution service arising out of investigations by the Metropolitan police in each inner and outer London magistrates court in the latest month for which the information is available; what was the number for the same month one year ago; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for the change.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available in the form requested. Figures are held for whole Crown prosecution service areas rather than for individual magistrates courts.

The Crown prosecution service does record the number of cases received in each area, which includes cases received for advice. The year ending figures for the periods indicated are as follows:

	September 1991	September 1992	Percentage change
Inner London	148,117	146,555	−1·05
London North	80,663	79,881	−0·97
London South and Surrey	63,113	60,373	−4·34
Total CPS	1,603,002	1,569,996	−2·06

The figures include cases received from police forces other than the Metropolitan police, for example, British Transport police, and in respect of London south and Surrey, the Surrey police. No concluded assessment of the reasons for the change have yet been made.

HEALTH

Drugs

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give, by specialism, the membership of the committee considering the list of drugs purchasable over the counter;

(2) if a dermatologist will be invited to give evidence on the application of dermatological drugs to be considered by the committee on drugs purchasable over the counter; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The membership of the Committee on Safety of Medicines is given in the table. In accordance with the requirements of the Medicines Act 1968, we seek and take account of the Committee on Safety of Medicines' advice before deciding whether it is safe for a prescription-only medicine to be reclassified so that it may be supplied over the counter. If a dermatological medicine currently restricted to supply on prescription only were to be proposed for reclassification to allow it to be supplied over the counter, the Committee on Safety of Medicines' advice would be sought. It would be open to the Committee to obtain any additional specialist advice it considered necessary.

Drugs (Product Licences)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department has received from the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry regarding product licence information supplied to the Medicines Control Agency being made available for use by other sections of her Department including the section responsible for the management of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: Product licence information supplied to the Medicines Control Agency is not available for use by other sections of the Department. Officials have received a letter from the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industry on this matter and will be replying shortly.

Hospital Beds, West Midlands

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 689, on the west midlands, what information she has on the number of hospital beds at the dates given.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table. The number of beds, however, is not a good indicator of patient activity over the period in question as my earlier reply indicated. As in my earlier reply to the hon. Member, figures for 1991-92 are provisional. Validated figures will be published shortly.

Dentistry

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been de-registered on the initiative of dentists in Norfolk in the past 12 months.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally for the period required. Between 3 July 1992 and 22 January 1993 dentists informed Norfolk family health service association of the deregistration of 14,637 adults and 57 children.

During the 12 months 1 December 1991 to 30 November 1992, 111,390 adults and 53,347 children left the register of national health service dental patients in Norfolk and 177,356 adults and 58,457 children were added. At 1 December 1991, 413,797 patients were registered with dentists in Norfolk. At 30 November 1992, 484,878 patients were registered—a net increase of over 71,000.

Road Accidents

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recent figures available for the total annual cost to her Department of road-related accidents.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Pamphlets

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pamphlets the national health service management executive has published in the last year; if she will list the title, the recipients and the cost of each pamphlet; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 25 January 1993]: In the 12 months to 21 January 1993 the national health service management executive prepared and issued 57 pamphlets, leaflets and brochures to managers and staff in the NHS. The table gives the project number, description, cost and to whom it was sent.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Restructuring)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with (a) the Association of County Councils, (b) the Association of Chief Police Officers, (c) the Police Federation and (d) others with regard to proposals to restructure the police force and police authorities in Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no discussions relating to police organisation in Nottinghamshire. He is considering a range of issues relating to the future structure, organisation and funding of the police service generally.

My right hon. and learned Friend does not yet have firm proposals for change, but when he does, he will consult interested parties before final decisions are reached.

Fire Services, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the capacity of fire authorities in Nottinghamshire to cope with fire, emergency and other demands in 1993-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The standard of service provided by the Nottinghamshire fire and rescue service was last examined in the course of an inspection of the service by Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services between 19 and 23 October 1992. I expect the report of that inspection to be published shortly. It is for Nottinghamshire county council, in the light of its standard spending assessment, to set a budget for 1993-94 which will allow it to comply with its duties under the Fire Services Act 1947 as a fire authority, and with the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover.

Young Offenders

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders in the east midlands and in England and Wales were under 21 years of age in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 January 1993, at column 252.

Car Crime

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to reduce car crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the question from the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 16 December 1992 at column 208.

Vehicle Entry Devices

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to curb the use and sale of vehicle entry devices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have no plans at present to ban or control the sale of vehicle entry devices.

It should be stressed, however, that it is already a criminal offence, under section 25 of the Theft Act 1968, to carry equipment for use in connection with any burglary or theft. This covers vehicle entry devices, and upon conviction an offender is liable to imprisonment for up to three years.

Many people, such as locksmiths and garage owners, have a legitimate need for equipment such as skeleton keys, and this would make it extremely difficult to prohibit their sale. These devices are also often no more effective in gaining entry to locked vehicles than other more rudimentary tools, like screwdrivers or shaped pieces of metal, and often require some skill on the part of the user to work effectively.

Moreover, inquiries by the Home Office crime prevention centre and the Association of Chief Police Officers have not found any evidence of the widespread misuse of skeleton car keys. In particular, the Association of Chief Police Officers has reported that these devices have not been found in the possession of offenders charged with either theft of or from a vehicle.

We do not, therefore, see a need at present for legislation to control the possession, sale or advertising of skeleton car keys, but we shall continue to monitor the situation closely.

We are aware, however, that devices which are capable of deactivating electronic car alarms and central locking systems have recently appeared on the British market. We are actively looking into their availability and effectiveness, with a view to assessing what action may be required. Manufacturers too are aware of the existence of these devices and are working to improve the security of their products accordingly.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the percentage clear-up rate for each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 calculated solely on the basis of those charged and found guilty.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available.

Guilty Pleas

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 (a) the number of those people who appeared in court who entered an initial plea of guilty and (b) the percentage of all those who appeared in court which the figure in (a) represents.

Mr. Jack: The readily available information which is collected in selected sample weeks in February, June and October of each year for proceedings for indictable offences, including either-way, at magistrates courts, is given in the table.

Information for 1985 and earlier years is not available. Information on the type of plea for committals for trial dealt with by the Crown court by circuit, is published annually in the command paper "Judicial statistics, England and Wales". Table 6.7 of the 1991 issue (Cm 1990) gives data for 1990. Information for police force areas is not available.

Roads (Policing)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the most recent figures available for the total cost of policing the roads in the United Kingdom; what these figures include; and how they are created.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1991, approximately 8 per cent. of the total police strength in England and Wales was deployed on specialist traffic duties. The proportion of non-specialist officers' time spent on traffic matters is not recorded. The total costs could not be reliably estimated.

Police Staff

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff have been employed by each police authority in England and Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The table shows police and civilian strength from 1992. The information for 1979 to 1991 can be found in the appendix to the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, copies of which are in the Library.

Filmed Interviews

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the procedure which has to be followed by any person or organisation wishing to film an interview with a convicted prisoner (a) for research purposes, (b) for other private purposes and (c) for publication or broadcast; and at what level the decision is taken in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Requests to interview a prisoner must be made to the governor of the holding prison or the public relations branch of the Home Office. Applications from the media must be made in writing giving details of the requirements of the interviewer and the justification for the interview to take place.

If the interview is allowed to take place for research purposes or private purposes, a signed undertaking is required that none of the material gathered will be used in any publication or broadcast. Requests for interview for the purposes of publication or broadcast are considered by the public relations branch in conjunction with officials or governors, and where necessary after consultation with Ministers.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) who gave permission for the filming of an interview with Dennis Nilsen which was subsequently broadcast on television;

(2) to whom permission was given for the filming of the Nilsen interview; what were the terms of the written request for permission; and what written conditions were placed on the permission granted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him on Tuesday 2 February.

Appeal Cases

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases he referred to the Court of Appeal following an investigation by C3 division at his Department in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is given in the table:

Number of cases referred under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 in respect of conviction

Notes:

(a) In addition, one case was referred in October 1992 in respect of sentence only.

(b) One case was referred in January 1992 and one other in October 1992 under section 17(1)(b) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were referred to the Court of Appeal following investigation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is provided in the table:

In respect of conviction	Number of cases	Number of defendants
(a) Under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of alleged miscarriage of justice cases which were held by C3 division at his Department in 1992 or for the latest data available.

Mr. Jack: At the beginning of 1992, 171 representations were under consideration, 790 new representations were received during the year, and 783 representations were concluded; 178 representations were under consideration at the end of 1992.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average time taken to investigate an alleged miscarriage of justice by his Department during 1992 or for the latest year available;

(2) how many cases which are currently being examined by C3 division of his Department, at the latest date available, have been outstanding for more than 12 months.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available in the form requested. On the latest available information, the average time taken to deal with representations about an alleged miscarriage of justice is 41 days, but much depends on the complexity of the case and the extent of police or other inquiries that may be required to assess the representations made. Further representations may be received while a case is under consideration, prolonging the conclusion. At 1 February, there were 27 cases which had been under consideration for more than 12 months.

Frankland Prison

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry into the incident at Frankland prison involving a sexual assault by an inmate on a women prison officer while carrying out her official duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Serious assaults in prisons are usually investigated by the police. The incident at Frankland, involving a sexual assault on a woman prison officer by an inmate, was immediately referred to Durham constabulary, which is conducting an inquiry. Its findings are not yet known.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the national safety standards for prison officer staff; and what procedures are being followed by his Department to ensure that these were complied with at Frankland prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The safety of all prison staff is always a prime concern in designing procedures within establishments. Arrangements reflect local conditions and I am satisfied that all reasonable precautions to ensure the safety of staff are taken at Frankland. The nature of the work and the inmate population inevitably involves some element of risk.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officer staff have been employed at Frankland prison for each year of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Staffing figures for Frankland prison are available for the last seven years as shown in the table. Before 1986, staffing records were not centrally kept. Further information is not therefore readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many local authority areas help and advice is provided to young people who are cautioned; and how many (a) aged under 18 years and (b) aged over 18 years received such assistance in each of the past three years in each local authority area.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Squatting

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to tighten up the law on squatting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: As my hon. Friend knows, we are firmly committed to introduce legislation to tighten up the law on squatting. It is important that any new provisions deal effectively with this clearly unacceptable activity while striking the right balance between the criminal and the civil law. Any new provisions must also be both fair and enforceable. We have been giving very careful thought to the form which legislation might take and will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage change in (a) real terms and (b) cash terms of his Department's budget from 1992-93 to 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no change in real terms between the Home Office's estimated outturn for 1992-93 and its planned expenditure for 1993-94, but there is an increase of 2·75 per cent. in cash terms.

Privatisation

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to privatise parts of his Department over the next year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have given approval for advisers to be engaged in preparation for the privatisation of DTELS, formerly the Directorate of Telecommunications. The aim is to privatise during 1993-94 by means of a trade sale.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the percentage contribution to gross domestic product provided by manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom; and how this compares with percentages in the other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is in the table.

Manufacturing industry[5] as a percentage of gross domestic product in European Community countries

	1989
United Kingdom	[1]19·8
France	21·3
Germany	31·1
Italy	23·2
Belgium	23·3
Netherlands	20·2
Luxembourg	28·4
Denmark	15·8
Ireland	[2]22·3
Spain	26·9
Portugal	[3]29·2
Greece	[4]15·3

[1] Latest year 1987.
[2] Latest year 1979.
[3] Latest year 1986.
[4] Latest year 1988.
[5] Manufacturing is defined according to the International Standard Industrial Classification Division 38.
Source: OECD National Accounts.

United Kingdom manufacturing share of GDP can also be derived from figures published in "UK National Accounts, the Blue Book". These have the attraction of being more up to date. The United Kingdom national accounts data are, however, not directly comparable with data show in the above table and published by the OECD. A reason for non-comparability is that blue book data shown output at factor cost. OECD estimates show output at market prices. Taxes and subsidies are included in estimates at market prices, but are netted out in factor cost estimates.

Funeral Costs

Mr. McMaster: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to require all funeral directors to publish an itemised price list covering all costs associated with arranging a funeral; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: No. Whilst I strongly support price transparency, and would welcome an amendment to the code of conduct of the National Association of Funeral Directors in this direction, I do not think it would be appropriate for the Government to prescribe to the funeral industry how it should prepare its estimates and invoices.

British Telecom

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the results of the OFTEL consultancy study into the accounting separation of BT activities to be complete; and if he will place a copy in the Library as soon as it is complete.

Mr. Leigh: I understand from the Director General of Telecommunications that a preliminary consultancy report has now been received by OFTEL, and that BT's reactions are currently awaited. Any wider consultations and decisions made in the light of the report will be a matter of public record, with copies of the relevant documents available in the library of the House.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much funding has been given to research into clean coal technology in the United Kingdom for each year since 1985; and what corresponding information he has for Japan and the United States.

Mr. Eggar: The comparative coal research expenditure figures available for the United Kingdom, Japan and the USA since 1985 cover the period 1985 to 1990 and are as detailed. Specific figures for clean coal technology research are not known, but most of the expenditure detailed is believed to be focused on the development of clean coal technology for power generation.

Coal R&D expenditure in United Kingdom, United States of America and Japan

1. United Kingdom R&D expenditure on April-March financial year basis. Annual figures converted to 1990-91 base and inclusive of expenditure by DEn, DTI, DOE, SERC, CEGB, British Coal and British Gas.
2. Figures for USA and Japan extracted from IEA publication, "Energy policies of IEA countries—1991 reviews". Figures are published in 1991 $US which have been converted to £UK using the IEA average exchange rate of $1·764 to the £ for 1991.

Offshore Licences

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 822, which organisations specifically requested that their advice and response to his consultation on the 14th round of offshore licences should be treated in confidence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Consultation of other Departments and interested bodies took place on the understanding that the information provided would be treated in confidence. This is our established practice with regard to consultation on blocks offered for licensing.

Exceptional Projects Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister for Industry of 26 January, Official Report, column 972, (1) what consultations he has had with organisations representing United Kingdom business in relation to the suspension of section 8 assistance to exceptional projects scheme;

(2) what consultations he has had with the European Commissioners responsible for (a) competition and (b) industrial policy in relation to the suspension of section 8 assistance to exceptional projects scheme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 February 1993]: Only two projects have been able to satisfy the stringent criteria for demonstrating exceptional national benefit in five years. In these circumstances we did not hold consultations with organisations representing United Kingdom business on our decision to suspend the assistance for exceptional projects facility. The AEP facility required approval from the European Commission. We did not consult any Commission officials about the suspension I have announced.

Steel

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations on competition grounds he has made to the European Commission about the proposed merger of the steel tube interests of the main Italian Ilva, German Mannesmann and French Usinor, steel companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I understand the proposed joint venture between Ilva, Mannesmann and Usinor Sacilor, to combine their stainless steel seamless tube operations, is likely to fall for investigation by the European Commission under the merger control regulation. Mergers which qualify for investigation must be notified to the European Commission and member states have the opportunity to comment on them. The United Kingdom passes comments to the EC Commission on all notified cases. If the proposed joint venture between the three steel companies is notified the United Kingdom will assess its competition implications and submit comments in the usual way.

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the United States Government following their announcement that they will be imposing a 105 per cent. levy on imported British steel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The provisional anti-dumping duties of 109·22 per cent. on British Steel exports of steel plate are unwarranted and wholly disproportionate.

The actions, brought by the protected United States steel industry, cannot help efforts to secure a much-needed multilateral steel arrangement.

The President of the Board of Trade has written to United States Commerce Secretary Ron Brown urging him to focus on these matters at the earliest opportunity. The issue was also raised at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 February.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on his policy for tourism.

Mr. Key: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 13 November, Official Report, columns 997-98. I believe that the case is now much less strong for central Government funding of the promotion of tourism in England. The English tourist board has done a great deal over the years to raise standards, to improve access to information, and to show the industry how their products can be developed and marketed. As the industry matures, and the regional tourist boards develop, it is appropriate for other bodies to carry on many of the ETB's central activities. That is reflected in the allocations of Exchequer grants for tourism over the next three years.

However, I also believe that central Government support for the regional tourist boards should continue. I believe that this support should be targeted much more closely than at present on areas where the industry would not fully exploit tourism potential unaided and where this would assist with economic regeneration. The English tourist board is currently working on proposals for support to the regional tourist boards.

Historic Royal Palaces Agency

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration was given to repeating the assertion of his accountability for the policy, operations and resources of the Historic Royal Palaces Agency, contained in the 1990-91 review of the agency, in its 1991-92 report, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 22 January 1993]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Historic Royal Palaces Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Beeton. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Beeton to Mr. Toby Jessel, dated 28 January 1993:

I am writing to confirm our recent conversation about your Parliamentary Written Question on the Secretary of State's accountability for the policy operation and resources of the Historic Royal Palaces Agency.

The statements about this in the two documents you referred to derived from the Agency's Framework Document, which is it's Constitution, and was the basis upon which the Agency was established in 1989. That document was to be reviewed after 3 years. This is now in hand and I understand that no changes to the Secretary of State's above stated responsibilities are proposed. I am certainly not seeking any.

You also asked me whether the rumour that Bushy Park might be transferred to the Agency was true. I said that the question had been considered when the maintenance of Bushy Park had been put out to contract as to whether the same should happen at Hampton Court. It was decided then that merged management would not be appropriate and I do not expect this question to be raised again, at least until the present maintenance contract at Bushy Park expires, which is several years from now.

Badgers

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many individuals have been convicted under the Badgers Act 1973.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

Information is given in the table for the years 1979 to 1991 which is provisional. Data from 1973 to 1978 are not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russia (Biological Weapons)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 705, to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), what research assistance has been given to Russia in connection with ending biological weapons programmes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has not provided Russia with research assistance in connection with ending biological weapons programmes. Under the terms of a trilateral agreement reached between the United Kingdom, the United States and Russia on 11 September 1992, various measures to monitor compliance with the 1972 biological and toxic weapons convention are envisaged including an examination of ways to promote co-operation in the conversion of biological weapons facilities.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in respect of the resumption of the UN-sponsored talks on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is in regular contact with the United Nations Secretary General about Cyprus, as about other issues, through the British ambassador to the United Nations. The Government welcome the agreement by all parties to resume talks in March, and will continue actively to support the efforts of the United Nations.

Deported Palestinians

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking with regard to the continuing situation of the deported Palestinians.

Mr. Hogg: We have made our views very clear to the Israelis, most recently in a meeting between European Community Foreign Ministers and the Israeli Foreign Minister in Brussels on 1 February. The Israeli Government have now taken a helpful step in the right direction. We are urging on all concerned that it should be their top priority to resume the peace process.

World Television Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which sections of the world BBC World Service television is not broadcast; and when he expects the coverage to be complete.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: BBC World Service television, which is a commercial enterprise, is now available in Europe, most of Asia, the Middle East, Africa and Canada, and is on course to achieve its target of world coverage by the end of this year. A service to Australasia is expected to begin soon, and negotiations are under way for services in Latin America and Japan, and for rebroadcasts in the United States.

Government Communications Headquarters

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about recruitment policies at Government communications headquarters, and which groups which are excluded on grounds of ethnic origin or parents' country of origin.

Mr. Hurd: No groups are excluded on grounds of ethnic origin. Members of staff at GCHQ must be British citizens, must never have held citizenship other than of the United Kingdom and colonies, and must not hold any nationality or citizenship in addition to British citizenship. As regards parents of applicants, the requirement is that each parent must always have been a Commonwealth citizen as defined by the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from other Governments about employment practices at Government communications headquarters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: To the best of my knowledge, there has never been a representation from another Government about employment practices at GCHQ other than in the context of the consideration by members of the International Labour Organisation of the question of staff representation at GCHQ.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applicants for employment at Government communications headquarters in the last five years have been refused on the grounds that their parents came from Ireland; and if he will make it his policy not to bar applicants on such grounds.

Mr. Hurd: No applicant would be refused simply on the ground that their parents came from Ireland. What matters is whether the parents hold Commonwealth citizenship as defined by the British Nationality Act 1981. Figures are not kept on how many applications have been refused on that ground.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Motoring Offences

Mr. Adley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the most recent figures he has available showing the total annual cost of magistrates court hearings arising from motoring offences.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. L. J. Ferry

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the dates in 1992 when maintenance cheques were received by Hertford county court in respect of Mrs. L. J. Ferry and the dates on which they were remitted to Mrs. L. J. Ferry.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Maintenance payments in respect of Mrs. L. J. Ferry in 1992 were received by the Hertford county court and remitted to Mrs. L. J. Ferry according to the list:

Payment received by the Court	Payment remitted to Mrs. Ferry
20 January 1992	22 January 1992
11 February 1992	18 February 1992
17 March 1992	24 March 1992

EDUCATION

Lingua Programme

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 541, if he will state the reasons underlying the decision by the Council of Education Ministers to limit the eligibility for pupil exchanges under the Lingua programme to pupils attending educational establishments supported by public funds.

Mr. Boswell: Given the limited resources available, the Council of Education Ministers wished to target public funds narrowly. I will write to my hon. Friend.

Teachers (Non-contact Time)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has of the average weekly non-contact time of teachers in (a) secondary schools and (b) primary schools in (i) 1985 and (ii) 1990.

Mr. Forth: The available information on teachers' non-contact time is derived from staffing surveys conducted in secondary schools in 1988 and 1992, and primary schools in 1987. The tables show the actual amount of teachers' non-contact time during pupil timetabled lesson time in the survey week. They are averages for all teachers in the sector, including head teachers.

	Teachers' average non-contact time (hours)
Maintained Nursery and Primary schools
1987	2.0
Maintained Secondary schools
1988	4.2

Environment and Development Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for complying with the commitment in "Agenda 21" of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to update or prepare strategies for integrating the issues of environment and development into education to undertake a review of curricula to ensure a multi-disciplinary approach.

Mr. Forth: In schools the national curriculum gives ample scope for pupils to develop a knowledge and understanding of the environment and how it affects our lives. Several of the national curriculum subjects include studies relevant to education about, for and through the environment.

In further and higher education, an expert committee was appointed by the Department and the Welsh Office in 1991 to advise on the future development of environmental education: its report was published on 2 February 1993. Its recommendations are being brought to the attention of those to whom they are addressed.

Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what figures are available comparing Government assumptions about the levels of local authority expenditure on schools with the actual expenditure in the current year and planned expenditure for next year.

Mr. Forth: Education's share of the overall level of spending by local authorities which the Government assumed for the 1992-93 local authority grant settlement is £18,787 million. The equivalent figure for 1993-94 is £16,854 million; this represents an increase of 2·6 per cent. after taking account of the transfer of responsibilities, notably for further education. The Government do not make assumptions about the amount local authorities will spend on schools. Information about authorities' actual expenditure in 1992-93 and planned expenditure next year is not yet available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the number of herds of cattle which have been restocked with calves from overseas BSE-free herds in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: This information is not available. While Customs and Excise statistics record numbers of animals imported into the United Kingdom each year, no record is kept of the reason for importation.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the outcome of experiments attempting to transfer spongiform encephalopathies from BSE-infected material to mink.

Mr. Soames: The mink experiment is incomplete and no results are yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many suspected BSE cases have been placed under restriction each week since 20 November 1992.

Mr. Soames: The information requested for Great Britain is as follows:

Week ending	Number of Form A's served
27 November 1992	840
4 December 1992	940
11 December 1992	955
18 December 1992	925
25 December 1992	816
1 January 1993	549
8 January 1993	1,062
15 January 1993	993
22 January 1993	987

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the possibility of diagnosing rapidly cattle infected by bovine spongiform encephalopathy but not yet clinically ill; and what plans he has to introduce surveys to quantify the extent of subclinical bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cows and cattle.

Mr. Soames: Research aimed at developing a test for bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the live animal is in progress and remains a high priority, but no such test has yet been produced or is likely to be available in the near future. Surveys of the live cattle population for bovine spongiform encephalopathy cannot therefore be carried out.

Parkhurst Forest

Mr. Berry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the public meeting to discuss the Forestry Commission's plans for Parkhurst forest on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Curry: The public meeting held in Newport, Isle of Wight, on 14 January was arranged by the Forestry Commission so that the local forest district manager could discuss the proposed felling at Mark's corner in Parkhurst forest with interested members of the public. This area is a site of special scientific interest which consists largely of old oak trees; the site is particularly noted for its lichens. The felling proposals form part of a long-term management plan for the area which was agreed with the Nature Conservancy Council, now English Nature, in 1989. The felling is designed to reduce the denser stands of oaks and to thin the beech and sweet chestnut trees, in order to allow more light to reach the stems of trees carrying rare lichens. This will create a more open woodland structure similar to that associated with the traditional management of pasture woodland.

Most people at the public meeting accepted that some trees should be felled, and many helpful and positive comments were made. The Forestry Commission agreed to implement many of the suggestions, including the request that fewer trees should be felled and that a conservation ride should be created. The Forestry Commission invited the meeting to set up a friends of Parkhurst forest body in order to improve liaison between the commission and the local residents.

I understand that my hon. Friend recently met the Forestry Commission's regional director and discussed the management of Parkhurst forest with him.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Care Allowances

Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of raising the level of the invalid care allowance to that of (a) retirement pension and (b) two-thirds of average earnings.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 18 November 1992 at col. 252.

Sickness and Maternity Benefits

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to investigate the payment of sickness and maternity benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, North West (Mr. Robinson) on Monday 1 February.

Child Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in 1993-94 of introducing a disregard for the first (a) £5 and (b) £10 per week of maintenance raised under the Child Support Act 1991 where the parent with care is in receipt of income support.

Mr. Burt: Latest estimates of the costs in 1993-94 of a disregard of maintenance in income support are £60 million for a £5 disregard and £115 million for a £10 disregard. These figures take no account of possible behavioural changes.

Hospital Visits

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications were received in 1991-92 by the Benefits Agency in (a) Woolwich and (b) Bexleyheath from parents for assistance with travel and other costs associated with visiting their sick children in hospital; and how many were refused.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Pensions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to ensure that existing pension provisions are maintained in the event of a partial or complete takeover of a British company by a foreign company or financier.

Miss Widdecombe: A review of the legal framework within which occupational pensions schemes operate, is currently being carried out by the Pensions Law Review Committee. That review will take into account the rights and interests of scheme members, pensioners and employers. Decisions on whether any legislative changes are appropriate will be made in the light of the committee's report.

Industrial Diseases

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to implement the recommendations of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council that emphysema and chronic bronchitis in underground coal miners should be prescribed as an industrial disease.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 14 December 1992 at column 76.

Personal Injuries (Damages)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average time taken to reply to solicitors pursuing claims for damages for personal injuries with information on state benefits paid to clients, prior to the setting up of the compensation recovery unit at Hebburn; what is the current time taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The operation of the compensation recovery unit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. David Clelland, dated 2 February 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what was the average time taken to reply to solicitors pursuing claims for damages for personal injuries with information on state benefits paid to clients, prior to the setting up of the Compensation Recovery Unit; and what is the current time taken.

Prior to the setting up of the Compensation Recovery Unit a record of response times to requests for information on state benefits was not maintained. The information you request is therefore not available.

Since the setting up of the Compensation Recovery Unit in 1990 a record of all requests for information on state benefits has been maintained. However, I should explain that it is not possible to break this down into individual groups such as solicitors pursuing personal injury claims.

For the six months ending on 31 December 1992 the average response time to all enquiries was 20·5 working days and approximately 90% of all enquiries were dealt with within the unit's target of 30 working days.

The issue of Certificates of Total Benefit paid, which is the main business of the unit, is being achieved within the statutory time limit of four weeks in 99·97% of all cases.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Miss Alison Freda Leahy of 18 Grove close, Totnes TQ9 5EP, reference NA 17 10 86 D, will hear the result of her application for disability living allowance submitted last May.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 2 February 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when Miss Alison Freda Leahy will hear the result of her application for Disability Living Allowance (DLA), submitted last May.

According to our records Miss Leahy claimed DLA in February 1992 and a decision was made on 13 April 1992. Unfortunately the letter informing Miss Leahy of the outcome of her claim does not appear to have been sent to her and for this I offer my sincere apologies.

I can confirm that Miss Leahy has now been notified of the decision. I have replied to you separately in greater detail about her case.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Road Accidents

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total annual cost to his Department of people unable to work and in receipt of benefit as a result of road accidents.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Allowances (Carers)

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will examine ways of relaxing the present link between invalid care allowance and attendance allowance or medium/higher rate care component disability living allowance to enable more carers to qualify for the carer's benefit.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

"Community Care: Carers"

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the recommendations for improving financial support for carers proposed by the fifth report from the House of Commons Social Services Committee of 1989-90, "Community Care: Carers", have been implemented since its publication.

Mr. Scott: The earnings limit for invalid care allowance has been raised since the report, from £20 to £40 in April 1992. Subject to parliamentary approval we intend to raise the limit again, to £50 from April this year, and to introduce a £15 disregard for all carers in the income-related benefits. Since October 1991 the carer premium in the income-related benefits has been extended for eight weeks after caring ceases.

WALES

Pupil Assessment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are his reasons for phasing out the Welsh Joint Education Committee certificate of education;

(2) if he will list the organisations he consulted prior to his decision to phase out the certificate of education; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consultations he has had with the Welsh Joint Education Committee concerning his proposals to phase out the certificate of education; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make a statement on the introduction of the national curriculum and its associated assessment procedures in relation to less academic candidates.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 2 February.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many special educational needs pupils moved from segregated special schools to integrated mainstream schools in each local education authority area of Wales for the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of pupils with statements of special educational needs moving from special schools cannot be identified separately. However, the following table shows the number of pupils with statements transferring from independent or maintained special schools to mainstream schools in each local education authority area in Wales for 1991.

	Number
Clwyd	13
Dyfed	4
Gwent	2
Gwynedd	—
Mid Glamorgan	3

Departmental Budget

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage change in (a) real terms and (b) cash terms of his Department's budget from 1992-93 to 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The total public expenditure provision for programmes within my responsibility in 1993-94, £6,316 million, is 8·7 per cent. more than the original planned provision for 1992-93, £5,809 million. This is an increase of 5·8 per cent. in real terms.

Included in these figures are additional resources in 1993-94 in respect of (i) the transfer from the Department for Education of responsibility for university funding in Wales; (ii) the transfer from the Department of Social Security to local authorities of responsibility for enhanced support for those who need it for care in their own homes or in residential or nursing homes; (iii) the transfer from the Department of Employment of responsibility for training; and (iv) the new treatment of superannuation costs for civil servants.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the proportionate increase in the numbers of administrative and management staff in the national health service; and what proposals he has to limit the increase in numbers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No such representations have been received. Staffing levels are the responsibility of health authorities and national health service trusts and they require sufficient numbers to manage an annual expenditure in Wales of nearly £2 billion in an effective and efficient way for the benefit of patients.

Cash Limits

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for changes to the cash limits for his Department in the current financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit on class XVI, vote 4 will be reduced by £6,000,000 from £156,095,000 to £150,095,000; the cash limit on class XVI, vote 5 will be increased by £4,746,000 from £501,172,000 to £505,918,000; the cash limit on class XVI, vote 8 will be increased by £1,876,000 from £1,276,914,000 to £1,278,790,000; the cash limit on class XVI, vote 9 will be increased by £40,000 from £59,123,000 to £59,163,000. The local authority capital cash limit—WO/LACAP—will be reduced by £2,162,000 from £451,334,000 to £449,172,000. The Housing for Wales cash limit—WO/HFW—will be increased by £35,000,000 from £121,469,000 to £156,469,000.

The reduction in the cash limit for vote 4 of £6,000,000 reflects a lower than expected demand for places on the TEC programmes mainly for unemployed young people. This reduced requirement will permit a corresponding increase in the provision for industrial expansion through regional selective assistance grants. The increase will be secured by means of a supplementary estimate on class XVI, vote 3.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 5 comprises (i) the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement of £4,709,000 for capital expenditure as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992, Official Report, cols 698-702, and (ii) a transfer from class XIII, vote 1 of £37,000 in respect of part-time training for career registrars.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 8 comprises (i) additional provision of £1,555,000 to cover the interest element in the charges of NHS trusts; (ii) additional resources of £298,000 in respect of changes to the external financing limit for the NHS trust and (iii) a transfer from class XIII, vote 3 of £23,000 in respect of the NHS Estates Agency.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 9 represents a transfer from class VI vote 1 of £40,000 to cover the capital costs associated with the transfer of responsibility to the Welsh Office of training in Wales.

The decrease of £2,162,000 in the WO/LACAP cash limit represents the net effect of (i) a reduction of £5,162,000 to take account of prior-year capital grant adjustments, partly offset by (ii) an increase of £3,000,000 in respect of the special package of housing measures announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the 1992 autumn statement.

The WO/HFW cash limit will be increased by £35,000,000 to take account of the special package of housing measures announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the 1992 autumn statement.

The net increase represented by these changes will be charged to the reserve and will not add therefore to the planned total of public expenditure.

Environment Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish an independent environment agency in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 15 July 1992 at column 857-58.

TRANSPORT

Rail Lines (Disposal)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to put the Merseyside Wirral and Northern lines in the same category as the Chiltern line and Isle of Wight lines in respect of disposal.

Mr. Freeman: It is our intention under the Railways Bill to franchise all passenger services currently run by British Rail.

British Rail

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the cash ceiling for public service obligation grant to British Rail for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend announced on 8 May 1992 that the ceiling had been set at £1,040 million. This figure has been increased to £1,150 million in the light of revised forecasts. British Rail's external financing limit for 1992-93 is not affected.

Transport Projects

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which EC countries take pollution and congestion into consideration as investment criteria when allocating funds in new transport projects; and if he will outline the principal features of the criteria used in each case.

Mr. Freeman: Investment appraisal procedures vary markedly in their sophistication and scope between countries. All countries undertake some form of environmental assessment of transport schemes, as required by EC directive 85/337/EEC. There is no general agreement on the appropriate techniques for valuing environmental impacts; consequently few countries attempt to value them directly.

My officials are taking part in the EC EURET project "Cost Benefit and Multi Criteria Analysis for New Road Construction", which is surveying the appraisal methodology in use in member states for new road construction, with the ultimate objective of establishing a co-ordinated evaluation method to be made adaptable for use at Community level. The project is due to be completed this year and the final report published early next.

Road Maintenance (Cost)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the most recent figures available for the cost per mile of road maintenance in the United Kingdom; and how the figure is calculated.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1991-92 the average cost of maintenance for the United Kingdom road network was £10,400 per mile. This figure is calculated from information collected by the Department of Transport, Scottish Office, Welsh Office and the Department of Environment (Northern Ireland). It is based on all types of maintenance expenditure, including structural, routine and winter, on all roads, both national and local.

Road Damage

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has carried out into the relative damage caused to road surfaces by different classes of road vehicles; and if he will give specific details for (a) motor cars of 1300 cc engines and (b) loaded 20 ton commercial vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The research commissioned by the Department is recorded in the following two reports, copies of which are being made available to the Libraries in both Houses:

(a) "Relative Damaging Power of Wheel Loads in Mixed Traffic" (TRL Laborstory Report 979, Crowthorne, 1981).

(b) "Trends in Axle Loadings and Their Effect on Design of Road Pavements" (TRRL Research Report 138, Crowthorne, 1988).

The results of that work have broadly confirmed and extended the original work on this topic undertaken in the United States of America between 1958 and 1961.

All motorcars, whatever the size of their engine, cause negligible road wear and tear compared with commercial vehicles.

The relative wear and tear caused by fully laden commercial vehicles in the 20-tonne range is indicated by the following vehicle wear factors expressed as the number of standard 80KN axles.

	Factors
Two axle rigid (maximum gross weight 17 tonnes)	3·14
Three axle rigid (maximim gross weight 26 tonnes)	3·44
Three axle artic (maximum gross weight 26 tonnes)	4·50

Freight

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has undertaken into the environmental effects of freight travelling by (a) road and (b) rail; and how these are taken into consideration as investment criteria when allocating funds in new transport projects.

Mr. Freeman: Research carried out by the Department into the environmental effects of freight travelling by road includes the "Lorries in the Community" study, undertaken by the Department in association with the Civic Trust and the County Surveyors Society, and the lorry management study, from which the resulting guidance was published in 1990.

The means by which environmental considerations are taken into account in the Department's investment appraisal procedures are explained in the Department's publication "The role of investment appraisal in road and rail transport" (1991).

The Government pay freight facilities grants to encourage private companies to use rail in cases where there are wider environmental and other benefits. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State yesterday announced substantial enhancements to this scheme, together with a new scheme, similar in concept, to contribute towards track charges for freight flows which would otherwise travel by road.

These measures, together with our proposal for a lorry weight concession for combined transport—on which we shall be consulting widely—will help to encourage wider use of intermodal rail freight services.

Transport Costs

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken to quantify the respective real costs, including all associated and indirect demands, on public funds of (a) road and (b) rail transport in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Levels of public expenditure on road and rail transport are set out in the Department of Transport's annual report.

No comprehensive information is available on the effects of road and rail transport on other public expenditure programmes or on taxation, although costs such as policing are included in the track costs calculation for roads.

Road Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent publications have been made available, and to whom, relating to road safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following publications have been issued in the last three months:

Circular Roads 1/93 Local speed Limits,

"Killing Speed and Saving Lives—The Government's strategy for tackling the problem of excess speed on our roads"

The Highway Code

Copies were sent on publication to local authorities, local authority associations, police, interested professional organisations, lobby groups, monitoring organisations, and individuals who have requested copies. I also sent copies of the first two documents to Members who have written to me on the subject of speed in recent months.

In addition, a number of leaflets and posters have been issued to road safety officers, the police and motoring organisations dealing with winter driving, drinking and driving, including rehabilitation courses for drink drive offenders; and seat belts.

The DVLA has also distributed leaflets on seatbelts, the highway code, speed and cycling with vehicle excise duty reminders. The transport research laboratory regularly publishes research reports on road safety topics.

Fatalities and Injuries

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities and serious injuries occurred per passenger mile, for each of the last five years for which figures are available for (a) the roads and (b) the railways.

Mr. Freeman: The figures requested are given in the table:

Fatal and serious injuries per billion passenger miles

Year	Road		Rail
	Fatal	Serious injuries	Fatal	Serious injuries
1991	10·9	124	2·3	3·9
1990	12·6	145	1·4	4·8
1989	13·0	153	1·3	5·5
1988	13·2	166	2·7	6·9
1987	14·0	177	1·6	3·9

Departmental Investment Priorities

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account his Department takes in determining its transport investment priorities of the comparative safety risks associated with (a) road and (b) rail travel.

Mr. Freeman: Investment appraisal on roads is carried out using a well-established set of values for casualty reductions. The increased funding for local safety schemes indicates the high priority which is given to proven cost-effective measures for reducing road casualties.

All railway investment includes the cost of meeting relevant safety standards. Where alternative road and rail schemes are compared the safety benefits of any transfers from road to rail are taken into account in assessing the case for grant support.

Road Congestion and Accidents

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates his Department has made as to the total cost to industry of (a) road congestion and (b) road accidents.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: (a) The Department does not make an estimate of the total cost of road congestion as it does not believe there is a reliable method of making such an estimate. However, for each road scheme the contribution which it makes to reducing congestion is a central part of the assessment. This is in line with the objective of the roads programme to assist in economic development through the reduction of transport costs.

(b) The best available estimate of the loss of productive capacity in the economy as a whole from road accidents is £1·8 billion per annum. This applies to all sectors, not industry alone as usually defined.

Underground and Rail Systems (Deaf People)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken to ensure that underground and rail systems have appropriate electronic boards or visual displays capable of notifying deaf and hearing people of changes to scheduled services or safety and security alerts.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is jointly funding with the passenger transport executives a project to produce guidelines on facilities for people with disabilities in transport terminals and interchanges. These guidelines, which are due to be published shortly, will include advice on the use of visual displays to meet the needs of people who are deaf or hard of hearing.

Railways Bill

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he expects in the current structure and practice of national negotiations and conciliation practises within the railway service consequent to the implementation of the Railways Bill; and what assessment he has made of the consequent desirability of maintaining a single structure of training and qualifications for various grades of personnel other than the means of funding such internal training and supervision of operating standards.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The existing national arrangements for those parts of the business that remain in BR will be unchanged, subject to any renegotiation found to be necessary after privatisation. Arrangements for negotiation and conciliation with employees in those parts of BR that transfer to the private sector will be for the new owners and employees.

The Railway Industry Training Council, a voluntary body, already has private sector representation. There is no reason why its work should not continue after privatisation.

Accident Prevention

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's budget for accident prevention.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 2 February 1993]: Safety and accident prevention are a high priority throughout the Department and many of the Department's activities are designed to enhance safety. It is not therefore possible to give a separate figure for the Department's budget for accident prevention.

SCOTLAND

Constitutional Change

13. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on constitutional change in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Our review of constitutional arrangements is well advanced. We will report to the House once the results of the review are complete.

34. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further stock he has taken on the future government of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Our review of constitutional arrangements is well advanced and I hope we will be able to report to the House in a few weeks' time.

Long-term Care (House Sales)

14. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland to this date have had their homes sold as assets to pay for a placement in long-term care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Statistics on the number of residents in long-term residential care who have sold their former dwellings in order to meet the cost of long-term care accommodation are not held centrally.

Stobhill Hospital

15. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of Stobhill hospital.

Mr. Stewart: Greater Glasgow health board is conducting a review of all its acute and maternity services. Stobhill hospital features as part of that review. I look forward to receiving the health board's recommendations in due course.

Holyrood House

16. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many days, in each year since 1987, the Palace of Holyrood House was occupied by the sovereign.

Sir Hector Monro: In recent years Her Majesty and other members of the royal family have made regular use of the Palace of Holyrood House. In addition the Lord High Commissioner is in residence for some 10 days each year. The palace was also a very successful venue for the European Council last December.

Construction Industry

17. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small businesses in the construction industry have ceased trading in Scotland in the last three months.

Mr. Stewart: Comprehensive figures on the number of business failures involving small firms in the construction sector in Scotland are not available.

Skye Bridge

18. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress towards the completion of the bridge to Skye.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Because of the very stormy weather conditions recently experienced, the planned floating-out and sinking operation for the bridge caissons has been delayed. The contractor intends to mobilise his resources quickly for this critical operation as soon as an appropriate weather window becomes available. It is not expected that the target of completion by mid-1995 will be affected.

NHS Trusts

19. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he uses in making appointments to the boards of NHS trusts.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend appoints NHS trust non-executive directors for the personal qualities that they have and their ability to make an effective contribution, individually and collectively, to the trust's work.

25. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria were used by him in selecting the members of the three hospital trusts in Ayrshire.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend appoints NHS trust non-executive directors for the personal qualities that they have and their ability to make an effective contribution, individually and collectively, to the trust's work.

Oil Spillage (Shetland Islands)

20. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding the rate of progress of cleaning up the oil spillage in the Shetland Islands and its effect on wildlife and agriculture.

Sir Hector Monro: Very good progress has been made in cleaning up the visible oil pollution from the wrecked tanker MV Braer. Comprehensive arrangements have been put in place to monitor the immediate and longer term effects. My right hon. Friend outlined the steps taken by the Government in his statement of 11 January. The ecological steering group has been set up and will certainly be monitoring wildlife and agriculture.

Labour Statistics

21. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of long-term unemployed (a) adults and (b) persons aged 16 years to 24 years recorded by jobcentres covering the east end of Glasgow; and what percentage of the total unemployment in these centres these figures represent.

Mr. Stewart: Within the constituencies of Glasgow, Shettleston and Glasgow, Provan in October 1992 there were 1,090 persons aged less than 25 who had been unemployed for more than a year. This represents 33 per cent. of the unemployed in this age group. There were 3,660 persons aged over 25 who had been unemployed for more than a year, representing 55 per cent. of the unemployed in this age group.

Scottish Enterprise (Charter Statement)

22. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the charter statement of Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Enterprise has recently published a charter standard statement outlining the body's commitment to serving the economic and environmental needs of Scotland and to enhancing the skills of its people. The local enterprise companies are developing parallel statements; and two have already been published. My right hon. Friend had emphasised the importance of the citizens charter in his strategic guidance to Scottish Enterprise, towards the end of 1991; and the Government warmly welcome the action which Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies are taking to put citizens charter principles into practice.

Scotch Whisky

23. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what forecast he has made as to the production of Scotch whisky in 1993.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has made no such forecast.

Seed and Ware Potatoes

24. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the contribution of the seed and ware potato industries annually to Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Potatoes are an important feature of Scottish farm production which are renowned for their high health status and quality.

Total production is normally in excess of 1 million tonnes annually and worth an estimated £70 million. This represents some 4·5 per cent. of total farm output.

Local Authorities (Employment Practices)

26. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement as to the availability of advice from the Scottish Office to local authorities on their employment practices.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no locus in the employment practices of local authorities and has therefore offered no advice on the subject. However, the national code of local government conduct, issued in April 1990, includes guidance on conduct by councillors in employment matters.

30. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue a guidance note for councillors in Scottish local authorities on good practices in employment.

Mr. Stewart: The national code of local government conduct, issued in April 1990, includes guidance on conduct by councillors in employment matters. My right hon. Friend has no plans to issue any further guidance to councillors in Scottish local authorities.

Private Medical Insurance (Advertising)

27. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has recently given to health boards and NHS trusts on permitting private medical insurance to include hospitals in advertising material.

Mr. Stewart: No advice about permitting private medical insurance companies to include hospitals in advertising material has been offered to health boards and NHS trusts, but in July 1991 the Department of Health wrote to all United Kingdom health insurers advising them of the statutory framework and management controls governing the conduct of private practice in NHS hospitals.

Stranraer Harbour

28. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist the improvement of facilities at Stranraer harbour for foot passengers and berthing of vessels.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Stranraer is a commercial harbour and, as such, falls within the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Improvements to facilities at commercial harbours are a matter for the owners.

HLCAs and Wool Price Guarantee

29. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the effect on hill farmers of the reduction in hill livestock compensatory allowances and the ending of the wool price guarantee scheme.

Sir Hector Monro: I have received representations on both matters from several hon. Members, farmers and a number of bodies representing farmers and crofters. In responding to these representations, I have pointed out that a number of recent decisions will result in farmers and crofters receiving for 1992 an additional £4·05 per ewe in the sheep annual premium payment, £1·80 more than the reduction of £2·25 in the hill sheep compensatory allowance.

Written Questions

31. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many written parliamentary questions he has answered in the current Session.

Mr. Lang: As at Tuesday 3 February my ministerial colleagues and I have answered 1,261 written parliamentary questions in the current Session, 166 of which I have responded to personally.

Legal Aid

32. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the change in costs of civil legal aid over the latest five years.

Mr. James Douglas-Hamilton: The gross expenditure on civil legal aid in 1987-88 was £15·7 million. This had risen to £16·6 million in 1991-92. Estimated expenditure in the current year is £23·5 million, a rise of 43 per cent. over the previous year.

Inward Investment

33. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the value of inward investment to Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Stewart: Figures prior to the establishment of Locate in Scotland in 1981 are not available.

From April 1981 to March 1992 Locate in Scotland has recorded planned inward investment in Scotland by companies, totalling some £4·6 billion.

Edinburgh

35. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made on the role of Edinburgh (a) as a key financial centre and (b) as a venue for major international conferences.

Mr. Stewart: Edinburgh has a well-established reputation as a business and financial centre of international standing. The city is the acknowledged focus of the Scottish financial services sector which contributes some 15 per cent. to Scottish gross domestic product—twice the European Community average. Edinburgh's status in the international conference market has been strongly enhanced by its success in hosting the meeting of the European Council in December 1992 and will be further strengthened by the completion of the Edinburgh international conference centre in 1995.

Local Government Finance

36. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of COSLA to discuss the funding of local government.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend met the convention on 18 January as part of the normal consultation on local government finance matters. Further such meetings will be held later this year on dates to be arranged.

Planning Procedures

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the mechanism for challenging planning appeal decisions in Scotland and costs thereof; and what proposals he has to change it.

Mr. Lang: On 3 September 1992 I met representatives of Borders regional council to discuss a number of issues, including the planning appeal system and the award of costs in appeal cases. There are no plans to change the appeal system at present.

Head Injury Deaths

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have died from head injuries in Scotland in each year since 1980.

Mr. Stewart: The figures requested are given in the table.

Deaths from head injuries, Scotland, 1980-91

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Fracture of Skull and face (ICD 800-804)
Male	156	127	122	144	102	85	90	77	70	56	63	61
Female	42	38	44	34	43	34	33	34	16	21	23	23
Intracranial injury (excluding skull fracture) (ICD 850-854)
Male	184	185	176	177	203	199	195	216	200	194	193	202
Female	79	68	57	67	68	69	67	81	59	93	65	65

The figures include those deaths coded to the World Health Organisation International Classification of Diseases (9th Revision) codes 800-804 and 850-854. The General Register Office for Scotland uses only a restricted code list for nature-of-injury codes. Deaths from head injuries classified to ICD 9 codes such as 870-904 (laceration and open wound) and 910-929 (superficial injury, contusion and crushing with intact skin surface) are not included, but are likely to be few in number.

Dundee Sheriff Court

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases were scheduled for each sitting of Dundee sheriff court during the most recent three-month period for which figures are available; how many of these cases come to trial on the day for which they were first scheduled; in how many of these cases the defendant pleaded guilty on the day scheduled for trial; and how many of these cases were cancelled and re-scheduled for another day.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Comprehensive information is not collected in the form requested and is not readily available. Information on the outcome of cases set down for trial in the sheriff courts is collected centrally on a quarterly basis. The figures for Dundee sheriff court for the quarter ended 31 December 1992 are as follows:

	Summary trials	Sheriff and jury
Cases set down for trial	379	19
Trials proceeding	73 (19 per cent.	4 (21 per cent.)
Trials disposed—no evidence led—including guilty pleas	152 (40 per cent.)	13 (68 per cent.)
Trials adjourned—new dates fixed	152 (40 per cent.)	2 (10 per cent.)
Trials adjourned—lack of court time	2 (0·5 per cent.)	0

Prisons Ombudsman

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to create a post of a prisons or prisoners' ombudsman; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Proposals to revise the procedures under which prisoners in Scotland are able to make requests and complaints and to air grievances were contained in a report of a Scottish prison service group entitled "Right and Just" which was published for comment in September 1992.

Comments on the recommendations made in the report are being considered and an announcement on the introduction of procedures, which will contain an independent element, will be made in due course.

Flood Damage

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to visit the storm and flood-damaged areas of north Tayside to assess the amount of public aid required to restore the area; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Education and Housing and I have visited Perth and the surrounding area to assess the damage at first hand. The Government have triggered the Bellwin scheme to assist Tayside authorities with expenditure incurred by them in dealing with the effects of the flooding. We have also arranged for special assistance to be provided for the repair of flood defences for agricultural areas.

Shetland (Oil Pollution)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance is being given by the Government to animal welfare organisations active in saving wildlife in the aftermath of the oil spillage from MV Braer.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The Scottish Office has made the following offers, under the special grant environmental programme, of financial assistance for rescue and care of wildlife:

The Hillswick Wildlife Centre: £5,000 for rehabilitation of seals and otters.

The Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals: £5,000 for care and treatment of oiled birds.

In addition, Scottish National Heritage is providing grant of £10,000 for rescue and rehabilitation of wildlife as well as contributing practical advice and assistance to this work.

The European Commission has offered to match this overall support with £20,000. The EC and SNH support is to be paid to voluntary groups in the light of advice from the Shetland wildlife response co-ordinating committee.

Hospitals

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contact, consultation meetings or discussions the Minister for Health at the Scottish Office has had with Tayside health board on the subject of hospital services at (a) Stracathro, (b) Arbroath infirmary or (c) other hospitals in Angus.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 February 1993]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Health and Home Affairs met the chairman and general manager of Tayside health board on 29 January. The board reported on its progress with the review of acute services and outlined its remaining work programme.

Nursing and Midwifery

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nursing and midwifery jobs were lost between September 1989 and September 1991; and if he will provide a breakdown by health board in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 February 1993]: Information on nursing and midwifery posts is not available centrally. The table shows the changes in whole-time equivalent of qualified nurses and midwives employed in the NHS in Scotland between 30 September 1989 and 1991.

National Health Service qualified nursing and midwifery staff, by health board: change in whole-time equivalents from 30 September 1989 to 30 September 1991

Sheriff of Grampian and the Islands

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many judgments the Sheriff of Grampian and the Islands, sitting at Peterhead, has had avizandum for a period in excess of two months; if he will specify the date on which avizandum was made in respect of each case; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 February 1993]: The sheriff of Grampian, Highland and Islands who sits at Peterhead currently has three cases awaiting judgment in which avizandum was made more than two months previously. The dates on which avizandum was made are as follows: 12 February, 19 August and 28 August 1992. Judgment in each of the three cases has been prepared in draft form and will be finalised and issued by 12 February 1993.

Incontinence

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children suffer from incontinence.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 February 1993]: This information is not held centrally.

Health Service

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the cost of administration expressed as a percentage of total expenditure for (a) Tayside health board and (b) the Scottish health service in each year since 1978.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The information is as follows:

Year	Tayside health board: Administration costs £'000s	Tayside health board: Total expenditure £'000s	Tayside health board: Per cent.	Scottish health service: Administration costs £'000s	Scottish health service: Total expenditure £'000s	Scottish health service: Per cent.

[1] Administration costs for 1978-78 to 1981-82 relate to headquarters administration only. Hospital and community administration costs are not held centrally.
[2] Community health service administration costs for 1978-79 to 1981-82 were not identified separately in health board accounts.

Burglaries

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) burglaries of a dwelling, (b) burglaries other than a dwelling and (c) burglaries in total were recorded (i) in each police force area and (ii) in total for Scotland in each year between 1979 and 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The available information collected centrally is given in the table.

Number of cases of housebreaking[1] recorded by the police in Scotland, 1979-91

[1] Includes cases of attempted housebreaking and housebreaking with intent to steal.
[2] Figures for 1983 and 1984 were partly inflated following the introduction of computerisation. In the period August 1984—September 1988 a change in classification slightly reduced the number of housebreakings recorded: in cases where garden sheds, greenhouses, lock up garages (not attached to a dwelling house), non residential caravans and portacabins used for storage were broken into such offences were classified as theft by opening lockfast places rather than housebreaking.

Community Councils

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the role and responsibilities of community councils in his consideration of the future structure of local government; what measures he has in place to encourage representations on this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 29 January 1993]: Our consultation paper on the future structure of local government in Scotland invites views on whether community councils should be given the statutory right to comment on planning applications affecting their area; on whether this right should be extended to matters other than planning and, if so, what these matters should be; and on other ways in which community councils might support the work of local authorities. Many community councils are taking a keen interest in the reform proposals. Their comments will be studied with interest.

ENVIRONMENT

Disabled Facilities Grant

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount made available to disabled people through the disabled facilities grant; and how much was paid out through grants for the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Baldry: The total amount of final payments of disabled facilities grants in England from their inception in July 1990 up to September 1992 is £76·8 million of mandatory and discretionary grants. The total amount during the 12 months from October 1991 to September 1992 is £56·3 million.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what items of equipment are provided through a disabled facilities grant.

Mr. Baldry: Disabled facilities grants under part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 are awarded by local housing authorities. Such grants are usually confined to larger items, such as stair lifts and through floor lifts, requiring structural modifications to a dwelling. Smaller items are normally provided by welfare authorities under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the applications by region, for the last 12-month period for which figures are available, for disabled facilities grants; and how many of these applications were (a) given formal approval and (b) eligible for 100 per cent. grant aid.

Mr. Baldry: The Department collects information from local authorities about the number of approvals of disabled facilities grants but not on the numbers of applications. The table shows figures of approval over the 12 months to September 1992 by standard statistical region in England.

Disabled Facilities Grants: Approvals: October 1991 to September 1992

(numbers of grants)

Standard statistical region	Mandatory grants	Discretionary grants
North	866	3
Yorkshire and Humberside	4,251	14
East Midlands	2,130	15
East Anglia	795	9
Greater London	1,188	56
Rest of South East	3,406	96
South West	1,777	38
West Midlands	1,784	58
North West	2,731	13
England	18,928	302

The Department collects information about payments of grant that cover the full cost of relevant works—that is, those eligible for 100 per cent. grant aid—but not for approvals. The most recent information relates to final payments during the financial year 1991-92, as shown in the following table.

Disabled Facilities Grants: Final Payments: Mandatory and Discretionary grants: April 1991 to March 1992

Urban Expenditure

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department's urban expenditure is per capita in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government support urban regeneration in England through a wide range of programmes. My Department's urban group of programmes is spending over £1 billion in 1992-93, of which some £960 million is targeted on the 57 urban priority areas. Dividing that figure by the 15 million estimated population of those areas gives a per capita figure of £64; dividing by the 48·1 million estimated total population of England would give a per capita figure of £20.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the black and Asian communities on the future of the urban programme; and what further consultations he plans to have.

Mr. Robin Squire: Decisions on the new urban programme arrangements were taken having regard to all the relevant factors, including their effect on the black and Asian communities. Taking city challenge together with the urban programme, resources will rise from £319 million in 1992-93 to £408 million in 1993-94. This will mean significant additional benefits for inner city residents, including ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to conduct a full review of urban policy.

Mr. Robin Squire: Urban policy will continue to be kept under review in the light of information derived from the 1991 census and other sources.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which categories of projects that were eligible to bid for urban programme funds are not eligible for urban partnership funds.

Mr. Robin Squire: All categories of urban programme capital projects and revenue projects directly linked to these are eligible to bid for urban programme funds; but in assessing bids we shall give preference to the factors listed under the assessment criteria set out in the operational guidance for the urban partnership fund.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to visit an urban programme scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: Department of the Environment Ministers will continue to visit the urban priority areas on a regular basis and see a range of schemes supported by urban programme and other inner cities initiatives.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those organisations and bodies in Lambeth that will eventually cease to be funded under the urban programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: Organisations now funded under the urban programme will continue to receive support for up to four years for projects which have already been approved. They may also be eligible to receive support under city challenge or the urban partnership fund.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to have outturn figures on the numbers of (a) projects supported, (b) jobs created or preserved and (c) training places supported, through the urban programme in 1991-92.

Mr. Robin Squire: I expect to have this information available by the end of May 1993.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the Woolwich industrial estate and applications for city challenge, city grant and urban programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Woolwich industrial estate featured in the London borough of Greenwich's round 2 city challenge bid last April as an area where Government grant might assist the retention and expansion of firms. Against strong competition from other boroughs this bid was unsuccessful. Only one preliminary city grant application has been received from a company on the estate, but after discussions between the Department's appraiser and the developer's agent it was concluded that a full application was unlikely to succeed. The urban programme has assisted six firms on the estate with grants totalling £260,000 for improvements to their premises over the past four years and existing commitments continue to be funded. An application has now been made by the London borough of Greenwich under the new urban partnership fund, which supersedes the urban programme for new schemes in 1993-94, for grant towards environmental and security improvements to communal parts of the estate. The application is being considered and a decision is expected to be announced shortly.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 656-57, if he will publish a breakdown by each urban programme authority of (a) the 9,855 projects supported, (b) the 29,660 jobs created or preserved and (c) the 86,528 training places supported, through the urban programme in 1990-91;

(2) pursuant to his answers of 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 14, and 11 January, Official Report, columns 656-57, if he will publish a breakdown by each urban programme authority of the local authorities' forecasts of outputs in 1991-92 and 1992-93 of the urban programme in terms of (a) projects supported, (b) jobs created or preserved and (c) training places supported.

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Urban Policy

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the research commissioned from Professor Bryan Robson into urban policy.

Mr. Robin Squire: The research on the impact of urban policy instruments commissioned from the Centre for Urban Policy Studies has not yet been completed. When it is we will decide how to disseminate the findings.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much each district council in Hampshire received in each year since 1987 under the (a) urban programme, (b) city grant, (c) derelict land grant, (d) urban aid, (e) enterprise zones, (f) estate action, (g) city action teams, (h) city challenge, (i) inner city task force and (j) national garden festivals; and what was the average expenditure per local authority in England in each of those years.

Mr. Robin Squire: Most of the programmes specified fall within my Department's urban group of programmes which are targeted mainly on the 57 urban priority areas. These do not include Hampshire local authorities. However, Hampshire local authorities did receive the following:

Derelict land grant

	District council	£ million
1987-88	Portsmouth	0·249
1988-89	Portsmouth	0·190
1989-90	—	—
1990-91	—	—
1991-92	Portsmouth	0·003
	Test Valley	0·004
1992-93	Portsmouth	0·009

Estate action

	District council	£ million
1987-88	—	—
1988-89	—	—
1989-90	Eastleigh	0·105
	Southampton	0·105
1990-91	Southampton	0·209
1991-92	Southampton	0·184
	Portsmouth	0·250
1992-93	Portsmouth	1·184

The 1992-93 figures are projected outturn.

Expenditure under my Department's urban group of programmes is expected to exceed £1 billion in 1992-93. Details of my Department's programmes are in the relevant public expenditure White Papers and the Department's annual reports; the 1993 annual report will be published shortly.

Caravan Sites Act

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he is making for his Department's consultation paper about reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 to be made available for public inspection.

Mr. Baldry: The consultation paper "Reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968" was issued on 18 August 1992. I am today placing in the Library of the House lists of the responses received to this paper. Copies of the responses themselves have been placed in my Department's library.

Air Quality

105. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking in the light of the report of the quality of urban air review group to integrate local authority monitoring efforts with the national air quality monitoring network; and what additional funds he will make available to assist local authorities in undertaking quality assured monitoring.

Mr. Maclean: The report has only been published very recently, and we are studying its recommendations. We had however already concluded that better integration between the national and local monitoring networks was needed. In the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance: The Second Year Report", we announced our intention of issuing a discussion paper on the subject this year. Meanwhile, the quality assurance and quality control procedures for urban air quality monitoring which are being developed under my Department's research programme will be a significant contribution in kind to local authorities' monitoring work.

Household Waste Disposal Centres

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of household waste disposal centres maintained by each local authority.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for which aspects of the Property Services Agency in Northern Ireland responsibility (a) has been or (b) is about to be transferred to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Redwood: I have today written to the hon. Member about this matter.

Water Courses (Minewater Pumping)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the effect on surface water courses, pollution of water courses and water supplies and the raising of the water table consequent on the cessation of minewater pumping; and if he will ensure that no pumping will cease until the results of such studies are known.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 February 1993]: None. It is for British Coal and the National Rivers Authority, in the first place, to assess the environmental effects of stopping minewater pumping and what steps may need to be taken to minimise any adverse impact. I understand that arrangements have been made between British Coal and the National Rivers Authority for effective liaison over any proposed closures.

TRANSPORT

Buses Project

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which local authority and bus company have been selected for the low floor demonstration project outside London.

Mr. Freeman: We have selected a route in North Shields and Whitley Bay run by Go Ahead Northern Coastline. I am delighted that we have been able to find the resources to enable Tyne and Wear passenger transport executive to fund this project. The route carries a significant number of elderly and disabled people who will particularly benefit from the introduction of new low floor buses. But such vehicles will also benefit other passengers who find the entrance steps and narrow gangways of conventional buses difficult to negotiate. We will monitor the scheme and make the results available to other bus operators and local authorities.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 29 October 1992, Official Report, column 760; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. Norris: Details of public appointments made by my right hon. Friend since 20 October 1992 are set out in the table. It is not considered practicable or appropriate to list the many and varied qualifications of the individual appointees, but my right hon. Friend will have satisfied himself as to their relevance before making the appointments. The Department usually does not know, and certainly would not specifically record, the political affiliation of appointees. Remuneration of port authority appointees is a matter for the authorities themselves.

Name of appointee	Body to which appointed and remuneration	Period of the appointment
Mr. D. E. Rayner[1]	British Railways Board £69,550 pa	1 November 1992 to 31 October 1995

Seat Belts

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what budget has been set for the forthcoming campaign on seat belt wearing; and if he will give a breakdown of the estimated costs of advertising.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 2 February 1993]: A budget of £1·2 million has been set for the campaign on seat belt wearing which was launched on Tuesday 2 February. The bulk of this budget, £1·15 million, has been allocated to the production and airing of a television commercial over the period 2 to 16 February. The remainder of the budget, £50,000, has been allocated to the production of leaflets explaining seat belt law and posters and research.

ENVIRONMENT

Biodiversity Plan

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to develop a United Kingdom-wide biodiversity plan.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 24 June 1992 that the United Kingdom would prepare a national biodiversity action plan to promote the convention on biological diversity agreed earlier that month. The target date for the publication of the plan is the end of 1993.

Aggregates

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide in tabular form the numerical data used in preparation of the pie charts in figures A2.2 to A11.3 inclusive in annex A of his Department's draft consultation document "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales-Revision of MPG6", showing in each case the tonnages assumed for each source of aggregates supply.

Mr. Baldry: This information has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Noise Review

142. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken by his Department following the report of the noise review working party in 1990.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on Tuesday 19 January, at column 163.

Marine Impact Assessment

143. Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of how adequately his Department's marine impact assessment procedures meet the terms of EC directives.

Mr. Maclean: The requirements of directive 85/337 on environmental impact assessment have been fully incorporated into existing regulatory systems for controlling marine developments. EIA procedures are being considered as part of the Government's review of the effectiveness of regulations below the low water mark, which I announced on 8 July last year in response to a question from the hon. Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch), at column 252.

Local Authorities (Devolution)

144. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he has to devolve power to local authorities;

(2) if he will make a statement on progress in the devolution of power to local authorities.

Mr. Squire: The split of responsibilities between central and local government is a matter for Parliament to determine. There has always been an ebb and flow of responsibilities between the two and this will continue.

Urban Priority Areas

145. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had and plans to have with the voluntary sector on the review of urban priority areas.

Mr. Squire: We will write shortly to the National Council for Voluntary Organisations and the National Association of Councils for Voluntary Services to invite comments on the methodology recommended by external researchers for use in analysing data on urban conditions drawn from the 1991 census.

Empty Office Buildings (Residential Consent)

146. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department gives to local authorities concerning the granting of temporary residential consent for empty office buildings.

Mr. Baldry: Last October we published a draft Planning Policy Guidance Note 6, Town Centres and Retail Development, which at paragraph 14 states:

"In those town centres that contain vacant office and retail premises that seem unlikely to be reused for that purpose, local planning authorities should encourage conversion to other service, retail or residential uses. Such buildings, especially older office buildings originally converted from houses, may be particularly suitable for conversion to flats, for example for students and householders without cars."

We will finalise the draft note within the next few months.

Some developers might believe that such a conversion will mean for ever abandoning the prospect of attracting a commercial tenant. We see no such difficulty. Owners may seek temporary residential permissions—for, say, 10 years—with the certainty of being able to switch back to commercial use at a later date.

Empty Departmental Houses

156. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by the task force on Government Department's empty houses.

Mr. Baldry: The task force on Government Departments' empty houses has met once since it was established on 8 December 1992. It has made a positive start on the work necessary to deliver its remit of helping to bring empty Government residential properties into use for people in housing need. The next meeting of the task force is on 10 February.

Air Quality

157. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has had with the European Commission on the draft air quality framework directive; and what assessment he has made of the consequences for the United Kingdom national air quality monitoring network and for local authority air quality monitoring activities.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has had three meetings with the Commission to discuss its emerging proposals for a draft air quality standards framework directive. The proposals are still at an early stage of development and it is too soon to say what implications the eventual directive might have for the United Kingdom monitoring network and local authority monitoring activities. Meanwhile, my Department is already expanding its urban air quality monitoring network and preparing proposals for better integration of central and local monitoring effort.

Local Authority Recycling Plans

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons the Coopers and Lybrand report on local authority recycling plans will not assess the quality and realism of the plans; what steps he took to ensure that the tender specification for the report was widely distributed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The review of local authority recycling plans is intended to provide a comprehensive picture of the information they contain; a qualitative assessment of the plans is beyond the scope of the exercise. We made clear our intention to commission a detailed study of the plans to extract useful information from them. Those organisations which expressed an interest in this project were invited to tender for the work.

Hedgerows

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's Government first committed themselves to bring forward new legislation to protect hedgerows; on how many occasions and in which documents that commitment has been repeated subsequently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Proposals to give local authorities powers to protect hedgerows were first announced in the Government White Paper, "This Common Inheritance" in September 1990. Revised proposals were announced in July 1991 and restated in the first year report of the White Paper (September 1991) and our policy document "Action for the Countryside" (February 1992). Due to pressure on the parliamentary programme, we were unable to introduce appropriate legislation this Session, but we continue to support the Hedgerows Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth).

Local Government Commission

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the timetable for the Local Government Commission's reviews of areas in the second tranche of its work programme.

Mr. Redwood: I am pleased to announce, following consultation with the Local Government Commission, the timetable for the second tranche of the review of areas.

We intend the commission begins its review of Leicestershire on 10 May. The review of Nottinghamshire will begin a few weeks later.

The commission's review of the other second tranche areas of Cumbria and Lancashire, Hampshire, Staffordshire, Devon, and Cambridgeshire will begin soon after the other reviews of areas in the first tranche have been completed.

We anticipate that the commission will require less time to formulate draft and final proposals for the second tranche review areas than it needed for some of the more complex first tranche reviews. However, we are still adamant that local people should have ample opportunity to express their views to the commission and have plenty of time to respond to draft recommendations and the period allowed at the consultation stages remain as set out in the original procedure guidance to the commission.

In drawing up the timetable, we have allowed for local government elections and the need for extra consultation time over the summer holiday period.

The announcement of the detailed timetable will now enable all authorities in the second tranche to plan ahead in order to ensure that the Commission's review of their area will be executed as smoothly as possible.

I have placed a copy of the second tranche timetable in the Library.

Development Plans

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a local authority development plan is an interest of acknowledged importance in terms of the guidance provided in paragraph five of planning policy guidance note 1.

Mr. Baldry: Planning policy guidance note 1 (March 1992) provides advice on the determination of planning applications in accordance with sections 70(2) and 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. In the process of deciding a planning application, which entails having regard to the development plan and all other material considerations, all interests of acknowledged importance should be identified and any harm that would be caused, were permission to be granted, taken into account.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 30 October 1992, Official Report, columns 859-62; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. Howard: The following new appointments have been made since October 1992 to the boards of non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department. Information on political affiliation is not held centrally.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the relative performance of each local authority in Merseyside for the purposes of determining the housing investment programme allocations for 1993 to 1994; and if he will publish the figures.

Mr. Baldry: Figures for local authority housing investment programme allocations for 1993-94 were announced on 17 December by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning, at column 507; details are in the Libraries of the House. The primary criterion which underlay the discretionary element of these allocations was the efficiency and effectiveness of authorities in the use of resources to meet housing need. In reaching an assessment for these purposes of the authorities in Merseyside, we took into account all available information which was relevant, including authorities' housing strategies and HIP bids, and discussions in the course of the annual round of HIP meetings between authorities and officials in the Department's Merseyside task force.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals there are to change the 1992-93 cash limit and running cost limit for Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Howard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary spring supplementary estimate for Ordnance Survey, class VIII, vote II, the cash limit for Ordnance Survey, class VIII, vote II will be increased by £2,866,000 from £19,049,000 to £21,915,000. The increase will be a charge on the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The net running cost limit will be increased by £3,076,000 from £18,998,000 to £22,074,000.

The increase in the cash limit is required to reflect a shortfall in the receipts for the sales of maps, copyright and public sector repayments due to a reduction in the demand for OS products, partially offset by savings from running costs, capital and superannuation expenditure. Supplementary provision is also required to reduce the imbalance between input and output VAT resulting from cutbacks in capital and running cost expenditure.

The increase to the net running cost limit is required to reflect a shortfall in the receipts for sales of maps, copyright and public sector repayments due to a reduction in demand. This is partially offset by savings from running cost expenditure.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to his Department's cash limits and running costs limit for 1992-93.

Mr. Howard: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:—

The DOE/UA non-voted cash limit will be increased by £1,020,000 from £1,017,449,000 to £1,018,469,000. The increase is a net effect of savings and increases within the cash limit. Increases include £6,000,000 for local authority sector derelict land grant to account for increases in the forecast level of spend and £1,750,000 for the urban programme. A further £3,020,000 will be required for various projects for urban development corporations, to fund a number of schemes for the Cleveland city action team and to increase the provision for urban development grant. There is a technical increase of £3,000,000 which will be offset by a decrease in the Department of Transport national roads England cash limit. Savings include £10,205,000 on the city grant programme, £1,000,000 for the non local authority sector derelict land grant programme and a technical saving of £1,545,000 which will be offset by an increase in the Housing Corporation cash limit. The effect on voted expenditure will be a net increase of £3,000,000.

The cash limit for class VIII, vote 5 (Central environmental services etc.) will be increased by £5,861,000 from £317,127,000 to £322,988,000. The increase provides for an additional £7,900,000 in grant in aid to the Rural Development Commission, required because of a shortfall in the commission's receipts from property sales. This will be partially offset by a saving of £1,439,000 on the energy efficiency programme, £200,000 on the environmental technology innovation scheme and £400,000 on grants to water companies. The cash limit increase will be funded in part by forecast savings of £1,500,000 in European regional development fund payments to water undertakers and £161,000 of previously unallocated public expenditure provision.

The running cost limit for Property Holdings and Central Support Services will be reduced by £668,000 from £48,201,000 to £47,533,000. This reduction reflects pay savings. The net running cost control limit for the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre will be reduced by £48,000 from £1,136,000 to £1,088,000. Some receipts which would have been paid into the Consolidated Fund will be reclassified as appropriations in aid. This reclassification will fund a freehold acquisitions programme, cover a shortfall of property disposal receipts and offset an increase in vacant accommodation costs.

The Department of the Environment's running costs limit has been reduced by £5,556,000 from £201,899,000 to £196,343,000. This change mainly results from a reallocation of existing estimate provision between running costs and non-running costs, in line with estimated outturn, on class VIII, vote 8 (Department of the Environment: administration), partly offset by a transfer of £34,000 running costs cover to class VIII, vote 2 (Miscellaneous housing administration and grants).

The cash limit for class VIII, vote 9 (Revenue support grant, payment of non-domestic rates, valuation office rating services, etc, England) will be decreased by £176,000 from £29,523,296,000 to £29,523,120,000. This is due to lower than expected computer costs for valuation tribunals and a transfer of provision to the Ministry of Defence (class I, vote 1) compensating local authorities for community charge income foregone from servicemen as a result of the Gulf crisis. £71,000 of the savings offset an equivalent increase on class VIII, vote 13, for the new grant to compensate local authorities for additional costs arising from the influx of people displaced from former Yugoslavia.

The DOE/HC non-voted cash limit will be increased by £598,545,000 from £1,707,200,000 to £2,305,745,000. This increase reflects the addition of £597,000,000 mainly for housing associations to purchase empty dwellings as part of the housing recovery package announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement, and a transfer from the city challenge programme of £1,545,000 to increase housing association funding in city challenge areas.

The DOE/LACAP non-voted cash limit will be increased by £28,259,000 from £2,914,829,000 to £2,943,088,000. This increase reflects the addition of £30,000,000 for local authority cash incentive schemes as part of the housing recovery package announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement. This is partly offset by savings of £1,741,000 in other grants within the cash limit.

All the increases will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take in the implementation of the new EC habitats and species directive to safeguard key coastal and inshore waters from oil pollution.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The Government are considering what measures are necessary to implement the EC directive on the conservation of habitats and of wild flora and fauna. Proposals will be issued for consultation in the coming month. The inquiry under Lord Donaldson announced on 11 January by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will consider whether any further measures are appropriate and feasible to protect the United Kingdom coast from pollution from merchant shipping giving due consideration to the international and economic implications of any new measures.

Local Authorities (Debt)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which are currently debt free.

Mr. Squire [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1993, c. 116-17]: I regret that the list of authorities which became debt free as a result of the commutation of grants for debt charges which took place on 1 October 1992 contained an error. I now understand that Mid Bedfordshire district council is not in fact debt free.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Attorney-General what changes he proposes to the Crown prosecution service's cash limit for 1992-93.

The Attorney-General: Yes. The cash limit for class X, vote 5 will be reduced by £1,500,000 from £199,846,000 to £198,346,000. This is to offset, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, increased net expenditure on class X, vote 6, Crown prosecutions and legal services. This extra provision is needed to meet additional costs arising from implementation of the Road Traffic Act 1991 and a shortfall in appropriations-in-aid.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Printers

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he proposes to introduce the defence of innocent dissemination for printers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has already announced the Government's intention to make provision for the proposed defence of innocent dissemination by printers. This will require primary legislation which will be introduced when there is a suitable opportunity.

Land Registry

Mr. Butler: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes he proposes to the Land Registry's cash and running costs for 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X, vote 11 will be increased by £10,999,000 from a token £1,000 to £11,000,000. In addition, the net running costs limit for the Land Registry will be increased by £11,000,000 from zero to £11,000,000.

The Land Registry is a demand-led executive agency which relies on fees paid by its customers to cover its administrative costs which it has successfully achieved since 1976. The continuing low level of activity in the property market in England and Wales has resulted in the agency's workload (in units) being some 30 per cent. lower than originally anticipated. In order to keep its costs within the reducing income, the agency has restricted expenditure to 16 per cent. below the main estimate provision, but it is now clear that the total fee income for the year will fall short of forecast spending by the amount sought through the supplementary estimate. The agency's cashflow position has been made worse by the fact that some larger liabilities relating to its legal liability to indemnify for losses resulting from register and search errors have required payment. These increases will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Public Record Office

Mr. Peter Butler: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes are planned to class X, vote 12 of the Public Record Office's vote for 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cash limit for class X, vote 12 has been reduced by £3,393,000 from £33,739,000 to £30,346,000 as a result of slippage on a major capital project. In addition, and subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary token supplementary estimate, the running cost limit for class X, vote 12 will be increased by £369,000 from £22,352,000 to £22,721,000 to cover certain payments to Property Holdings. This increase is financed by a transfer of provision from Property Holdings and an increase in receipts.

Northern Ireland Court Service

Mr. Butler: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what changes have been made to the class X, vote 3 cash limit and running costs limit for the Northern Ireland court service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X, vote 3 has been increased by £1,226,000 from £19,086,000 to £20,312,000 and the running costs limit by £73,000 from £14,685,000 to £14,758,000. The increases arise because of additional costs incurred in respect of bomb damage to the number of court buildings, bomb damage to the Legal Aid Department's accommodation and the transferral from the Northern Ireland block of project costs for the child support legislation and the fixed penalty/points scheme.

The increases will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total public expenditure.

House Repossessions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, how many repossessions have been carried out in county courts since September 1992 by lenders who are not members of the Council of Mortgage Lenders.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not collected.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cash Limits

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes will be made to his Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1992-93.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(i) The cash limit for class XII, vote 1 (museums, galleries and the heritage) will be increased by £1,606,000 to £222,289,000. The increase is the net result of additional provision for payments to Inland Revenue in respect of important heritage offers in lieu of tax (£4,325,000) partly offset from savings (£2,719,000) in the contributions made in lieu of rates by certain national museums and galleries. As announced in the Official Report, at columns 891-92, on 12 November 1992, part of the achieved savings has also been used to meet the balance of Government support for the European arts festival in 1992 (£458,000) (class XII, vote 2) and administration costs associated with the creation of the Department of National Heritage (£1,218,000) (class XII, vote 4). The balance of the additional provision now required (some £3,300,000) will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

(ii) The departmental running costs limit will be reduced by £83,000, from £18,731,000 to £18,648,000, as a result of an adjustment to the provision transferred from the Department for Education, to reflect lower costs attributable to the Department of National Heritage for certain central support services.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Brooke: A provisional list of regulations which impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Television

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage under what authority the Independent Television Commission is making representations to the Monopolies Commission about the commercial arrangements made between production companies and broadcasters.

Mr. Brooke: Section 39 of the Broadcasting Act 1990 establishes the Independent Television Commission's role in the provision of networking arrangements for Channel 3.

National Lottery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to locate in Cardiff the (a) national headquarters and (b) regional sub-office for the south of the United Kingdom of the national lottery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The location of the operator of the national lottery will be a matter for the appointed licensee. Those companies tendering for the licence will be aware of the advantages of locating in an area receiving Government incentives.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to award the contract for the operation of the national lottery; when he expects the national lottery to be in operation; and in what year he expects the national heritage memorial fund to commence the distribution of moneys received from the national lottery distribution fund.

Mr. Key: The contract or licence for the operation of the national lottery will be awarded as soon as practicable after the National Lottery etc. Bill receives Royal Assent. It is hoped that the lottery will be operational towards the end of 1994. The National Heritage Memorial Fund should be in a position to distribute funds during 1995.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all the names of those he has appointed to public bodies, giving the period for which the appointment was made and the remuneration each currently receives; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage is still in the process of setting up a central database of public appointees and therefore the information to answer this question is not yet available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Office of Public Service and Science

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to change the 1992-93 cash limit or running costs limit for the Office of Public Service and Science.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for the Office of Public Service and Science (class XIX, vote 1) will be increased by a token £1,000 from £41,752,000 to £41,753,000. The Department's gross running costs limit will be decreased by £17,000 from £64,144,000 to £64,127,000. The principal changes being due to reductions in running cost cover for the Office of Science and Technology and for Chessington computer centre; and an increase in running cost cover for the CCTA.

The running costs change also reflects the transfer of running costs from H.M. Treasury (class XVIII, vote 1) in respect of Chessington computer centre. The running cost limit for the Civil Service college has been decreased by £163,000 from £1,800,000 to £1,637,000 reflecting greater than anticipated receipts from the provision of training courses. The changes will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Science Vote

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what changes he proposes to the estimates class XI, vote 5 (Science) for 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class XI, vote 5 (Science) will be increased by £1,551,000 from £1,050,181,000 to £1,051,732,000.

Of the increase £480,000 is to enable the Royal Society to increase its programme of support for scientists in the former Soviet Union as part of the programme announced by the Prime Minister on 20 May 1992, at column 137. Of this £230,000 is offset by reductions in cash limits of £100,000 for class I, vote 1 (Ministry of Defence: personnel costs, support and other services), £50,000 for class IV, vote 2 (Department of Trade and Industry: support for industry, international trade, statutory and regulatory work, consumer protection and administration), £50,000 for class 3, vote 4 (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food: Agricultural, Food and Fishing Services) and £30,000 for class XIX, vote 1 (Cabinet Office).

The remaining £1,071,000 is to enable the Natural Environment Research Council to meet the cost of the conversion of the RRS Discovery falling in 1992-93. The grant paid to the NERC in 1991-92 was reduced by this amount to take account of delay in the completion of this work.

£230,000 of the increase will be offset and the remainder charged to the reserve, and so there will be no increase in the planned total of public expenditure as a result of these changes.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 28 October 1992, Official Report, column 668; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. Robert Jackson: My right hon. Friend has made the following appointments since 28 October 1992:

Civil Service appeal board

Appointee	Period of appointment
Mrs. J. Collingridge[1]	2 November 1992—28 February 1993
Mrs. C. Coltman	1 February 1993—31 January 1995
Miss B. Findlay	1 February 1993—31 January 1995
Mr. J. Renton	1 February 1993—31 January 1995
Mrs. M. B. Sloman[1]	2 November 1992—31 May 1995

[1] Re-appointed.

Economic and Social Research Council

Appointee	Period of appointment
Professor M. Anderson,[1 2] BA, MA, PHd, FRSA	1 August 1993—31 July 1994

[2] Professor Anderson receives an honorarium of £4,420, the same amount as the other members.

Information is not held on the political affiliation of appointees other than where an hon. Member is appointed to a research council. No such appointments have been made by my right hon. Friend.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Press Gallery

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how many offices and desks are currently allocated to the Press Gallery.

Mr. Ray Powell: Twenty-two offices and 95 desks are currently allocated for use by the Press Gallery.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many telephones are currently allocated to the Press Gallery.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The Press Gallery currently has 129 telephone lines allocated to it from the Palace of Westminster exchange. Of that number six are for administrative use by staff of the House.

Car Parking (Journalists)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many car spaces in the underground car park are allocated to lobby journalists; what is the estimated annual value of this facility; and whether any charge is made.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Eighteen members of the Press Gallery have been issued with a permit which allows them to park on the fourth floor of the underground car park on a first-come-first-served basis. It is not possible without disproportionate cost, separately to identify the annual value of this facility. No revenue is received for its provision.

Veal

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee how many times veal has been served in the canteens in the Palace of Westminster and Parliament street over the last year; and what was its country of origin on each occasion that it was served.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: This is a matter for the Director of Catering Services, but I understand that, at the request of our predecessor Committee, all veal purchased by the Refreshment Department continues to be of British origin.

Security Costs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what is the cost of the policing of the Palace of Westminster; and what is the cost of the non-police security guards employed in the Palace.

Mr. Beith: Based on the latest available figures, the House of Commons' share of the annual cost (excluding VAT) of policing the parliamentary precincts (the Palace of Westminster and the parliamentary outbuildings) is estimated at £8 million, of which approximately £4·3 million is the cost of civilian staff including security officers, firemen and administrative staff.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Wing

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's diplomatic wing cash limits and running cost limits for 1992-93.

Mr. Goodlad: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates the cash limit for class II, vote 1 (overseas representation) will be increased by £16,668,000 from £721,101,000 to £737,769,000 and the gross running costs limit on the vote will be increased by £4,311,000 from £519,529,000 to £523,840,000. For class II, vote 2 (other external relations) the cash limit will be increased by £241,337,000 from £178,791,000 to £420,128,000; for class II, vote 3 (external broadcasting and monitoring) by £3,142,000 from £162,711,000 to £165,853,000 and for class II, vote 4 (the British Council) by £2,994,000 from £88,669,000 to £91,663,000.

For vote 1 the cash limit increase of £16,668,000 is made up as follows: adverse overseas price movements (£15,436,000), take up of capital end year flexibility (£829,000) as announced to the House by the Chief Secretary on 15 July 1992 (Official Report) columns 698-702), and transfers from other Government Departments (403,000) of which £173,000 is from Property Holding and £230,000 from the DTI.

The increase in the gross running costs limit of £4,311,000 reflects adverse overseas price movements (£6,638,000), transfers from other Government Departments (£403,000) and a payment from the private sector for the Taejon exhibition (£70,000), offset by a transfer of £2,800,000 out of running costs into Vote 2.

For vote 2 the cash limit increase of £241,337,000 is made up as follows: Programme increase (£204,312,000), adverse overseas price movements (£20,200,000), transfers from other Government Departments, (£525,000) of which £440,000 is from ODA and £85,000 from Department for Education, a transfer of provision from class II, vote 1 (£5,000,000), and an increase in VAT refunds (£11,300,000).

For vote 3 the cash limit increase of £3,142,000 reflects take up of capital end year flexibility as announced to the House by the Chief Secretary on 15 July 1992 (Official Report columns 698-702).

For vote 4 the cash limit increase of £2,994,000 is for adverse overseas price movements.

All the increases will either be offset by underspends elsewhere or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Cambodia

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards, and what representations he is making to other countries in respect of, the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia.

Mr. Goodlad: We deplore the refusal of the Khmer Rouge to fulfil its obligations fully under the Paris agreements and to co-operate with the United Nations transitional authority in Cambodia. We shall continue to work with the other permanent members of the United Nations Security Council and other countries closely involved in the Cambodian peace process to ensure that the Paris agreements are implemented as successfully as possible.

Sudan

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the present problems in the Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are deeply concerned at the Sudanese Government's poor record on human rights, the lack of progress towards more accountable government acceptable to all parts of the country, continuing difficulties in the provision of humanitarian aid, and the Government's apparent equivocation towards international terrorism. The concern is widely shared, as witness the United Nations General Assembly's adoption by a huge majority of a resolution condemning Sudan's human rights record. We are with our European partners exploring means of maximising international pressure to induce the Sudanese Government to mend their ways.

Jaffna

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when an official of the British High Commission in Colombo last visited Jaffna.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A member of the staff of the High Commission visited Jaffna in May 1990. Since the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam renewed fighting against the Sri Lankan Government in June 1990, visits have not been possible.

Nagorno-Karabakh

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh; what plans there are to install NATO or United Nations observers in the region once a ceasefire has been arranged; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh continues, although fighting has slackened because of the harsh winter conditions there. Thousands have died as a result of this dispute and hundreds of thousands have been displaced, and impoverished by economic blockades associated with it. At the British initiative the CSCE started a year ago to mediate between the parties to this dispute. We welcome recent statements by the United Nations Secretary General and the Security Council Chairman that the CSCE should remain the focus for such talks, the latest round of which is due to be convened later this month. The CSCE has undertaken to deploy monitors to Nagorno-Karabakh, subject to a full and effective ceasfire. The details of this deployment are being worked out. NATO has promised support for this.

United Nations Security Council

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has had with United Nations members, and permanent and non-permanent members of the United Nations Security Council with regard to the continuing necessity of (a) the veto and (b) permanent members in the light of post-cold war development;

(2) what discussions he has had with the other members of the United Nations Security Council on extending (a) permanent and (b) non-permanent membership of the United Nations Security Council; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received on extending (a) permanent and (b) non-permanent membership of the United Nations Security Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Reform and revitalisation of United Nations institutions and the United Nations secretariat is a current subject of discussions in New York and in various bilateral and other meetings. The United Nations Special Committee on the charter regularly discusses Security Council reform at its meetings. Cuba and Libya have been active in recent years in pressing the case for abolition of the veto. The wish of Japan, currently a Security Council member, to become a permanent member is well known. At Maastricht, we agreed that Britain and France, as permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, will in the execution of their functions ensure the defence of the positions and the interests of the union without prejudice to their responsibilities under the provisions of the United Nations charter.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on reform of the United Nations Security Council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on extending (a) permanent and (b) non-permanent membership of the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any reform of the current structure of the Security Council including expansion of permanent and non-permanent members would require an amendment to the United Nations charter, and negotiations on this would be long and complex. In the meantime we would wish to ensure that the Security Council continues to operate effectively.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 29 October 1992, Official Report, column 790; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

[1] When members are appointed to this board they are also appointed to the Crown Agents Holding and Realisation Board.
[2] Excluding pension contributions.

Note: For Crown Agents and Commonwealth Development Corporation, figures are taken from 1991 published accounts.

Information on the exact period for which each appointment was made and the relevant qualifications of the appointees is not held centrally.

There are eight appointments vacant across four committees.

The Irish Pensions Appeals Tribunal has been wound up.

Information on the political affiliation of appointees is not held centrally. Appointees who are Members of Parliament or Members of the European Parliament are so designated in the list.

Council of Europe

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received concerning plans for Azerbaijan and Armenia to seek membership of the Council of Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Both Armenia and Azerbaijan have applied for special guest status in the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, though not to join the Council itself. This is a matter for the Parliamentary Assembly itself, but I understand that both applications are going through the usual channels. The Council secretariat has discussed with Armenia and Azerbaijan areas for future co-operation.

Azerbaijan

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding the current political, economic and civil circumstances of the Armenian community resident in Azerbaijan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Most of the Armenian community in Azerbaijan live in the disputed region of Nagorno-Karabakh. Their economic conditions are dire as the result of an armed dispute over the region's future since 1988. We have given £250,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross for relief work in Nagorno-Karabakh. We fully support talks under the auspices of the CSCE to settle this dispute and believe that the only solution likely to be stable should involve autonomy for the people of Nagorno-Karabakh under Azerbaijani sovereignty. Elsewhere in Azerbaijan around 20,000 Armenians remain. Most of these are in mixed marriages with Azeris. Over 200,000 Armenians have fled Azerbaijan. We have provided £200,000 to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for relief work amongst Armenian refugees.

Peru

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Peru.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Kingdom and Peru have traditionally enjoyed good relations. Following recent steps towards the restoration of democracy, including elections to the constituent congress, we and our EC partners continue to review the measures, including the suspension of most aid, adopted after President Fujimori suspended constitutional government in April 1992.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Peru on human rights issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We take every opportunity, both bilaterally and with our EC partners, to emphasise to the Peruvian authorities the level of concern felt here about human rights violations, most recently, I raised the matter with President Fujimori when I visited Peru from 7-9 January 1993.

EC-Israel Co-operation Council

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting of the EC-Israel Co-operation Council on 1 February.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The EC-Israel Co-operation Council on 1 February reviewed co-operation under the 1975 agreement, and agreed that the Commission should continue its exploratory discussions on updating this agreement. EC Foreign Ministers subsequently reiterated their support for the peace process and repeated their condemnation of the Israeli deportation of over 400 Palestinians which risked endangering the peace process and preventing the updating of the agreement.

Palestinian Deportees

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States of America on the appropriate steps that they will take to ensure Israel complies with UN Security Council resolution No. 799 regarding the Palestinian deportees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has discussed the question of the Palestinian deportees with the new US Secretary of State. They have agreed to work closely together to ensure the earliest possible resolution of the problem.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the imposition of sanctions against Israel with regard to the Palestinian deportees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received some letters on the subject of the Palestinian deportees, some of which call for sanctions to be imposed on Israel. We do not believe that the adoption of sanctions against Israel would be helpful to the prospects for the peace process, which remains the best hope for all the parties to resolve their differences.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the annual figures on plutonium for 1991-92 will be published.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is being published today and copies of the press release placed in the Library of the House.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his most recent estimate of the contribution made by the United Kingdom tobacco industry towards the United Kingdom balance of payments.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom had a crude trade surplus[1] in manufactured tobacco products[2] worth £614·9 million in 1991 and £727·4 million in January to November 1992.

1. Crude trade surplus = exports (fob) less imports (cif).
2. Manufactured tobacco products are defined as heading 122 of the Standard International Trade Classification (revision 3).

Pneumoconiosis

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what was the average length of service of miners who have subsequently been affected by pneumoconiosis;

(2) what sums have been paid in compensation to former miners suffering from pneumoconiosis in each of the last 10 years, together with the average figure paid to individuals for each of those years.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal.

Fuel Report

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will commission Caminus Energy Consultants to prepare a report investigating the comparative cost advantages of gas, nuclear power and coal; and if he will ensure that their report is made available to the House at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Eggar: The relative costs of electricity generated from different sources are being considered as part of the coal review. As I said in answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 14 December, at column 25, Ernst and Young has been appointed to assist in the examination of the avoidable costs of nuclear generation and related issues. There are no plans to commission further work in this area.

KS Construction Ltd.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the report from the liquidators of KS Construction Ltd. on the conduct of its directors in the two years prior to its liquidation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A return under rule 4, the Insolvent Companies (Reports on Conduct of Directors) No. 2 Rules 1986, was submitted by the liquidator of KS Construction Ltd on 21 October 1989.

Liquidation (Directors' Conduct)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average time between a company entering into liquidation and his Department receiving a report on the conduct of the directors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The statistics requested are not kept by my Department.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the caseload of the insolvency service in each year since 1989 and the average processing time per case each year since 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The following number of compulsory insolvencies fell to be dealt with by official receivers.

	1989	1990	1991	[1]1992
Bankruptcies	8,138	12,058	22,632	32,106
Compulsory liquidations	4,020	5,977	8,368	9,732
TOTAL	12,158	18,035	31,000	41,838

[1] Provisional.

In addition, the service's disqualification unit dealt with the following number of reports/returns by insolvency practitioners under the provisions of the Company Directors Disqualifications Act 1986:

	Numbers
1989	6,537
1990	12,463
1991	18,509
1992	20,468

Information on the average processing time per case is not maintained and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A provisional list of regulations which impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Radioactive Products (Safety) Regulations

Mr. Garrett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to issue the Radioactive Products (Safety) Regulations.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have decided not to proceed with making the Radioactive Products (Safety) Regulations, which would have implemented directive 80/836/Euratom, as amended, following a recommendation from the European Commission not to proceed with such legislation in view of the Commission's intention to make proposals for revising this directive.

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to amend the payment of nuclear levey money towards the construction cost of Sizewell B; and what consultations he has had with the Office of Electricity Regulation and with Nucler Electric on such amendments.

Mr. Eggar: The coal review currently being undertaken by my Department is considering the implications of the non fossil fuel obligation and the operation of the fossil fuel levy.

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions exist on the purposes on which Nuclear Electric may spend payments received from the nuclear levey; what amounts and proportion of such funds have been spent on (a) decommissioning costs and (b) other costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear Electric receives income from two main sources: premimum payments on a given proportion of its output, which is financed by the levy; and revenue from electricity sales into the pool. From this total income —the management of which is the responsibility of Nuclear Electric's board—the company must finance its current operations and make provisions in respect of longer term liabilities. Income from the levy is not hypothecated to any one activity. Nuclear Electric's payments against provisions are clearly set out in the company's report and accounts, a copy of which rests in the Library of the House of Commons.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the United Kingdom currently contributes towards funding the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will list figures for the last 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 26 October 1992 at column 515.

Cash Limits

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes are being made to his Department's cash limits and nationalised industries' external financing limits for 1992-93.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates the cash limit for class IV, vote 2 (support for industry, international trade, statutory and regulatory work, consumer protection and administration) will be increased by £4,094,000 from £804,231,000 to £808,325,000 and the cash limit on class V, vote 2 (research and development and industrial support) will be increased by £11,450,000 from £340,375,000 to £351,825,000. The cash limit for class V, vote 3 (administration) will be reduced by £500,000 from £19,506,000 to £19,006,000. The increases will be met by offsets or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The increase on class IV, vote 2 comprises £2,145,000 in respect of the administration costs of companies' late filing penalties and £6,000,000 (£1,000,000 of which comes from reductions to existing programmes) in respect of English Industrial Estates Corporation to offset reduced receipts as a result of the downturn in the property market. An increase of £500,000 is made in running costs in respect of transferred provision from class V, vote 3 and a decrease in capital spending results in a transfer of £3,200,000 to class V, vote 2. Extra receipts amounting to £351,000 are declared in respect of payments by the Department of Health to the Radiocommunications Agency.

The increase on class V, vote 2 for £11,450,000 is made up of a transfer of £3,200,000 from class IV, vote 2 to cover consultancy costs of the coal review and compensation costs arising from litigation relating to leukaemia cases. A further increase of £8,250,000 provides for a contribution to finance improvements in nuclear safety in central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. An offsetting reduction of £8,250,000 is made in the external financing limit of Nuclear Electric from £278,000,000 to £286,250,000. The external financing limit of the British Coal Corporation changes to £795,000,000 resulting from increased costs including expenditure in respect of current year voluntary redundancies, increased working capital requirements and environmental restoration at former mining sites.

Office of Fair Trading

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he proposes to the cash or running costs limits for the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit of the Office of Fair Trading will be reduced by £57,000 from £18,246,000 to £18,189,000. The reduction represents a sum to be surrendered to the consolidated fund in respect of the office's contribution to the transfer value of Sir Bryan Carsberg's pension following his appointment as director general.

Office of Telecommunications

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he plans to announce to the cash or running costs limits for the Office of Telecommunications.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit is being reduced by £182,000 from £7,939,000 to £7,757,000 and the running costs limit will be reduced by £110,000 from £7,069,000 to £6,959,000. The reduction represents a sum to be surrendered to the Consolidation Fund in respect of Sir Bryan Carsberg's accrued superannuation contributions.

RECHAR

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the RECHAR grants (a) applied for, (b) awarded and (c) outstanding in Nottinghamshire since the start of the RECHAR programme.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

In the East Midlands RECHAR programme, 146 applications have been submitted by Nottinghamshire sponsors, seeking ERDF grant to the value of £9·86 million. Of these, 20 applications with a value of £3·16 million in ERDF grant have been approved so far. The remaining applications are being evaluated.

DEFENCE

AWE, Aldermaston

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the name of the contractor company who will operate the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The tender evaluation process for the competition to appoint a contractor to operate all the sites of the atomic weapons establishment has now been completed and Hunting-BRAE Ltd. has been declared the winner. Vesting day for full contractor operation of the atomic weapons establishment remains set for 1 April 1993.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he plans to announce to the class I cash limits and running costs limit for 1992-93.

Mr. Rifkind: Subject to parliamentary approval of the spring Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made:

Class I cash limits

Vote	Current Cash limit £'000s	Change £'000s	Revised Cash limit £'000s
1	10,666,157	+156,323	10,822,480
2	9,390,603	−222,000	9,168,603
3	1,898,876	+ 74,078	1,972,954
4	1,728,873	−212,505	1,516,368
5	555,005	− 55,000	500,005

These changes decrease the block defence cash limit by £259,104,000 from £24,239,514,000 to £23,980,410,000. They allow for increased expenditure on class I, votes 1 and 3 which will be offset by lower expenditure on class I, votes 2, 4 and 5. The changes additionally take account of decreases of £209,665,000 to compensate for an overspend on class I, votes 2, 4 and 5 in the financial year 1991-92 and of £50,000,000 to reflect a forecast underspend against certain elements of provision which are subject to specific limits. Also reflected is the net effect of transfers between the Ministry of Defence and other Government departments.

The running costs limit will be increased by £163,145,000 from £5,318,374,000 to £5,481,519,000. £162,589,000 of this increase results from the continued rationalisation of activities to meet the new force structure. This involves the transfer of certain administrative tasks into the running costs total and does not add to the overall level of Defence expenditure. The increase also reflects an interdepartmental transfer of £556,000 from Property Holdings.

RAF Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the provisions governing legal powers of members of the RAF police with regard to traffic control while on duty escorting military vehicles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the circumstances described the main task of the RAF police is to control the military vehicles being escorted. The powers of RAF policemen in relation to the control of service traffic are derived from the Air Force Act 1955. They have no powers with regard to civilian traffic control.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the pool of WE177 nuclear weapons was allocated to the Royal Navy prior to the decision to eliminate the Royal Navy's tactical nuclear capability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to divulge information about our nuclear weapon holdings.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement about the future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital in Woolwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I hope to be able to make an announcement about future service hospital requirements soon.

Civilian Staff (Woolwich)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian full-time equivalents are employed in each of the military establishments in Woolwich; and how many are likely to be (a) redeployed and (b) made redundant as a result of proposed changes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 1,806 civilian full time equivalents employed in Woolwich units. The breakdown is as follows:

Unit	Civilian staff
Families Housing and Welfare Service, Royal Artillery Barracks	13
Area Accommodation Stores, Repository Road	24
Director General Fighting Vehicles Equipment, Royal Arsenal (West)	1
Headquarters Director Royal Artillery, Royal Artillery Barracks	16
Headquarters Woolwich Garrison, Government House, New Road	23
Regimental Headquarters Royal Artillery, Government House	17
Royal Artillery Institute, Royal Military Academy	19
Army Security Vetting Unit, Royal Military Academy	139
Headquarters Director Educational and Training Service, Royal Military Academy	16
Defence Medical Equipment Adviser	1
Area Civilian Staff Management, London District East/Central, Royal Artillery Barracks	11
17 Training Regiment, Royal Artillery Barracks	88
Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital, Stadium Road	181
Vehicles and Weapons Branch, Ha Ha Road	27
56 Squadron Royal Corps of Transport, Repository Road	23
Engineering Management Support (Ordnance), Building 22, Royal Arsenal (West)	66
Land Systems Technical Publications Authority, Ha Ha Road	132
Army Scaling and Cataloguing Authority, Ha Ha Road	164
Common Services (Publications and Stationery) 3, Building 25A, Royal Arsenal (West)	52
London Movements Unit (RAF), Building 53, Royal Arsenal (West)	17
31 Army Education Centre, Royal Artillery Barracks	2
Army Dental Centre, Royal Artillery Barracks	1
Central Volunteers Headquarters, Royal Artillery Barracks	3
Woolwich Garrison Officers Mess, Royal Military Academy	3
Head of Administration Royal Arsenal Woolwich	767
Total	1,806

It is not yet possible to say what numbers may be redeployed or made redundant.

Greenwich Health Authority

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when officers from his Department last communicated with representatives of the Greenwich health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The most recent substantive contact between my Department and the Greenwich health authority took place in December last year.

Travel Warrants

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 35, what percentage discount was applied to the rail travel fares covered by travel warrants issued by the armed forces in 1991-92.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is commercially confidential and cannot be released.

Bombing (Korea)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about the bombing of the 1 Battalion of the Argylls in Korea on 23 September 1950 by the USAF; what response he has made; whether he will make the relevant files available to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cash Limits

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he plans to his Department's cash limits for 1993-93.

Mr. Gummer: The cash limit for class III, vote 2 (Intervention Board—Executive Agency's administration) will be reduced by £3,000,000 from £47,774,000 to £44,774,000, reflecting reduced expenditure in the payments for agents' services. It will be offset by an increase of £3,000,000 to the cash limit on class III vote 5 to reflect lower receipts by the Ministry and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The vote 5 cash limit will be increased from £263,095,000 to £266,095,000 subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate.

At the same time the cash limit for class III vote 4 (agricultural, food and fishing services) will be reduced by £3,637,000 from £350,056,000 to £346,419,000. Expenditure will be reduced by £493,000 on agricultural grant schemes; £1,600,000 on coast protection and by £1,544,000 on sea fishery support. These reductions reflect a predicted decrease in demand and delay in implementation in further areas of these schemes.

HLCAs

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many producers are entitled to hill livestock compensatory allowances in Northumberland; and how many of those are located in severely disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Gummer: Under the 1991 (the latest year for which complete figures are available) hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme a total of 1,046 applications were submitted in respect of holdings in Northumberland of which 652 related wholly to severely disadvantaged land.

Farm Incomes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the net farm income for sheep and sheep and cattle farms in severely disadvantaged areas, in both nominal and real terms, for each year since 1978.

Mr. Gummer: Estimates of net farm income, based on results of sample surveys are provided in the following table. Year to year comparison can best be made by reference to the indices shown in the table, which are based on results from constant samples of farms.

Average net farm income on livestock farms wholly or partly in the Severely Disadvantaged Area in England

Potato Regime

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what European Commission proposals for a potato regime are currently before the European Council of Ministers.

Mr. Gummer: The proposals for a very lightweight régime are set out in COM(92)185 final which was published in the Official Journal No. C333 on 17 December 1992. The December Agriculture Council asked for further work to be done by the special committee for agriculture to progress the Commission's proposals including the addition of provision for marketing standards and for it to be referred back to the Council for decision as soon as the European Parliament has given its opinion.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Export Licences

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will combine in one Department the granting of export licences and the enforcement of the law relating to export matters.

The Prime Minister: Issues such as this need to await Lord Justice Scott's report on exports of defence equipment and dual use goods to Iraq.

Turkey

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent discussions he has held with the Prime Minister of Turkey concerning the current circumstances surrounding the relationship between Turkey and Armenia; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have not discussed this subject with the Turkish Prime Minister.

However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs discussed the situation with our Community partners. As a result of these discussions, the EC made a démarche to Turkey on 29 January asking it to allow the transit of humanitarian aid through its territory. We have not been assured by the Turkish authorities that they will permit such transit subject to monitoring under standard CSCE procedures.

Azerbaijan

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the current state of the embargo on the supply of weapons to Azerbaijan and surrounding communities issued by the conference on security and co-operation in Europe on 28 February 1992.

The Prime Minister: The CSCE's embargo on the supply of arms to the parties to the Nagorno-Karabakh dispute still applies. The Government adhere to this fully and have not approved licences for the export of any military equipment to Azerbaijan or Armenia. Nor will we do so. Indeed, during the CSCE Ministerial Council in Stockholm in December we called for an extension of this embargo to cover military assistance to the region generally.

Woolwich Arsenal Site

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will undertake a comparative study of the employment effects of any tax or consumer subsidy for deep coal mining with the projected cost of new jobs at the Greenwich city challenge proposal on the Woolwich Arsenal site.

The Prime Minister: The most suitable comparison for any city challenge bid is with other city challenge bids, and the Greenwich proposal has already been compared in this way.

EDUCATION

Departmental Building

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost of the new building for his Department in Great Smith street.

Mr. Forth: The Government rent Sanctuary Buildings from Land Securities who met the full construction costs. The final costs of fitting out the building, which is the responsibility of the Department, have not yet been settled. It is estimated that these costs, including fees and VAT, will amount to just over £11 million.

Schools (Repairs and Maintenance)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was spent in the last year for which figures are available on repairs and maintenance in state schools in England and Wales.

Mr. Forth: Expenditure on repairs and maintenance in state nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in England came to £560·3 million in the financial year 1990-91 (the latest year available). This figure excludes salary costs for maintenance staff.

Expenditure data for Wales are collected separately and are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 28 October 1992, Official Report, columns 673-5; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. Boswell: The details requested are given in the table. Information on the political affiliation of appointees is not kept centrally, but we are satisfied that appointments to this Department's public bodies are made solely on the basis of aptitude, merit and suitability.

English

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from individuals and groups in the London borough of Greenwich regarding the English SAT; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Members for Withington (Mr. Bradley) and for Cambridge (Ms. Anne Campbell) and to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Milligan) on 2 February, Official Report, column 123. My right hon. Friend has had representations from various individuals and groups, including some from the London borough of Greenwich.

Primary Schools

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will visit Thamesmead to meet teachers and parents to discuss primary school provision in the area.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average size of primary school, including both infant and junior, and how many one-form entry primary schools exist, by education authority and nationally.

Mr. Forth: The average size of maintained primary schools in each local education authority area in England in January 1992 is given in the table. Information on the number of maintained primary schools which operate a one-form entry system is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average size of primary school and the number of primary schools with one year entry in the private sector.

Mr. Forth: In January 1992 there were on average 153 pupils in each independent school in England attended mainly by pupils of primary school age. Information on the numbers of such schools which operate a one-form entry system is not collected centrally.

Discretionary Awards

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many discretionary awards, for each category of course of study, were given by each local education authority in each year since 1985;

(2) how many discretionary awards were given by each local education authority in each year since 1985 to students following vocational training courses in dance.

Mr. Boswell: Data on discretionary awards, distinguishing course of study, are not held centrally.

Cash Limits

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes he plans to announce to cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1992-93.

Mr. Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limits for class XI, vote 2, Higher and further education, vote 4, Administration, and vote 7, Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in England, will be increased, and the cash limit for vote 1, Schools, research and miscellaneous services, will be reduced. The cash limit changes are as follows:

Class and Vote	Current cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
XI.1	768,366,000	−22,471,000	745,895,000
XI.2	3,036,990,000	+ 2,550,000	3,039,540,000
XI.4	109,993,000	+ 1,000	110,994,000
XI.7	1,000	+ 1,000	2,000

The reduction to the cash limit on class XI, vote 1, includes a reduction of £15,000,000 as a contribution towards offsetting the increase of £195,000,000 sought via a Supplementary Estimate for class XI, vote 3, Student Awards, which is not cash limited. It also includes a reduction of £2,280,000 million to offset part of the increase to the cash limit on class XI, vote 2; a transfer of £85,000 to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, class II, vote 2, in respect of the funding of students coming to the United Kingdom under the European Community TEMPUS programme; and a transfer of £5,106,000 to supplementary credit approvals to local education authorities for school building works which is non-voted expenditure.

The increase on class XI, vote 2 includes an increase of £1,460,000 in capital grant to the Royal College of Art for final settlement of costs from the major project to rationalise the college's accommodation; an increase of £720,000 in recurrent grant-in-aid to the Universities Funding Council in respect of the extra costs for universities arising from the implementation for clinical academic staff of the 1992 pay award recommended by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body; and an increase of £100,000 in provisions for bursaries for the training of teachers in shortage subjects. These increases are wholly offset within the reduction to the cash limit on class XI, vote 1. In addition there is a further increase of £140,000 in recurrent grant-in-aid to the Universities Funding Council in respect of additional places sponsored by the Home Office on social work training courses at universities, wholly offset by a transfer of funds from the Home Office; and an addition of £130,000 in provision of recurrent grant-in-aid to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council to reflect the transfer of responsibility to polytechnics and colleges for funding extended and upgraded training courses in social work wholly offset by a transfer of funding from the Department of Health.

The token increases on class XI, votes 4 and 7 enable an adjustment to be made in the transfer of funds between the Department for Education's administration vote and the vote for the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector for schools in England which I announced on 12 November 1992, Official Report, columns 893-94. Within the vote totals, the Department's running costs limit has been reduced by £5,000 from £95,598,000 to £95,593,000 as a result of this adjustment. OHMCI's running costs limit has been increased by £69,000 from £7,818,000 to £7,887,000.

The increases are either offset elsewhere or are charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total for public expenditure.

Staffordshire (Musical Performances)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what response he is making to the invitation he has received to attend the performance of the Staffordshire youth wind orchestra and the Staffordshire youth big band and massed music centre choirs on 14 March.

Mr. Boswell: No such invitation has been received as yet.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Cash Limits

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes are being made in the 1992-93 cash limit and running costs limits for expenditure by Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on the external assistance vote (class II, vote 5) will be reduced by £439,000 from £1,797,199,000 to £1,796,760,000. The reduction is necessary to allow for a transfer of £440,000 to the Diplimatic Wing's programme for assistance to eastern Europe (class II, vote 2). The gross running costs limit for the ODA has been reduced by £300,000 from £47,354,000 to £47,054,000. This allows for a transfer of resources to enable the net running cost control limit of the Natural Resources Institute to be increased by £200,000 from £1,100,000 to £1,300,000 for relocation costs. It also allows for a £100,000 increase in the capital expenditure subhead of the administration section to meet the cost of office works. The decrease in the cash limit on this vote will be offset by an increase of £440,000 on class II, vote 2.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Geriatric Medicine, Banbridge

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of admissions and the number of discharges and deaths in geriatric medicine in each hospital in the southern area other than Banbridge hospital of persons resident in Banbridge district in each month since August 1991 to the present, showing the number in such care at the end of each month.

Companies (Relocation)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the number of companies which have relocated from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland in the last three years.

Mr. Atkins: I am aware of two companies which relocated from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland in this period.

Polling Stations

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the chief electoral officer intends to take to consult political parties in Northern Ireland on the new polling station scheme.

Mr. Hanley: The chief electoral officer will publish a new draft polling station scheme and invite comments on it shortly after the electoral register is published on 15 February. Any elector or group of electors may make objections to or proposals about the scheme within 14 days of publication. I understand that the CEO wrote to the political parties in Northern Ireland in November 1992 to inform them of the impending review and of the scheduled publication of a new draft scheme.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 2 November 1992, Official Report, columns 44-48; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. Mates: The following are details of public appointments made by my right hon. and learned Friend during the period 1 November 1992 to 31 January 1993.

In making public appointments, the prime consideration is the appointee's ability or potential to contribute to the work of the particular body to which he or she is appointed. In Northern Ireland other major factors taken into account are community background and gender.

Departmental Costs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cash and running cost limits for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland departmental service 1992-93.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, it is proposed that the cash limit for class XVII, vote 1 (the Northern Ireland Office) will be increased by £45,832,000 from £844,423,000 to £890,255,000. This is principally to meet additional expenditure on compensation and police costs. The additional provision sought will be mainly met from a transfer within the Northern Ireland block and the balance charged to the reserve. It will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The cash limit for most Northern Ireland departmental services will be increased by £20,621,000 from £3,393,100,000 to £3,413,721,000. This increase reflects the take-up of entitlement to end-year flexibility on capital and departmental running costs and the housing package announced by the Chancellor on 12 November 1992. It will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The combined running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments will be increased by £4,165,000 from £712,316,000 to £716,481,000. This reflects the take up of £2,471,000 of the end year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992, at columns 697-702, a net transfer of £1,684,000 from the Department of Social Security, mainly in respect of child support costs, and a transfer of £10,000 from the Property Services Agency relating to maintenance work. Of the revised running cost provision £171,362,000 is for the Northern Ireland Office and £545,119,000 for Northern Ireland Departments.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the evidence of trends in the level of drug abuse in Northern Ireland during the past five years; and if he will give details of (a) drugs, by type, seized and their street value and (b) the number of convictions by category.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The quantities and types of drugs seized during the period specified are set out in table 1 which also indicates the trends in drug abuse during the period. Table 2 lists the related convictions over the same time scale.

It is not possible accurately to assess the street value of the drugs seized as the value varies according to availability, quality and demand.

RUC

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC officers, by rank, are operating, full-time, in (a) the anti-drugs unit, (b) the complaints and discipline branch and (c) the anti-racketeering unit.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The current number of RUC officers, by rank, in the drugs squad and the complaints and discipline branch is as follows:

	Number
Drugs squad
Chief Inspector	1
Inspector	1
Sergeant	4
Constable	28
Complaints and discipline branch
Assistant Chief Constable	1
Chief Superintendent	2
Superintendent	11
Chief Inspector	25

Given the particular operational circumstances under which the anti-racketeering unit works, it is not in the public interest to disclose information as to its strength.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Safer Cities Programme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the evaluation of the safer cities programme by the Home Office research and statistics department, as it relates to crime rates and the fear of crime, to be completed and published.

Mr. Jack: Evaluation of the safer cities programme is being carried out in two stages: the first uses results from surveys and the second from recorded crime figures obtained from police forces. Surveys have taken the form of before and after studies and are being used to measure any change in levels of victimisation and fear of crime over the period 1990-92. This is intended to provide a snapshot picture of the impact of safer cities action in 11 cities, and is likely to be completed by the autumn of 1993. Police recorded crime figures will be used to look for changes in crime across time. Results from this second stage of the evaluation should be available a little later in the year, soon after which it is expected that publication of findings will begin.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many safer cities projects he plans to have operating in the financial year 1994-95; and what criteria he will use to select locations for new projects.

Mr. Jack: There are a number of considerations which will affect the pace at which phase 2 safer cities are set up and it is too early to predict the number which will be operating in the financial year 1994-95. We are considering the criteria for the selection of new locations, but among the factors likely to be taken into account will be local crime rates and the readiness of local agencies to work with the programme. I will be looking carefully at projects coming from current urban priority areas which have not yet benefited from safer cities.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason it was decided not to award Stoke on Trent safer city status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: When the safer cities programme was launched in March 1988, the 20 project locations were selected from urban programme areas with high crime rates which were aggravated by other social problems, and where other Departments' inner cities programmes were targeted. As Stoke on Trent was not an urban programme area, it was not eligible for inclusion. Plans for the second phase of the safer cities programme are now being drawn up and I have previously undertaken to let the hon. Member have full details as soon as they are available. I made a statement on 7 January which set out the Government's policy on crime prevention, including the future of the safer cities programme. A copy of this statement has been placed in the library.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money each of the safer city projects in the east midlands will receive from his Department in the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. Jack: There are three safer cities projects in the east midlands, in Derby, Leicester and Nottingham. The projects in Derby and Leicester were set up in the autumn of 1991 and it is intended to maintain their grant allocation at £250,000 in 1993-94 to enable them to support local crime prevention activities. The Nottingham project started in April 1989 and Home Office funding is due to end in March 1994; its grant allocation has been set at £100,000 in 1993-94. Nottingham and the other 15 projects where Home Office funding is due to finish next year will also have access to additional grant money from a central pool of £500,000 to assist the development of continuing structures for multi-agency crime prevention work.

In addition to the sums stated, the Home Office also pays the salaries of the staff and the other running costs of each safer cities project.

The ending of Home Office funding in 16 of the longer established safer cities projects will enable work to be started on a new phase of safer cities in other locations.

HMP, Manchester

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the original and (b) the revised closing date for tenders in respect of the market testing exercise at Her Majesty's prison Manchester.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The original closing date was 18 January. No new date has yet been set.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional costs will be incurred in respect of the market testing exercise at Her Majesty's prison Manchester as a result of the effect of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to identify separately any additional costs that might be caused by the application of the Transfer of Undertaking (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the market testing of HMP Manchester.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional information has been sent to tenderers for Her Majesty's Prison Manchester since 1 January; and what effect it will have on the tendering process.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The following information has been sent to all tenderers since 1 January:

On 4 January information about prisoner numbers received and discharged from Her Majesty's Prison Manchester over a three-month period;

On 6 January a note clarifying the supply of UHF and VHF equipment at the prison;

On 6 January a note advising that the deadline for the return of bids would be extended;

On 18 January information on the supply of X-ray machines, security portals and certain furnishings and fittings in the administration suite;

On 2 February a note on the current number of prisoners in police cells;

In addition, on 8 January, the Manchester bid team was sent a further copy of schedule 4, appendix 7, to the tender documents.

This information was provided to assist tenderers in the preparation of their bids and to inform them that the deadline for receiving bids would be extended.

Departmental Warehousing and Distributing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the contracting out of the warehousing and distributing function of the supply and transport branch of his Department;

(2) how many staff employed in the warehousing and distributing function of the supply and transport branch of his Department have been issued with redundancy notices; and if he plans to withdraw these notices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The prison service warehousing and distribution activities were market tested in 1991. Competitive bids were received from four private sector companies and there was an in-house bid. In July 1992 the contract was awarded to a private contractor subject to consultation with the trade unions and negotiation of a satisfactory contract.

All of the 141 staff employed in the warehousing and distribution function planned for contracting out were issued with redundancy notices in September 1992. There are currently no plans to withdraw these notices.

At the market testing stage it was not thought that the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (TUPE) had implications for this market testing exercise, but advice received subsequently is that the regulations would apply. The implications of this advice are now being considered.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received recently about the number of police officers in the Plumstead and Greenwich divisions of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the Metropolitan Police Commissioner's 1993 corporate strategy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am placing copies of the Metropolitan Police Corporate Strategy, 1993-94 to 1997-98, which I fully endorse, in the Library of the House today. I am also sending copies to all right hon. and hon. Members whose consituencies fall wholly or partly within the Metropolitan police district.

I am inviting London Members to discuss it with me.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the proposed policing levels for each of the Metropolitan police divisions for 1993; and what were the comparable figures for 1991 and 1992, indicating the percentage change.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available in the format requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Market Testing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of redundancy payments to persons employed in the prison department supply and transport branch as a result of the recent market testing exercise.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The cost of redundancy payments for all of the staff employed in the prison department warehousing and distribution function is estimated at £850,000.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the consultancy study undertaken by Deloitte Haskins and Sells in 1989 into the warehousing and distribution service in his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The details of costs of individual contracts between Government and contractors are regarded as commercial-in-confidence.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the full cost to date of the market testing exercise in respect of supply and transport at his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Those involved in this market testing exercise have carried out the work required as part of their normal job functions. Detailed records of the amount of time spent by individuals on this particular aspect of their jobs have not been recorded and there would be a disproportionate cost involved in obtaining these details.

False Number Plates

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recorded offences involving the use of false number plates in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available.

Cash Limits

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1992-93 cash limits within his responsibilities and to his Department's running costs limit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on class IX, vote 2, prisons, England and Wales, will be increased by £113,500,000 from £1,363,448,000 to £1,476,948,000.

The additional provision is necessary because of the need to pay for the cost of keeping prisoners in police cells. Extra provision is also necessary to meet the construction costs of new prisons due mainly to claims from contractors. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The cash limit on class IX, vote 3, Home Office administration, immigration and police support services, England and Wales, will be reduced by £12,000,000 from £1,242,192,000 to £1,230,192,000 to reflect a transfer of resources to class IX, vote 1 for the purpose of criminal injuries compensation payments and an increase in the amount of current grant payable for probation and bail hostels.

The Home Office running cost limit will be reduced by £2,132,000 from £1,449,076,000 to £1,446,944,000 to reflect lower than expected pay settlements in the prison service.

Prisoners (Razors)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which prisons male prisoners have to share razors.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prisoners are not expected to share razors. The recommended scale allows for three razors per prisoner every two weeks. Where this is insufficient, supplies of additional razors can be obtained from a direct call-off contract available to prisons.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made in his Department to implement the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992 place duties on employers and self-employed persons who conduct an undertaking from which a radiation emergency is reasonably foreseeable, and on first-tier local authorities. They place no duties on the Home Office.

Crime (London)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the metropolitan police commissioner to discuss action against crime in London.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has already discussed with the new commissioner his approach to his responsibilities, including this one, and will meet him frequently on a range of issues over the coming months.

Elections (Mechanisation)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce electronic systems for counting ballot papers at election counts.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider the introduction of a mechanised voting system for public elections on a trial basis at specified locations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have set up a working group of local authority representatives and Home Office officials as part of our post-election review to look at the implications of introducing procedures for automated vote counting. We shall consider the working group's recommendations once it has reported its findings. We have no plans to introduce an automated voting system.

Relate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the funding in real terms for Relate in each year from 1987-88 to 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Home Office grant-in-aid to Relate for each year from 1987-88 to 1993-94 is as follows in actual terms and real terms, using 1991-92 as the base year.

	Actual expenditure £	Real terms expenditure £
1987-88	912,870	1,204,902
1988-89	935,910	1,151,478
1989-90	958,890	1,106,408
1990-91	1,006,840	1,076,408
1991-92	1,107,500	1,107,500

	Actual expenditure £	Real terms expenditure £
1992-93	1,511,400	1,449,784
1993-94	1,530,500	1,428,811

In real terms, there has been an increase of 18·6 per cent. in the grant during the period in question; the actual increase is 67·7 per cent.

Car Crime

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to set up a national squad to combat the problem of car crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to create a national squad to deal with this particular type of crime.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 9 November 1992, Official Report, columns 636-66, if he will list in descending order for each police force in England and Wales the percentage changes in notifiable offences since 1979 together with the total resident population of each force area in 1981 and 1991, the number of police officers in 1981 and 1991 and the percentage clear-up rate in 1979 and 1992.

Mr. Jack: The available statistics are provided in the tables. Figures for percentage clear-up rate are not yet available for 1992. Population figures are a matter for the Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment.

Crime Clear-up Rates

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of offences cleared up and the percentage of the total clear-up rate in each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 in terms of (a) those charged and found guilty, (b) those charged and summoned, (c) those taken into consideration where the offence had previously been reported, (d) those taken into consideration where the crime had not previously been reported, (e) as a result of admissions to further offences from persons already in prison and (f) by no futher action.

Mr. Jack: The available information for 1991 is given in the table. Corresponding figures for 1981 are not available.

Police Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 (a) the number of arrests, (b) the number of people charged, (c) the number of people who appeared in court, (d) the number of people found guilty and (e) the figure for those found guilty as a percentage of (a), (b) and (c).

Mr. Jack: Information concerning arrests (for all offences), prosecutions and convictions (for indictable offences) 1981 and 1991 (which is provisional) is given in the table. Data on the number of people charged is not collected centrally.

Fire Brigade (Marine Units)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which fire brigades in England and Wales undergo regular training for emergencies at sea; and in which towns their specialist marine units are based.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 21 January 1993]: In addition to the training all firefighters receive for fighting fires on ships, 22 brigades in England and Wales maintain regular specialist training. Eleven brigades have specialist marine units.

Bail Support Schemes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the location of all bail support schemes in operation in England and Wales; and if he will indicate for each (a) the magistrates court areas served, (b) the local authority, (c) police force area in which it falls and (d) the number of people dealt with in each of the last three years;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each bail support scheme currently in operation (a) the number of people aged over 21 years, (b) the number of people aged 18 to 21 years and (c) the number of people aged under 18 years who were involved in each of the last three years;

(3) if he will publish a table showing for each bail support scheme currently in operation in England and Wales (a) the current total cost on a full year basis, (b) the total cost in each of the past three years and (c) the cost per head per week for each scheme in 1991 or for the latest available financial year.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 February 1993]: The Home Office probation supervision grant scheme, established in March 1992, makes available grants to voluntary organisations working in partnership with the probation service for a number of purposes, including bail support programmes for young adult defendants. Information about the scheme and how to apply for grants under it was sent in March 1992 to all probation services and the major voluntary organisations concerned with offenders. Bail support projects for juveniles are run by or in partnership with social service departments of local authorities. Such projects are also eligible for Home Office funding where there is a partnership with the probation service and the voluntary sector.

So far 16 applications under the supervision grant scheme have been made. Of these, five have been approved and the remainder are under urgent consideration. The available information about the two projects already in operation is set out in the table.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Cider Tax

12. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the yield from cider tax during the year 1992-93.

Sir John Cope: The yield from the excise duty on cider for the year ending 1992-93 is estimated at £80 million.

Economy (Demand)

13. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of total demand in the economy.

Mr. Lamont: Real domestic demand has been edging up since the second quarter of 1991. Both Treasury and the majority of outside forecasters expect it to pick up further in 1993.

Financial Services

14. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to make further changes in the system of regulation of financial services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend has asked the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board to review how SIB carries out its regulatory responsibilities.

Competitive Tendering

15. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will issue guidelines to Departments in respect of expenditure on the underwriting of compulsory competitive tendering contracts.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Consumption and GDP

16. Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the percentage changes in consumption and gross domestic product between 1979 and 1992.

Mr. Nelson: GDP is estimated to have risen by 22¼ per cent. in real terms between 1979 and the first three quarters of 1992. Real consumers' expenditure is estimated to have risen by 37 per cent. over the same period.

Value Added Tax

17. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the operation of the new single market VAT procedures introduced at the beginning of the year.

Sir John Cope: Early indications are that the new single market VAT procedures have been introduced with minimum disruption to trade. This reflects credit on the preparations made by Customs and by British businesses, often against tight deadlines.

25. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the operation of the new single market VAT procedures introduced at the beginning of the year.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowland).

Company Cars

18. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost in the last financial year of tax relief on company cars; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Capital allowances for company cars are estimated to have reduced corporation tax receipts by about £900 million in 1991-92. The hon. Member would not expect me to make a statement on taxation matters at this time of year.

Retail Prices

19. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for the annual increase in retail prices; and what was the equivalent figure two years ago.

Mr. Lamont: Latest figures show that the retail prices index rose 2·6 per cent. in the 12 months to December. The equivalent figure two years earlier was 9·3 per cent.

Tax Evasion

20. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of revenue lost through tax evasion in the cash economy.

Mr. Nelson: That part of the economy known as the "underground" or "hidden economy" is, by its very nature, unseen and thus unmeasurable. Reliable estimates of its size are therefore not available.

Business and Consumer Confidence

21. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the autumn statement on business and consumer confidence.

Mr. Portillo: The autumn statement was widely welcomed by business organisations. Recent survey evidence indicates that it has been followed by a marked improvement in both business and consumer confidence.

Car Tax

22. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the decision to abolish car tax.

Sir John Cope: The abolition of car tax has been warmly welcomed by both the motor trade and the vast majority of retail customers, and the motor industry has received a valuable stimulus.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the abolition of car tax on Exchequer revenue.

Mr. Dorrell: The abolition of car tax, announced in the 1992 autumn statement, has an estimated revenue cost of £100 million in 1992-93 and £750 million in 1993-94, including the loss of consequential VAT receipts. However, the Chancellor announced his intention at that time to recoup the cost of abolishing car tax in 1993-94 through other taxes on motoring. This information is set out in the 1992 autumn statement.

Tax System (Distortions)

23. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress in eradicating distortions in the tax system.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's main objective in reforming taxes is to improve the performance of the economy and to see that people's choices are distorted as little as is reasonably possible by the tax system.

Balance of Payments

24. Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the balance of payments.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford).

Growth (EC)

26. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the prospects for growth in the economies of the European Community.

Sir John Cope: In the autumn statement my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast that average growth in the three main continental European economies in 1993 would be under 1 per cent. A more recent forecast by the European Commission points to growth in the Community as a whole of only 3/4 per cent.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

27. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his latest estimate is for local authority capital receipts.

Mr. Portillo: The latest estimate of capital receipts in Great Britain for the current financial year is published in table 5.10 of "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement" which was published on 29 January.

Banking

28. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss the banking sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor meets the Governor from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues.

Interest Rates

29. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the level of interest rates.

Mr. Nelson: I have received a number of such representations.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 48, whether he has completed his consideration of a leakage prevention programme.

Sir John Cope: As part of the HM Treasury domestic policy and strategy for environmental good housekeeping there is a commitment to cease to use wherever possible ozone-depleting substances. In addition to this, the Treasury is committed to a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned by the Department. Work has started on this operation which is due to be completed by 1 April 1993.

European Community

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet European Community Finance Ministers to discuss proposals for generating economic growth.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend next intends to discuss measures to promote economic recovery with his European Community colleagues at the meeting of the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers on 15 February.

Inflation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many months over the last year the United Kingdom inflation rate has been below the EC average.

Mr. Portillo: The United Kingdom inflation rate, as measured by the annual change in the retail prices index, was lower than the EC average inflation rate in all of the 12 months up to December 1992.

National Savings

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he is considering in the operation of National Savings Bank accounts.

Mr. Nelson: The terms and operation of National Savings Bank accounts are kept under review.

Custom House, Greenock

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of the renovation of the Custom House, Greenock, occupied by Customs and Excise staff; which department met the cost; and how long the construction programme took from start to finish.

Sir John Cope: The total cost of renovation of the Custom House, Greenock, was £2·9 million and was jointly funded by PSA and Customs and Excise. The construction programme took 24 months from start to finish.

European Investment Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations he has had with the European investment bank concerning the European investment fund; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend has not had any such consultations.

VIP Tax Unit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to expand the workload of the VIP tax unit at Llanishen, Cardiff.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no current plans to expand the workload of this unit.

National Investment and Loans Office

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to make to the running cost limit for the National Investment and Loans Office in 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the running cost limit for class XVIII, vote 12 will be reduced by £28,000 from £1,214,000 to £1,186,000. This reduction reflects lower than expected expenditure on pay and other expenses.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to make to the Treasury's cash and running costs limits in 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 1 for 1992-93 will be increased by £800,000 from £93,691,000 to £94,491,000 to provide for redundancy and residual costs following the closure of the National Economic Development Office. Total winding-up costs are estimated at £2·5 million, part of which (£1·7 million) is being met from savings on the NEDO grant-in-aid and on Treasury gross running costs. The balance of £800,000 will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The gross running costs limit is being reduced by £1,532,000 from £80,891,000 to £79,359,000 following the transfer of CCTA and Chessington computer centre to the Cabinet Office: Office of Public Service and Science; and the transfer of savings to fund part of the NEDO residual costs and capital expenditure.

Registry of Friendly Societies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to make to the cash and running costs limit of the Registry of Friendly Societies for 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 11 will be reduced by £2,124,000 from £5,685,000 to £3,561,000 and the Registry of Friendly Societies running costs limit will be reduced by £1,502,000 from £8,869,000 to £7,367,000.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan), 19 January, Official Report, columns 215-17, regarding the refusal of community care grants and social fund loans if he will provide comparable information for each year from 1989.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 3 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund applications refused on grounds of insufficient priority.

Information for the year 1989-90 is not available by local office but you may wish to know that the number of loans and grants refused nationally on the grounds of insufficient priority in that year was 138,997 and 50,342 respectively.

Details of loans and grants refused on grounds of insufficient priority for the year 1990-91 by former Department of Social Security local office are at Annex A. Details for the year 1991-92 are given by Benefits Agency District and are at Annex B.

The figures should be viewed in the light of the increase in Social Fund applications; from 1989-90 to 1991-92 the number of applications to the discretionary part of the fund increased by 35%.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent the services of civil service medical officers were made use of in clearing the recent backlog of applications for disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement on the role of civil service medical officers in this regard.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hanson, dated 3 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security. You asked to what extent the services of Civil Service Medical Officers were made use of in clearing the recent backlog of applications for Disability Living Allowance (DLA); and on the role of Civil Service Medical Officers in this regard.

When the backlog of DLA claims arose following the launch of the benefit a number of measures were taken which I described in my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs. In addition, as a temporary measure, the opinions of Civil Service Medical Officers were sought to clarify some of the comments on individual cases to enable adjudication officers to quickly reach a decision. This action was taken on approximately 56,000 claims. However, I must emphasise that the decision on entitlement to benefit is always made by the adjudication officer and at no time has this been altered.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Pensions

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to enable couples, where the woman is of pensionable age and the man is not, to claim a married couple's pension.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to alter the basic structure of pension provision for married couples.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average number of years for which a woman currently works prior to reaching the state retirement age; and for how many years she would expect, on average, to receive that pension;

(2) what is the average number of years for which a man currently works prior to reaching the state retirement age; and for how many years he would expect, on average, to receive that pension.

Miss Widdecombe: The average life expectancy for a woman aged 60 is 21·69 years and for a man aged 65 is 14·06 according to the Government Actuary's Department's interim life tables. Information regarding the average length of time for which men and women work prior to state retirement age is not currently available.

Child Support Act

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations his Department has received concerning the need for research to monitor the effects of the Child Support Act 1991;

(2) what plans his Department has to carry out or commission research on the working of the Child Support Act 1991 and its impact on single parents caring for children and on non-custodial parents.

Mr. Burt: We have consistently stressed the importance of monitoring and evaluating the effects of the Child Support Act 1991, as did several respondents to the consultation exercise. Such work will be built in to the Department's research programme. We envisage that this will involve both the careful analysis of management information on the activities of the Child Support Agency and the comissioning, if necessary, of research by external experts.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated first year costs inclusive of setting-up moneys of the newly-formed Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The current estimated first-year costs, inclusive of setting-up costs, are £262 million. These are broken down as follows:

	£ million
(a) Total costs of setting up the agency	146
(b) Total costs of running the agency in 1993-94	116

One-parent Families

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide the latest estimate for the number of one-parent families in Great Britain.

Mr. Burt: The latest provisional estimate for 1991 of the number of one-parent families in Great Britain is 1·3 million. This is due to be published in March 1993 in "Population Trends No. 71."

Departmental Costs

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he proposes in the cash limit or running costs limit of his Department for 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for class XIV vote 4 will be increased by £21,426,000 from £2,271,998,000 to £2,293,424,000. The revision takes account of an increase in agency payments to the Department of Employment (class VI vote 2) £31,000,000), a transfer to the Department of Health (class XIII vote 3) of £696,000, of which £646,000 is running costs, a transfer to the Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) (vote 3) of £227,000 (running costs) and a transfer from the Scottish Office (class XV vote 19) of £1,429,000 (running costs). The additional requirements are partially offset by an increase in receipts of £10,080,000 and the balance of £20,920,000 will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The running cost limit of the Department of Social Security will be reduced by £12,239,000 from £2,537,904,000 to £2,525,665,000. In addition to the running cost transfers included above there is also a net reduction of £12,795,000 to take account of a transfer from running costs to capital expenditure (£25,367,000) and a £12,572,000 shortfall on value added tax refunds.

Family Credit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will collect and publish data on family credit recipients in each of (a) the major industrial classifications and (b) by employer employing over 1,000 workers.

Mr. Burt: An analysis of family credit recipients, by the occupation of the main earner, is contained in table A1.05 of "Social Security Statistics 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. No analysis is kept of family credit recipients by employer and to do so would incur disproportionate cost.

Benefits Agency Staff

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each of the past five years, what was the number of residential courses undertaken by departmental or Benefits Agency staff based in West Yorkshire, the cost of such courses and the reason why it has been necessary for such courses to be undertaken on a residential basis.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Residential training is not undertaken as a matter of routine, but it maximises the number of training hours in the working day and generally enhances the learning environment.

SCOTLAND

Cash Limits

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits for 1992-93 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates I intend to make changes to 10 voted cash limits and in addition the two non-voted cash blocks. These include increases in provision to reflect the increased resources for capital expenditure under the special measures announced as part of the autumn statement in November 1992.

1. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 2, Agricultural services, agricultural grants and fisheries, Scotland will be decreased by £4,000,000 from £126,684,000 to £122,684,000.
2. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 3: Training Programmes, Roads and Transport Services and Industrial Support, Scotland, will be increased by £17,522,000 from £713,689,000 to £731,211,000. An additional £8,500,000 is allocated to the Trunk Roads programme, £6,460,000 to Scottish Enterprise, £1,530,000 to Highlands and Islands Enterprise, £700,000 to Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. and £332,000 to the Technical and Vocational Education Initiative.
3. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 5: Housing and Environmental Services, Scotland, will be increased by £260,613,000 from £423,453,000 to £684,066,000. Of this £250,139,000 will be used to increase grant-in-aid provision to Scottish Homes to enable the premature repayment of National Loans Fund debt. There will be a transfer of £9,361,000 from SO/LA2 to enable Scottish Homes to continue to improve housing quality within Scotland and provide assistance to Housing Associations for the purpose of acquiring stock from local authorities and new towns. £1,109,000 of the cash limit increase will be allocated to Historic Scotland of which £1,009,000 relates to an increase in provision for Historic Building repair grants, £54,000 to reflect part take-up of entitlement to end-year flexibility for running costs as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, columns 698-702) and £55,000 to reflect a transfer of functions from Class XV, Vote 19. There is also a small increase of £4,000 to meet an unanticipated shortfall in Appropriations-in-Aid from repayments of loans and grants by first-time buyers.
4. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 12: Law, Order, Miscellaneous Health and Social Work Services, Scotland, wil be increased by £2,326,000 from £247,302,000 to £249,628,000. This includes an increased allocation to the Scottish Prison Service to bring forward a number of capital projects and take-up in full of £520,000 running costs and £803,000 End-Year Flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July (Official Report, Cols. 698-702).
5. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 13: Education, Arts and Libraries, Scotland, will be increased by £400,000 from £262,615,000 to £263,015,000. The additional resources will assist special schools and Jordanhill school with buildings expenditure.
6. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 16 Scottish Record Office will be increased by £258,000 from £3,871,000 to £4,129,000 for the take-up of end-year felxibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, Cols. 698-702) and a transfer of £27,000 from Property Holdings.
7. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 19, Scottish Office Administration will be decreased by £1,375,000 from £152,875,000 to £151,500,000.
8. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 17, The Registrar General for Scotland will be decreased by £560,000 from £7,912,000 to £7,352,000. This reduction takes into account the take-up of capital End-Year Flexibility entitlements amounting to £640,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, Cols. 698-702).
9. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 20: Revenue and rate support grants, Scotland will be decreased by £431,000 from £3,506,200,000 to £3,505,769,000.
10. The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 25: Hospital, Community Health, Family Health (Part) and Other Health Services, Scotland will be increased by £12,033,000 from £2,601,445,000 to £2,613,478,000, for increased capital expenditure and also in respect of the part of an NHS Trust's charges that reflects the Trust's liability to remunerate its capital debt to the Consolidated Fund. In addition there will be transfers from this Vote of £6,408,000 to class XV Vote 15 (to take account of changes in the requirements for GP practice fundholders and the external financing limit for NHS trusts) and of £42,000 to class XV Vote 12; and a transfer to this Vote of £47,000 from class XIII, Vote 3.

11. The non-voted cash limit SO/LA1, which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities, is to be increased by £31,462,000 from £622,125,000 to £653,587,000. This increase reflects £20,850,000 of Special Measures (including Water, Transport, Education, Police and Social Work) and take-up in full of £10,612,000 capital End-Year Flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July (Official Report, Columns 698-702.
12. The non-voted cash limit SO/LA2, which covers housing capital expenditure by local authorities and capital expenditure by New Towns, is to be increased by £23,704,000 from £267,981,000 to £291,685,000. This increase reflects allocation of £20,000,000 additional provision in the measures announced in November and take-up of £13,065,000 End-Year Flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992. It also takes account of the transfer of £9,361,000 to Vote 5 (see 3. Above).

The change to the overall Scottish Office running costs limit will be a decrease of £774,000 from £287,346,000 to £286,572,000.

The increases represented by these changes will be charged to the Reserve or offset elsewhere and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those local authorities which operate a total disregard scheme in relation to housing benefit for (a) both war disablement and war widows' pensions (b) war disablement pensions only, (c) war widows' pensions only, and (d) those authorities which do not operate a total disregard scheme for either category; if he will publish a table showing the annual cost of running each scheme to the local authority expressed (i) in actual terms and (ii) as a per capita cost to the population in that area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

A £10 statutory disregard of war widows' and war disablement pensions applies across the income-related benefits. Local authorities also have a discretionary power to enhance this disregard at their own expense in calculating entitlement to housing benefit and community charge benefit. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

The data requested on these local schemes has been compiled from the latest information from local authorities for the financial year 1990-91, together with the latest population figures from the 1991 census, and is listed in the tables. It is not possible to break down the annual cost between war disablement and war widows' pensions.

Sight Tests

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people had sight tests in all health board areas for which figures are available in (a) the last 12-month period for which figures are available and (b) in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 February, 1993]: The information requested for each of the financial years from 1987-88 to 1991-92 is shown in the table. Information for the period October 1991 to September 1992, the last full 12-month period for which information is available, is shown separately in the table.

[1] One person may have more than one sight test in the period.
[2] Since 1 April 1989 free NHS sight tests have been available only to children, full-time students under 19, those in receipt of income support or family credit, the registered blind and partially sighted, complex lens users, those who hold an AG2 exemption certificate from the health benefits unit, diagnosed diabetic or glaucoma sufferers, and close relatives aged 40 or over of glaucoma sufferers. Information is not collected on private sight tests.

EMPLOYMENT

Maternity Leave

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will review the maternity leave provisions to take account of (a) very premature birth of a baby of low birth weight, (b) multiple birth and (c) combination of (a) and (b).

Mr. McLoughlin: The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill gives all women, irrespective of length of service or hours of work, the right to 14 weeks' statutory maternity leave. Women with premature babies or multiple births will benefit from this right in the same way as other women.

Employment Training

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people resident in the area in which East Lancashire training and enterprise council operates are engaged on employment training and employment action; and what proportion they represent of the total number of eligible people.

Mr. McLoughlin: At December 1992, the latest date for which information is available, for the area covered by East Lancashire TEC (ELTEC) it is estimated that there are 1,200 people in training on employment training and 221 employment action participants. Information on the number of eligible people is not available.

Health and Safety Executive

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of persons, full-time equivalent, in each grade for each section of the Health and Safety Executive in the north-west for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Available information about staffing in HSE's Field Operations Division, Greater Manchester, Merseyside, and North West areas is given in the table for 1 April 1991, 1 April 1992, and 1 January 1993. Figures for earlier years could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment Benefit Disqualification

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes Barnsley, Central.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Eric Illsley, dated 4 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the Barnsley Central area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Information about length of disqualification periods imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the official total of unemployed for December 1992 were self-employed immediately before registering as unemployed.

Mr. McLoughlin: No information is available in respect of the claimant count. Estimates from the summer (June to August) 1992 labour force survey indicate that there were 275,000 people in Great Britain unemployed on the international standard ILO definition (not seasonally adjusted) who reported their employment status in their last job as self-employed. This represents 9·8 per cent. of total unemployed.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies in the shipbuilding and manufacturing engineering sectors have been (a) notified to and (b) filled through the Newcastle area job centres in each year since 1987; and how many people were (i) employed and (ii) seeking employment in those sectors in the Newcastle area in each of those years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the total numbers of people seeking employment, regardless of their current employment status, is not available.

The information requested on vacancies can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Information on the numbers employed is available only for the years 1987, 1989 and 1991 and can also be obtained from the NOMIS database there.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were unemployed in the Cheshire area in (a) September 1990, (b) September 1991 and (c) September 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: On the unadjusted basis, there were 23,518 unemployed claimants in the county of Cheshire in September 1990, 34,916 in September 1991 and 38,655 in September 1992.

Redundancies

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what contingency planning is undertaken by the Employment Service concerning large-scale redundancies.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Nicholas Brown, dated 4 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about what contingency planning is undertaken by the Employment Service concerning large-scale redundancies. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

My Jobcentre managers get advance warnings of major redundancies and will contact the employer and offer appropriate support.

We try to get involved as soon as possible in major redundancies and will normally approach the employer as soon as there is reason to believe our help is needed. We can offer a wide range of help and facilities to redundant workers, including a job placing service, special jobshops and benefit advice, depending on the actual requirements of the people and companies concerned.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Redundancies

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the numbers of redundancies involved in each of the six largest cases of company closures in each of the last four years (a) in Newcastle and (b) nationally.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Opportunity 2000

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what conclusions and evaluations of the Opportunity 2000 initiative have been made; and what plans she has to ask training and enterprise councils to report to her on their plans for increasing child care provision and training for 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: Opportunity 2000 is not an Employment Department initiative and arrangements for its formal evaluation are those for Business in the Community to make. However, the lessons learnt so far have been that issues concerning people returning to the labour market, who are predominantly women, are being addressed in a positive and constructive way. An increasing number of employers are realising the important contribution that women make towards economic growth and stability.

TECs are required to support, where necessary, the child care costs of those in the youth training guarantee group and may make similar help available to those entering the new adult programme, Training for Work.

From 1 April 1993 TECs will also be able to apply for a new child care grant. The purpose of the grant is for TECs, working closely with other agencies, such as local authorities and schools, to promote, set up and run after-school childcare provision.

TECs will continue to be monitored by my Department, as they have been since their introduction.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of enterprise allowance claimants are still pursuing the business for which they received an allowance a year after the allowance was exhausted in (a) each region, (b) each TEC and (c) nationally.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will update the information given in her answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 28 October 1992, Official Report, columns 718-19; and if she will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following list shows the appointments my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made since 28 October 1992. Information on the political affiliation of appointees is not kept on record.

(iv) Members (50 Representatives of member organisations)

Period of Appointment:

(i) Two years
(ii) Two years
(iii) One year
(iv) Five years

Appointee's Relevant Qualifications:

The Commission is headed by two co-chairs, one elected by members, one nominated by the Prime Minister. Baroness Denton is currently the Government Co-Chair. While member organisations are approved by Government individual members of the Commission are nominated by those organisations, not personally appointed by Ministers. Of the member organisations three have definite political affiliations. These are:

Labour Party Women's Organisation
Conservative Women's National Committee
Women's Liberal Democrat Party

Current Remuneration: Nil.

Appointments since October 1992

Five new members have been appointed since October 1992 to replace members who have retired from the Commission.

Cash Limits

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes she plans to her Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1992-93.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

The cash limit for class VI, vote 1—programmes and central services—will be reduced by £27,510,000 from £2,481,255,000 to £2,453,745,000. This reduction is mainly the net effect of lower than expected levels of expenditure on employment training and employment action programmes partly offset by increases in expenditure elsewhere on the vote, predominantly business and enterprise, training and education support and running costs (mainly for increased costs associated with the internal reorganisation of the Department and increased costs relating to higher volumes of redundancy payments). There is also an increase in expenditure on projects assisted by the European social fund offset by receipts from the European Communities, and transfers between votes.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 2—Employment Service—will be increased by a token £1,000 from £522,682,000 to £522,683,000. This is mainly the result of an increase in running costs which is chiefly in connection with the increased costs of administration of unemployment benefit payments offset by increased receipts from the Department of Social Security and, therefore, the increase will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The running cost limit for the Department of Employment, votes 1 and 2, will be increased by £38,484,000 from £1,205,045,000 to £1,243,529,000 for the reasons outlined above.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 3—Health and Safety Commission and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service—will be decreased by £2,071,000 from £196,936,000 to £194,865,000. This is the result of a reduction in running costs provision to help cover increases on vote 1, partly offset by an increase of £150,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry to provide assistance and advice to the Bulgarian Nuclear Safety Authority.

The running costs limit for the Health and Safety Commission will be decreased by £2,056,000 from £151,774,000 to £149,718,000 and the running costs limit for the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service will be decreased by £165,000 from £21,467,000 to £21,302,000.

Food Service Industry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to remedy unfair trade practices in the food service industry, especially in regard to young people or students; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 10 December 1992]: If the hon. Member has in mind terms and conditions of employment, these are for employers and employees to negotiate and agree subject to any statutory requirements.

HEALTH

HIV

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will outline the most recent findings of the unlinked anonymous monitoring of HIV prevalence in England and Wales; what levels of HIV were found in patients of district general hospitals aged between 16 to 49 years; what projections had been made for this age group; what plans she has to extend anonymous HIV testing among district general hospital patients or to increase prevention activities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The most recent findings from the unlinked anonymised HIV surveys in England and Wales were published in the Public Health Laboratory Services (PHLS) communicable disease report of 1 January 1993, copies are available in the Library.

The results included initial findings from a pilot survey conducted in two London district general hospitals. HIV prevalence in patients aged 16 to 49 attending specialities thought unlikely to be associated with HIV related illnesses was one in 170 for men and one in 600 for women. The great majority of AIDS cases and HIV infection diagnosed in England and Wales has been within this age group.

The results of the surveys indicate that HIV remains a cause for concern and that public education work should continue to draw attention to the risks of HIV infection and how these risks can be reduced. The findings from all elements of the anonymised HIV survey programme will be taken into account in the further development of the HIV prevention strategies.

The Day report published by the PHLS in 1990 included a projection of the incidence of AIDS to the end of 1993, but not HIV infections.

The Medical Research Council is considering proposals from the PHLS to expand the general hospital study.

Mrs. Tracey Evans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 540, what assessment she has made of the impartiality and thoroughness of the inquiry of the area child protection committee and as to why Mr. Evans was not invited to give evidence or be interviewed.

Mr. Yeo: Government guidance in 'Working Together under the Children Act 1989' explains that the area child protection committee review is a composite review of the reports of individual agencies, completed following reviews by those agencies to establish:

whether the agency child protection procedures have been followed;

whether the case suggests that there is an urgent need to review those procedures and whether any other action is needed within agencies.

The area child protection committee does not carry out a direct inquiry and it is not normal practice for it to seek evidence from individuals for this purpose.

Community Care

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library her Department's guidance to local authorities to ensure the provision of human aids to communication during community care assessment procedures for deaf or hard of hearing people.

Mr. Yeo: We fully recognise the importance of communication for people with a hearing impairment. The Department's social services inspectorate and the social work services group of the Scottish Office issued practice guidance on care management and assessment in 1991: "Care Management and Assessment: Practitioners Guide". This document advises local authorities that users and carers should receive every help to speak and act for themselves in the assessment process, including ready access to interpreting services where necessary. Copies are available in the Library. The Department will also be supporting a conference in June for managers in health and social services aimed at improving awareness of the communication needs of people with a hearing impairment.

Head Injury Deaths

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died from head injuries in England and Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Numbers of deaths from head injuries (ICD 800-804 and 850-854) in England and Wales, 1980 to 1991

Year	Persons
1980	4,385
1981	3,910
1982	4,064
1983	4,129
1984	4,172
1985	4,065
1986	4,022
1987	4,091
1988	3,856
1989	3,994
1990	4,156
1991	3,754

Condoms

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend the Bolton project for the distribution of free condoms, to the rest of England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: There are about 30 similar projects, evaluating the provision of sexual health counselling and free condoms by general practitioners, currently being conducted around England and Wales. In the 1992 "Allocation for HIV and AIDS work" letter (EL(92)18), the Department suggested that health authorities consider using HIV prevention money for such schemes. The Department is keeping in close touch with many of the pilot projects and awaiting further results with interest.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in the project to distribute free condoms via general practitioners in Bolton.

Mr. Yeo: This project is currently the subject of local consultation. It is hoped to begin a pilot scheme on 1 April 1993. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of Bolton family health services authority, Mr. A. J. Pettengell, for details.

Hospital Patients

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in directly managed units and trusts (a) from NHS purchasers and (b) from non-NHS purchasers in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Hospices

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total government funding to voluntary hospices in the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The Government greatly appreciate the contribution which the voluntary hospice movement makes to the provision of specialised care and support for the terminally ill and their families. Our commitment to the movement has been shown by the allocation of funds to regional health authorities to enable them to increase their support.

In 1988-89, and 1989-90, there were one-off payments to voluntary hospices. Funds were allocated to the hospice movement, through the charity 'Help the Hospices' as a one-off award to help hospices facing financial dificulties. In 1988-89, payments were made to help with the costs of nurses' pay awards. Since 1990-91, the Government have allocated funds annually to regional health authorities specifically to enable them to increase the support they give to voluntary hospices. Since 1991-92, funds have also been provided to ensure the supply of drugs to hospices without charge.

Funding since 1988 is as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	1·4
1989-90	0·4
1990-91	8·0
1991-92	20·2
1992-93	38·2
1993-94	42·9

Dentists (North Devon)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many adult and child patients have been de-registered by their dentists for national health service treatment in north Devon to date;

(2) how many dentists in North Devon have become private practitioners since the alteration to their contracts; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about numbers of patients de-registered by dentists has been collected only since 3 July 1992. By 22 January 1993, 11,491 adults and 272 children were reported by Devon FHSA as de-registered by their dentist. On 1 July 1992 there were 514,766 adults and 156,443 children registered by Devon FHSA. By 30 November, the latest date available, these totals were 511,987 and 167,228 respectively.

Information on the number of dentists who have become private practitioners since the alteration to their contracts is not held centrally.

Monkton Nursery, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 723, what representations she has received about Monkton nursery, Liverpool; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have received 13 letters from the hon. Member on behalf of his constituents. The Department's social services inspectorate is making inquiries about the matter.

Sight Tests (Sandwell)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had sight tests in Sandwell in each financial year since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers of National Health Service sight tests paid for in each financial year by the Sandwell family health services authority are shown in the table.

Year	Number of sight tests
1987-88	90,020
1988-89	92,230
[1]1989-90	44,830
1990-91	34,860
1991-92	40,570

Note: The Department does not collect information on the number of private sight tests carried out.

[1]From April 1989, NHS sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population. The sight tests paid for in 1989-90 include some conducted prior to 1 April 1989, when sight tests were universally available. The remainder paid for in 1989-90 do not represent a full year under the new system, because of the delay in payments. The figure for 1989-90 is not, therefore, directly comparable with that for 1990-91.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were on waiting lists for under one year, one to two years, and two years or more in March and September of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table. This shows that at September 1992 the number of patients waiting over a year was 60 per cent. lower than in March 1988. In 1991-92 alone, the number of over-one-year waiters fell by almost 90,000. Today, regions no longer have any patients waiting two years or more for any in-patient or day case treatment.

Private Beds

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of private beds available in each regional health authority in the last 10 years.

Dentistry

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women were eligible for free dental service during pregnancy and one year after the birth of the child, for each of the last 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given in the table.

General dental services
Number of expectant or nursing mothers eligible for exemption from NHS dental charges in England

Year	Monthly average number eligible
1981	960,000
1982	940,000
1983	940,000
1984	950,000
1985	980,000
1986	990,000
1987	1,020,000
1988	1,040,000
1989	1,030,000
1990	1,050,000

Note: The numbers of women eligible for free NHS dental treatment during pregnancy and one year after giving birth have been estimated from the monthly number of live and still births in England in the years shown.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pregnant women/nursing mothers have been exempted from NHS dental charges in each of the last 10 years; what has been the cost of their exemption in each year; and what estimate she has made of the saving to the Exchequer of removing this exemption.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested.

Information on the number and cost of courses of treatment given to expectant and nursing mothers is given in the table.

General Dental Services—England
Number and cost of courses of treatment to expectant and nursing mothers

Year	Number of courses	Cost of courses (£)

1990-91[1]	n/a	n/a
1991-92	1,120,283	45,998,319

[1] Data for 1990-91 are not available.

It is not possible to estimate the cost of the exemptions over this period both because the charging regimes have changed many times over the period and because some women will have been able to claim exemption or remission on one or more grounds. This factor affects the interpretation of the table.

No precise estimate has been made of any saving to the Exchequer of removing this exemption.

District Nursing Service, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the future of the district nursing service in Liverpool.

Mr. Sackville: The management of nursing services in Liverpool is the responsibility of Liverpool health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the authority chairman, Mr. D. H. Tod, for details.

OPCS

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes are planned to the cash limits and running costs limits for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIII, vote 6 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys) will be increased by £889,000 from £37,057,000 to £37,946,000 and the running costs limit for OPCS will be increased by £1,568,000 from £46,002,000 to £47,570,000. This reflects the take-up of £504,000 under the end year flexibility arrangements for running costs as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992, at columns 697-702; an increase in running costs provision of £207,000 in respect of a transfer of funds from Property Holdings; and increased running costs provision of £300,000 for work on problems connected with census outputs and increased staff costs which will be partly offset by a decrease in capital provision of £122,000. The increases not offset will be charged to the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The following increases will also affect the running costs limit; £232,000 in the National Health Central Register area for work on the Department of Health's National Health Service number programme and additional research work; £325,000 for the work of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission. There will also be increases in capital provision of £25,000 for the National Health Central Register and £66,000 for the Parliamentary Boundary Commission. These increases will be offset by an increase in appropriations in aid on the OPCS vote and met from within the existing resources of the Department of Health (class XIII, vote 3) and the Home Office (class IX, vote 3) and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Cash Limits

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any changes will be made to the cash limits and the running costs of her Department in 1992-93.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIII, vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, England) will be increased by £28,278,000, from £18,509,508,000 to £18,537,786,000. This increase covers additions of £42,116,000 for entitlements to carry over underspends under the end year flexibility arrangements as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992, at columns 697-702. The increase also covers transfers from class XIII, vote 3 (Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) of £8,302,000 (£4,316,000 for work of the valuation office; £1,750,000 in respect of an adjustment in HIV funding; £871,000 for day and domiciliary care; £613,000 for the British National Formulary and Drugs and Therapeutic Bulletin; £390,000 in respect of the National Health Service Estates and Health Building Agency; £307,000 for the National Health Service Supplies Authority and £55,000 for the Association of Community Health Councils) and £351,000 for class IV, vote 2 (Department of Trade and Industry: support for industry, international trade, statutory and regulatory work, consumer protection and administration) for licence fees for use of the radio spectrum. These increases are partly offset by transfers of £22,308,000 to class XIII, vote 4, (Family health services (part) national health service trusts external financing, etc., England) for an increase in the national health service trusts' aggregate external financing limit; of £146,000 to class XIII, vote 3 (£110,000 for oral polio vaccines and £36,000 for the Special Hospital Service Authority) and £37,000 to class XVI, vote 5 (Tourism, roads and transport, other environmental services (including civil defence), education, arts and libraries and health and personal social services, Wales) for career registrars.

The cash limit class XIII, vote 3 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be reduced by £3,277,000 (from £821,523,000 to £818,246,000). This reduction allows for transfers £8,302,000 to class XIII, vote 1; £130,000 to class XI, vote 2 (Department for Education higher and further education) for the conversion of social work training courses; £47,000 to class XV, vote 25 (Hospital and community health services, family health (part) and other health services, Scotland), £23,000 to class XVI, vote 8 (Hospital and community health, family health services (part) and related services, Wales); £13,000 to the Department of Social Services, Northern Ireland in respect of the NHS Estates Management and Health Building Agency and £62,000 to class XIV, vote 4 (Department of Social Security, administration and miscellaneous services) in respect of Departmental administration. The overall reduction is partly offset by £3,929,000 for the take-up of entitlements to carry over underspends under the end year flexibility arrangements as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992, at columns 697-702 (capital £2,655,000 and departmental running cost of £1,264,000); the transfer of increased provision of £422,000 from class VIII, vote 7 (Department of the Environment Property Holdings and central support services); civil accommodation and administration, etc) in respect of club subscription charges; transfer of £146,000 from class XIII, vote 1; transfer of £45,000 from class VI, vote 1 (Department of Employment: programmes and central services) for advice on alcohol in the workplace and £758,000 transferred from class XIV, vote 4 (Department of Social Security: administration and miscellaneous services) mainly for printing costs, departmental administration, computer systems and for costs in respect of Age Concern.

The Department's gross running cost limit will be reduced by £2,627,000 from £269,236,000 to £266,609,000. This reflects the take-up of £1,264,000 end year flexibility on running costs, offset by the net effect of transfers mentioned above.

All increases will either be offset by savings or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Children Act 1989

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress made in implementing the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Yeo: I am pleased to be able to announce that my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have today submitted our first joint report to Parliament on the Children Act in operation in England and Wales. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

The report, which contains a full description of the operation and achievements of the Act, highlights a number of striking and encouraging features. Overall, local authorities are to be commended for their generally positive response to their new duties under the Act and in particular for the way in which their child care interventions have become more sharply focused, with more children remaining at home with their own families.

In line with the intentions of the Act, I can report that:

(i) almost 3,000 or approximately 50 per cent. fewer emergency orders were made in the first year giving authority for the removal of a child at home;

(ii) there has been a substantial fall in the number of children entering compulsory care. Some 1,600 were subject to a compulsory care order under the Children Act in the first year compared with nearly four times as many under similar orders previously;

(iii) some 5,000 or 10 per cent. fewer children were being looked after by local authorities at the end of March compared with a year before.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the names and addresses of limited companies set up by general practitioner fund holders in the last three years;

(2) how much has been paid from public funds, in real terms to limited companies set up by general practitioner fund holders (a) individually and (b) in total in the years 1991-92 and 1992-93;

(3) if she will list the names of general practitioner fund holders who have been invited to return money from the limited companies to the national health service or risk losing their fund-holding status; which of them have been asked to return sums (a) between £50,000 and £100,000 and (b) over £100,000; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by her Department to regional health authorities about speculative investment in the property market.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities are not allowed to invest speculatively in the property market. In certain circumstances, they may acquire land by agreement and manage and deal with land in order to make more income available to the health service. Departmental guidance is given in "Property Transactions in the NHS" which specifically prohibits investment in property and land dealing markets.

Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what independent evaluation she has made, and proposes to make, of the costs and benefits of reduction and elimination of long wait elective surgery cases; and if she will publish such a study at appropriate intervals.

Mr. Sackville: None. Waiting times have improved dramatically under this Government and we are determined to build on this success. Since 1987 we have provided a waiting time fund totalling nearly £200 million which has enabled additional long-wait patients to be treated from waiting lists. The introduction of the waiting time guarantee under the patients charter means that for the first time patients do not have to face an interminable wait for treatment.

Social Work Training

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in the development and implementation of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work post-qualifying framework for social work training; what has been spent so far; how many post-qualifying awards have been made to date; and how many it is expected will be made within the next 12 months.

Mr. Yeo: The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) is in the process of developing a framework for post-qualifying education and training social work, with funding provided by the Government. A five-year implementation plan commenced in 1991-92 as part of the overall Government training strategy.

The framework will be implemented by 30 regionally-based consortia composed of educational institutions and employing agencies in the statutory and independent sectors. Fifteen of these have been established and the others are in the process of being established. It is anticipated that United Kingdom-wide coverage will be completed by mid-1993 and that they will have completed their development work by mid-1995.

Expenditure by CCETSW on the development and implementation of the new arrangements in England, Wales and Northern Ireland between 1989-90 and 1992-93 amounts to £1·2 million.

CCETSW anticipates that 40 awards will be made in 1993-94 and that thereafter numbers will increase considerably.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement setting out the cost, the date, address and reasons for the decision of the Mersey regional health authority recently to purchase a flat in Liverpool; and if she will indicate the number of occasions upon which that property has been used so far, by whom, upon what dates, and for what purposes.

Mr. Sackville: I understand the Mersey regional health authority recently purchased a flat from its endowment funds. It is used to accommodate visitors for whom the region would otherwise have to meet hotel costs. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Professor Breckenridge, chairman of Mersey RHA, for further details.

Retinopathy of Prematurity

86. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 481, when she expects to complete her discussions with those professional bodies concerned with conducting research studies into retinopathy of prematurity;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 481, if she will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines issued by the British Association of Perinatal Medicine and the College of Ophthalmologists on the care of retinopathy of prematurity;

(3) pursuant to her answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 481, if she will estimate her Department's total expenditure since 1980, at constant prices, on research into the cause and treatment of retinopathy of prematurity.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 February 1993]: I have today placed in the Library copies of the guidelines on the care of retinopathy of prematurity (ROP) drawn up by the British Association of Perinatal Medicine and College of Ophthalmologists.

Discussions between departmental officials, professional bodies and researchers about research studies into ROP, referred to in my earlier reply of 22 January at column 481, will be completed shortly. Funding has currently been earmarked for a suitable research proposal. The Department has not hitherto commissioned any research into ROP over the period in question.

Pneumoconiosis

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many former miners have been affected by pneumoconiosis in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.
This is a matter for British Coal.

DHA Mergers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authority amalgamations are already taking place; and if she will list them.

Mr. Sackville: Ministers have approved the following nine district health authority mergers to come into effect from 1 April 1993:

West and East Suffolk District Health Authorities;
Lewisham and North Southwark, Camberwell and West Lambeth District Health Authorities;
Brighton, Eastbourne and Hastings District Health Authorities;
Kingston and Esher and Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton Health Authorities;
Aylesbury, Wycombe and Milton Keynes District Health Authorities;
Hull and East Yorkshire District Health Authorities;
Grimsby and Scunthorpe District Health Authorities;
Calderdale, Dewsbury and Huddersfield Health Authorities;
Pontefract and Wakefield District Health Authorities.

WALES

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what benefits will accrue to Wales from the proposals to establish an environmental protection agency jointly covering the Principality and England.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The proposed new Environment Agency will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales on its activities in the Principality and will unify the key regulatory pollution control functions affecting air, land and water; provide a strong independent voice influencing the adoption of better environmental standards and practices; and help industry by reducing the number of regulators and ending overlaps between them. There will be an appropriate presence by the agency in Wales, for it to be accessible to the public and to those it will regulate in the Principality.

Special Needs Pupils

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children with special educational needs have entered segregated special schools at (a) primary and (b) secondary level in every local education authority area of Wales in each of the last five years; and how many pupils at (a) primary and (b) secondary school level in each area have attended special schools during the same period.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of children with special educational needs entering special schools each year is not collected centrally.

Information on the number of full-time pupils who attend special schools is provided in the series of publications entitled 'Statistics of Education in Wales: Schools', Section 1, table 1.10, for previous years up to and including 1990-91. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Youth and Community Work

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from the Welsh Association of Full-time Youth and Community Workers over the level of provision for their work on education and development.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Environmental Managers Network Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress made in his Department's scheme to establish in Wales an environmental managers network programme in conjunction with the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Since the launch in July 1992, 87 companies have joined the Welsh environmental managers network, and membership has increased at a steady pace. Of these, 21 are from north Wales, 7 are from south-west Wales, 40 from south-east Wales and 19 from mid Wales.

A mini-launch of the network in conjunction with the Development Board for Rural Wales took place on 20 January 1993, in Newtown, Powys. Since that date membership in the mid Wales region has increased from two to 19. All inquiries for membership in mid Wales will be routed through the Development Board for Rural Wales. A list of members is displayed in the Library of the House, and brought up to date at three-monthly intervals.

A470

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the improvements to the A470 between Betws-y-Coed and Blaenau Ffestiniog are to be commenced; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: These improvements are planned for the medium and long term and thus not expected to start before April 1995.

Health Service Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that the numbers of administrative and managerial grade staff employed in the national hospital service does not exceed the numbers of medical consultants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. The required employees for any grade in the national health service must be as is appropriate for the provision of the best health care for patients.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the latest conclusions of the sub-group on internal management submitted to the Welsh consultative council on local government reform.

Mr. David Hunt: I expect shortly to receive a report from the sub-group. This will be considered by the Consultative Council on Local Government at its next meeting. A copy of the final report will be placed in the Library of the House.

"Environmental Digest for Wales"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the next edition of his Department's environmental digest for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The seventh edition of the 'Environmental Digest for Wales' is due to be published on 31 March 1993.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 30 October 1992, Official Report, columns 866-908; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. David Hunt: Information is not collected about the political affiliations, if any, of appointees. Although these are public and well known in some cases, in other cases they are either not known at all or are known only on a private basis.

As the updated information requested is some 50 pages in length, I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Certificate of Education

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from educational organisations and schools regarding the future of the certificate of education in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Representations have, so far, been received from the Welsh joint education committee and four secondary schools. I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 2 February 1993.

Youth and Community Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount spent as a percentage of their budget by each local authority in Wales on youth and community services for young people and adults in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the table.

Definitions changed in 1990-91; hence figures for this year are not strictly comparable with those for earlier years.

HLCA (Gwynedd)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many producers are entitled to hill livestock compensatory allowances in Gwynedd; and how many of those are located in severely disadvantaged areas.

Mr. David Hunt: Some 2,900 claimants in Gwynedd currently receive hill livestock compensatory allowance. Of these, some 1,900 have land located in the severely disadvantaged areas.

Farm Incomes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the net farm income for sheep and sheep and cattle farms in severely disadvantaged areas, in both nominal and real terms since 1978.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates of net farm income based on the results of the farm business survey are provided in the table. Year-on-year comparison can best be made by reference to the indices shown in the table which are based on the results from a constant sample of farms.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what independent studies and evaluation exercises he has undertaken of the deprivation factor in the calculation of the health spending formula in the different health authorities in Wales;

(2) what consultations he has had with the Welsh health authorities on the variation of the capitation formula for procurement and primary health care to correspond to variations in deprivation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A review of the relationship between morbidity, social deprivation and health care needs was carried out for the Welsh Office by Dr. Roy Carr Hill of the University of York Centre for Health Economics in 1990. Dr. Carr Hill's report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, helped to inform my right hon. Friend's decision, following consultation with health authorities, on the structure of the weighted capitation formula for health authority revenue allocations in Wales. The House was informed of this on 21 March 1991, at columns 178-80.

Copies of the relevant consultation paper, "Implementing the White Paper: Options for a Weighted Capitation Revenue Resource Allocation Formula", are in the Library of the House. The treatment of social deprivation is amongst the issues examined in the paper.

My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he is willing to review the formula used in Wales if agreed methods can be devised to distinguish the effects of higher levels of sickness and social deprivation on the relative resource needs of health authorities in Wales.

The Welsh Office will be examining the 1991 census data now becoming available to see how this impacts upon the formula shares of health authorities in Wales. It has also invited Mid Glamorgan health authority to submit a research proposal to examine further how the effects of social deprivation might be reflected specially in the formula and how this might be weighted compared to the overall "sickness factor" currently used. Subject to the research proposal satisfying other authorities and academic referees, central funding towards such research will be considered.

General Practices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the number of general practices in Wales with (a) no female general practitioner in the practice, (b) a part-time only female general practitioner, (c) a full-time female general practitioner but not in partnership and (d) other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information relates to partnerships and single-handed practitioners. Of the 550 in Wales as at 1 April 1992 there were:

(a) 281 which had no female practitioner;

(b) 42 which had one female part-time practitioner;

(c) 11 female practitioners who practised as single-handed doctors;

(d) 216 partnerships which had at least one full-time female practitioner.

The information provided relates to principals, unrestricted and restricted, in general practice. Information relating to the number of female trainees and assistants in general practice has not been included, as the data required at individual partnership level is not readily available.

Waste Incinerator (South Glamorgan)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the emissions from the waste incinerator stack.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the pollution control provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the prime regulatory responsibility for incinerators such as that operated by South Glamorgan health authority at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff rests with the local district council. I understand that Cardiff city council is in close contact with the health authority about the cause of the recent emission problems and how these may be remedied.

Welsh Development Agency (Chairman)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 887, what activities he undertook prior to the placing of the advertisement for the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to secure a suitable field of candidates; and what recruitment consultants he has hired to assist in the process.

Mr. David Hunt: Quite a lot; none.

Hospital Doctors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the number of full-time equivalent (a) consultants, (b) senior registrars, (c) registrars and (d) junior hospital doctors employed in the national health service in Wales; and what were the equivalent figures for the years 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information for 1990 and 1991 is given in the table. No estimate of the position in 1992 can yet be made. This can be compared with the figures for 1979.

	Medical staff in post as at[1]
	30 September 1979	30 September 1990	[2]30 September 1991
Consultants	614·1	826·5	839·7
Senior registrars	112·8	138·7	143·8
Registrars	321·6	357·1	352·4
Junior hospital doctors[3]	669·6	898·2	866·2

[1] Whole-time equivalents excluding locum staff and hospital dental staff.
[2] Provisional.
[3] House officers and senior house officers.

School Governors (Ring-binder Contracts)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 51, if he will give the cost of each of the two ring-binder contracts for school governors under local management of schools.

Mr. David Hunt: Twenty-two thousand five hundred and seventy-two pounds, and £13,925.

Valleys Initiative (Leaflet Contract)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of the valleys initiative leaflet contract.

Mr. David Hunt: The values of the six contracts for the production of leaflets on the programme for the valleys were: £22,028·25; £10,360·00; £4,639·67; £3,279·00; £3,050·00 and £1,513·40.

County Councils (Expenditure)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount he proposes to transfer to each of the Welsh county councils equivalent to the present expenditure on the independent living fund.

Mr. David Hunt: Successor arrangements to the independent living fund announced on 24 November by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People will involve local authorities working in partnership with the new fund to help people of working age with the most severe disabilities to live independently in the community. The sums within local authorities' standard spending assessments for 1993-94 attributable to their enhanced responsibilities under these arrangements are as follows:

	£ thousands
Clwyd	230
Dyfed	192
Gwent	253
Gwynedd	130
Mid Glamorgan	308
Powys	65
South Glamorgan	231
West Glamorgan	205
Total	1,614

Revenue Support Grant (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his assumptions in relation to capital receipts in his revenue support grant announcement for local authorities for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: I have, as in previous years, made certain assumptions in relation to capital receipts in the revenue support grant calculations, including those set out in the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1993-94 (HC 412) in note 1(d)(v) to table 1.2 on page 13 and in note (f)(vi) to table 1.5 on page 19. All assumptions have been agreed with the local authority associations.

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the average weekly earnings of (a) women and (b) men in Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is available from the new earnings survey (part A or E), an annual publication produced by the Employment Department. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was personal income per head in Wales in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available information is for 1990 when the average personal income per head of population in Wales was £7,236.

Melrose Centre, Shotton

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Clwyd county council social services division, Melrose centre, Shotton to meet the user groups.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend has plans to do so at present.

EDUCATION

Primary Schools

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines the Government issue on the optimum size of primary schools.

Mr. Forth: The Government have issued no guidelines on the optimum size of primary schools.

Universities, Wales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what formula will be used in determining the proportion granted to the Wales higher education funding council of the Department for Education budget for universities.

Mr. Boswell: The expenditure programmes of the Department and the Welsh Office were adjusted at the time of the 1992 autumn statement to take account of the changed responsibilities for the funding of universities. Adjustments of this kind are only one component of the public expenditure survey process leading to a decision by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales about the funds available for the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales.

Schools Inspectors

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools is making towards maintaining a register of those competent to lead inspection teams.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Ofsted; I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to my hon. Friend.

Key Stage 1

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children aged seven years in each local education authority area are allowed to proceed beyond key stage 1, level 3.

Mr. Forth: Every child at the end of key stage 1 who has demonstrated through the statutory assessments that he or she has reached the targets for level 3 should be taken on by his or her teachers to the targets appropriate for the next level. The following table indicates by LEA the percentage of pupils at the end of key stage 1 in 1992 who reached level 4.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will bring in legislation to give parents of children with special needs the right to state a preference for their child's school from amongst local education authority special or ordinary schools, grant-maintained schools and schools run by a recognised charity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill, currently before Parliament, significantly extends the rights of parents of children with special educational needs over the school their child should attend. It enables parents of children with special educational needs to express a preference for the maintained school which should be named in a statement or to make representations in favour of a non-maintained or independent school. In all cases, if the local education authority does not comply with the parents' wishes, parents may appeal to the special educational needs tribunal, whose rulings will be binding.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish for each local education authority the number of appeals made against statements of special educational need; and what is the estimated cost of running the appeals system in each local education authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide information on the staffing and other costs which go to making up his estimate of setting up the tribunal system for hearing appeals about statements of special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: We shall be consulting on the details of the tribunal's establishment and procedures. Initial estimates are based on the Department's own experience of staffing and administrative costs in handling appeals and reflect consultation with other Departments which sponsor tribunals.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Smoking

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if consideration will be given to reviewing the policy on smoking within the Palace of Westminster, following the recent case involving Stockport council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 1 February at column 64.

Abbreviated Automatic Dialling

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee on what date abbreviated automatic dialling to the European Commission ceased; and when it will be restored.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The only disruption of the abbreviated dialling system for the European Commission occurred recently when its telephone number was changed without notice. The new number was encoded as soon as it was known. Extra numbers have now been added; and a revised list of European institution exchanges accessible by abbreviated dialling will be circulated as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken in his Department to implement the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1993.

Mr. Atkins: None. The enactment cited is not extant in Northern Ireland.

Population

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures expressed in numbers and as a percentage of relevant population.

Mr. Hanley: The information is set out in the tables. It is the same as that which I provided to the hon. Gentleman in my letter of 18 November 1992, a copy of which was placed in the Library. Electoral registration figures for 1993-94 will not be available until the new register is published on 15 February. Mid-year population estimates for 1992 will not be available until the summer.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Satellite Television

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints he has received from those members of the public who have paid for de-coders which enable them to receive a satellite programme called "Red Hot Dutch."

Mr. Jack: None have so far been addressed to the Home Office.

Obscene Publications Act

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with groups representing women, parents, children, the police, the legal profession, the churches and the retail trade about reform of the Obscene Publications Act 1959; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We receive frequent representations both from groups and from individuals on the subject of obscenity and are aware of the concern which is felt in many quarters. The application of the Obscene Publications Act is kept under constant review and we are currently considering, in consultation with the police, the Crown prosecution service and other Government Departments, whether any changes in practice might be made to improve the enforcement of the law.

Sri Lankan Refugees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of Sri Lankan refugees seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom on 25 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 31 December 1992, around 4,450 applications by Sri Lankan citizens, excluding dependants, for asylum in the United Kingdom were awaiting a decision. Specific information for 25 January 1993 is not available.

Police, Greenwich

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis indicating the change in the number of police officers available for service in the London borough of Greenwich in each of the last two years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 29 December 1992 the policing strength within the London borough of Greenwich was recorded as 261 and for the same date in 1991 it was 281. Between these dates the method of manpower recording changed. There has, in fact, been no reduction in the number of police officers available for operational duty.

Customs Barriers

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take action to ensure that the removal of customs barriers between Great Britain and continental EC countries does not lead to a flood of automatic weapons being brought into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All European Community states are bound by the EC weapons directive, which came into effect on 1 January 1993. Under the directive the possession of automatic firearms is prohibited throughout the Community.

Also under the directive, movements of other firearms are subject to a new licensing system. As before, anyone purchasing a firearm in another EC state must have prior permission from the police to bring it into the United Kingdom. But in addition to this, notice of each transfer of a firearm to this country will now be sent to my Department via a new Community-wide information system. The information will be passed to police and customs officers who will investigate any apparent irregularities.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's current policy on the protection of Mr. Salman Rushdie from terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It remains the policy that protection should be provided where it appears appropriate in the operational judgment of the chief officer of police. In Mr. Rushdie's case decisions on the level of police protection to be provided are a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Female Prison Officers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prison officers are employed in prisons in the United Kingdom; and how they are deployed throughout the service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of December 1992, there were 1,967 female prison officers employed in prison service establishments in England and Wales—41 principal officers, 126 senior officers and 1,800 officers. A total of 682 were employed in female establishments, 1,124 in male establishments and 161 in dual-sex establishments.

Beckard Pollitzer Ltd.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his decision to contract out the warehouse and distribution function of the supply and transport branch of his Department to Beck and Pollitzer Ltd.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to her question on 4 February.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision has been made for compensation to be payable to Beck and Pollitzer should his Department withdraw from the contracting out of supply and transport functions of the Home Office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No provision has been made for compensation to be paid to Beck and Pollitzer.

Prison Service Dog Section

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to market-test the prison service dog section; what consideration he has given to the applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings Regulations 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison dog service is one of the candidates in my Department's current market testing programme. Work on this project is due to commence on 8 March. As part of it we will be considering the applicability of the TUPE regulations.

Mr. Bashir Uddin

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider compensation to Mr. Bashir Uddin following his acquittal of assault at the Inner London Crown court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: If Mr. Bashir Uddin applies to the Home Office, his application will be carefully considered in accordance with the current relevant arrangements for the payment of ex-gratia compensation which were described by my right hon. Friend, the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) on 29 November 1985 at column 691-92.

Safer Cities Programme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what grant aid budget those safer cities projects due to close in March 1994 have for the financial year 1993-94; how much of this each project has already committed; and what money is available within each project for new initiatives.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 February 1993]: Each of the 16 projects due to close in March 1994 has £100,000 available in grant funding in 1993-94 to support local crime prevention schemes. The records of approved schemes held at the Home Office show the following amounts already committed and still available for initiatives. Plans to use uncommitted expenditure may already be at a fairly advanced stage locally.

Project	Amount committed (£ thousand)	Amount available from £100,000 (£ thousand)
Birmingham	42·1	57·9
Bradford	32·1	67·9
Bristol	0·0	100·0
Coventry	92·9	7·1
Hartlepool	108·6	0·0
Hull	96·9	3·1
Islington	0·0	100·0
Lewisham	54·6	45·4
Nottingham	76·4	23·6
Rochdale	21·4	78·6
Salford	80·7	19·3
Sunderland	12·5	87·5
Tower Hamlets	35·0	65·0
Wandsworth	31·5	68·5
Wirral	56·0	44·0
Wolverhampton	50·3	49·7

In addition, each of these projects has access to further funds in 1993-94 from a central pool of £500,000 which has been set aside to assist the development locally of continuing structures for the maintenance of multi-agency crime prevention work.

Immigration

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of individuals who are given work permits are eventually given leave to remain indefinitely.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 2 February 1993]: In recent years, the number of acceptances for settlement after four years employment with a work permit has represented around 12 to 14 per cent. of the total number of non-trainee work permits (both for long and short-term employment), issued four years previously.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Benefits Agency's decision not to pay income support to the Woolwich constituent national insurance No. PW130335D following the decision by the social security appeal tribunal on 28 October 1992.

Mr. Burt: I understand that Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency has already replied directly to the hon. Member, advising that the independent adjudication officer intends to appeal to the commissioner about his constituent's case.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures estimating, on the same basis as estimates made in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", the cost of a split retirement scheme in which the basic pension is payable at age 60 years and SERPS at age 65 years assuming an alignment of contracting-out terms with the new pension ages, giving figures for (a) 2015, (b) 20205, (c) 2035 and (d) 2045.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table.

Year	Cost (£ million)
2015	600
2025	600
2035	400

Notes:
1. Figures given at 1990-91 prices.
2. Information for 2045 not available.
3. Figures refer to net public sector borrowing requirement cost.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in (a) 1993-94, (b) 2015, (c) 2025, (d) 2035 and (e) 2045 of abolishing national insurance contributions for men aged 60 to 65 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost in income foregone to the national insurance fund of abolishing the employee national insurance contributions for men aged 60 to 65 would be as follows:

Year	Cost £ million
1993-94	600
2015	800
2025	900
2035	900
2045	800

Notes:
1. Figures given in 1993-94 prices.
2. 1·5 per cent real earnings growth assumed.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide details of the training provided to (a) benefits inquiry line staff and (b) adjudication officers working on disability living allowances and attendance allowance, including the dates and duration of training courses provided on these benefits; what percentage of the annual training budget for these benefits has already been spent; and what plans he has to increae this budget in real terms in the financial year 1993-94 and in subsequent years.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 18 January, col. 218-19]: The chief executive has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 4 February 1993.

I wrote to you on 18 January in reply to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the training provided to Benefits Enquiry Line (BEL) staff and adjudication officers working on Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance. In that letter I said that I would write to you again with details of the dates of the training for BEL staff.

Training courses for the BEL operators were held for the whole of April 1991 to June 1991, when BEL was initially set up. Courses were subsequently held on the following dates:

1 October 1991 to 31 October 1991 (condensed course)
11 November 1991 to 31 December 1991
1 July 1992 to 31 July 1992 (condensed course)
10 August 1992 to 18 September 1992
12 October 1992 to 20 November 1992
7 December 1992 to 8 January 1993 (condensed course)

Courses will continue to be held as new operators are taken on.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy of this will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the successful prosecutions undertaken at the Crown court for breaches of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 during 1992 and in 1993 to the most recent practicable date together with the sentences imposed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is presently only available for the period 1 January 1992 to 31 March 1992 and this is given in the following table. I will arrange for the information covering the period 1 April 1992 to 31 January 1993 to be made available once it has been checked for accuracy.

Successful prosecution action taken by HSE Inspectorates in the Crown Court, 1 January 1992 to 31 March 1992

Company	Crown Court	Date of hearing	Sentence £
Ashby Demolition	Knightsbridge	2 January 1992	7,500
Sansoms (Newport) Ltd.	Newport	6 February 1992	2,500
Caird Environmental Ltd.	Birmingham	23 March 1992	50,000
Fletchers Bakeries Ltd.	Sheffield	25 March 1992	10,000

Pit Closures

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the costs of redundancy payments to those who are likely to lose their jobs in related industries as a result of the intended pit closures announced on 13 October 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: It has not yet been determined which pits are to close, and it is therefore quite impossible to attribute consequential job losses to particular closures. It cannot be estimated what redundancy entitlements, if any, affected employees might have.

Overseas Qualifications

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish the conclusions of her Department's investigation into the recognition of overseas qualifications held by adults; when the conclusion will be implemented; and how they will be funded.

Mr. McLoughlin: The first diploma directive, 89/48/EEC, was implemented in the United Kingdom in April 1991, covers degree qualifications and is the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry. The second diploma directive, 92/51/EEC will cover those qualifications awarded on completion of higher education courses of up to three years duration and equivalents including national and Scottish vocational qualifications. Both directives will allow individuals to have their qualifications recognised when seeking employment in another member state, in an occupation regulated according to the directives.

The Employment Department has responsibility for the second diploma directive and represented the United Kingdom interest in negotiations towards its adoption by the European Council in June 1992. The directive is due to be implemented in member states' law by June 1994.

Work Permits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will list for the last five years the number of applications for work permits that are (a) categorised as tier 1 applications and (b) categorised as tier 2 applications;

(2) if she will list for the last five years (a) the number of tier 1 applicants for work permits and (b) the number of tier 2 applicants for work permits and the outcomes of these applications;

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. The two-tier procedure for making work permit applications was introduced in October 1991, together with changes in the way applications are recorded. The following table shows for the last five years the number of applications received for categories of permit now dealt with under the two-tier procedure.

	Number
1988	28,295
1989	34,784
1990	40,065
1991[1]	37,086
1992	32,789

[1] Changes made to the arrangements for recording applications.
Note: Over this period on-average approximately 50 per cent. of these applications were approved.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Right to Silence

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received about the law on the right to silence and the implications in child cruelty cases; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have received three letters from Members of Parliament and one from a member of the public regarding the right to silence and its implications in child cruelty cases.

As regards my views on the general issue, I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 18 January 1993, Official Report, column 4. I do not advocate creating special arrangements for specific categories of offences.

R. v. Uddin

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Attorney-General if he will set up a full inquiry into the accuracy of information that the Crown prosecution service gave to defence lawyers in the recent case of R. v. Uddin in the Inner London crown court.

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on the 27 January 1993 at column 708. A full explanation has been provided by the branch Crown prosecutor in a letter to solicitors acting on behalf of Mr. Uddin and I do not consider that any further inquiry is necessary. As I stated in my answer to the hon. Member for Leyton, a copy of the letter containing this explanation has been placed in the Library.

WALES

Education

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings he or his departmental officials had recently with representatives of county councils in Wales to discuss the current and projected levels of educational provision managed by councils in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance (WCCLGF) and its settlement working group (SWG) are the appropriate fora for discussions with local authorities on local government finance issues. I chaired meetings of WCCLGF on 26 November and 12 January. My officials met officers from local authorities at a meeting of SWG on 21 December.

Disability (Schools)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of schools in each area in Wales have been adapted for the use of disabled pupils and teachers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not held centrally. Local education authorities are responsible for providing facilities for disabled pupils and teachers at their schools.

Homelessness

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of people made homeless in Wales in each of 1990, 1991 and 1992; and what estimate has been made of the percentage in each case made homeless as a result of mortgage repossessions.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is available for those persons accepted as homeless by local authorities and is provided in the following table:

	Persons accepted as homeless
	Total	From action by mortgagee Per cent.
1990	19,675	16
1991	24,025	23
[1]1992	18,021	17

Education Funding

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from and what meetings he has held with the parent-teacher associations of Wales about the levels of financial provision for education in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received one representation from a parent-teacher association about levels of financial provision for education in Wales. I have received no request for meetings.

Wind Farms

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish further planning guidelines to authorities on the subject of wind farms in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Following public consultation, the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment issued a planning policy guidance note on renewable energy on 3 February 1993.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received on the level of the hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from Welsh Members of Parliament, the Welsh farming organisations and individual farmers in respect of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in Wales. I have also recently met representatives from the Welsh farming unions to discuss the matter.

Housing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of Tai Cymru regarding its decision on the designation of development status housing associations operating in (a) neighbourhood renewal areas and (b) the west of Cardiff;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairman of Tai Cymru regarding guidelines for the minimum size and number of housing associations with a development role operating in inner city neighbourhood renewal areas.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These are matters for the board of Housing for Wales.

Dolgellau to Bala Road

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the improvements to the Drws-y-Nant section of the Dolgellau to Bala road are to be commenced; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Design work on this scheme is progressing with the intention of commencing the work in 1994 subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the availability of finance.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made in his Department to implement the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Within Wales, these regulations apply to the small number of employers whose business undertakings might conceivably come within their scope, and to the county councils as part of their emergency planning responsibilities. The Welsh Office has no direct responsibility for their implementation but the Department will be one of the organisations consulted by the county councils under section 4(3) of the regulations.

Goosanders and Cormorants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy not to issue any licences for the culling of goosanders and cormorants in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. Under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 licences may be granted by the Department to kill these birds in order to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Further Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the colleges of further and higher education in Wales indicating the capacity limit figures for each college and actual numbers of (a) full-time and (b) part-time students during each of the last three academic years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information is not held centrally on the student capacity of colleges. The number of students at colleges of further and higher education is shown in the table.

Milk (Sulphur-35)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how often his Department conducts sampling of the sulphur-35 radioactive content of bulk milk samples near the Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear plants.

Mr. David Hunt: The food science division of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food co-ordinates the monitoring for sulphur-35 activity in milk samples from around Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear power stations on behalf of my Department. Milk samples are collected weekly from certain local farms and are bulk tested every quarter.

Monitoring results show that levels found as a result of discharges from Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear power stations are well within international and national guidelines.

This particular monitoring forms part of a comprehensive programme for monitoring radioactivity levels in food and agricultural products in England and Wales. The results are published annually in the "Terrestrial Radioactivity Monitoring Programme" (TRAMP) reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

One-stop Shops

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Reort, c. 99, if he will give the names of the members of the enterprise and business support working group; when they started work; and when he estimates they will produce an interim report on one-stop shops for business and technology information.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The names of the members are:

Mr. B. Adcock, Council of Welsh Districts
Mr. J. Driscoll, Coopers, Lybrand Deloitte
Mr. P. Fortune, Wales Enterprise
Mr. A. Fretter, Assembly of Welsh Counties
Mr. R. Geldard, Federation of Welsh Chambers of Commerce
Mr. G. Jackson, Development Board for Rural Wales
Ms. B. Pold, Computer Advisory Services
Mr. E. Roberts, Assembly of Welsh Counties
Mr. M. Robinson, National Westminster Bank Plc
Mr. P. Sheldon, South Glamorgan TEC
Mr. M. Thomas, Welsh Development Agency
Mr. J. Troth, North East Wales TEC
Mr. A. Williams, Mid Glamorgan TEC
Mr. T. Withnall, Dependable Packs Ltd.

The Group is chaired by Mr. J. F. Craig, a deputy secretary at the Welsh Office. In addition the following officials of my Department attended the meetings: Mr. C. L. Jones, Mr. M. J. Clancy, Mr. D. T. Richards, Dr. R. J. Loveland.

The group has been asked to produce its report by May 1993.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, c. 99, when the Welsh Office received the request for financial assistance from the Welsh Economic Research Unit.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A request from the South East Wales Economic Forum was first received on 15 May 1992.

Business and Technology Information

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, c. 99, on business and technology information, if he will specify which are the five colleges for which technology audits are being carried out, and which are the three colleges being assisted via the EC STRIDE programme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Technology audits are being carried out in the University of Wales colleges of Aberystwyth, Cardiff, Swansea and North Wales, and also in the University of Glamorgan.

The Carmarthenshire college of technology and art; the North East Wales institute of higher education; and the University of Glamorgan have been offered assistance via the EC STRIDE programme.

Health Line Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 2 February how many calls there have been since 30 November 1992 on Health Line Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Between 30 November 1992 and 29 January 1993 a total of 211 telephone calls were received by Health Line Wales.

Wilprint Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of his departmental printing budget was awarded to the Wilprint Group in the years 1990 to 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The proportion of the departmental printing budget awarded to the Wilprint Group was:

1. Central Printing Budget:
   1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991: All work placed via HMSO
   1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992: 1·2 per cent. of work placed with Wilprint

2. Publicity Budgets (including design and delivery)
   1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991: 10·8 per cent. of work placed with Wilprint
   1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992: 2·3 per cent. of work placed with Wilprint

3. Programme Budgets
   The information requested could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Press Releases

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to issue departmental press releases by electronic mail.

Mr. David Hunt: None, but the matter is kept under review.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each local education authority for each of the last three years the number of appeals made against statements of special educational needs; and what is the estimated cost of running the system in each local education authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information is not held centrally on the number of appeals against the provision in a statement of special educational needs which went before a local appeals committee nor of the costs of running the system in each local education authority. However, the number of appeals against statements to my right hon. Friend are shown as follows:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Armenia

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the recent appeal by the President of Armenia for international emergency aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom gave £450,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at the end of 1992 for their emergency relief work in Armenia and Nagorno-Karabakh. We also contribute through the European Community; Armenia's 38 mecu (£26·4 million) share of the EC's 1·25 becu loan to the FSU for humanitarian needs is currently being drawn down.

The major problem at the moment is getting supplies into Armenia, and we have been working with our partners to overcome these difficulties. Following the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 1 February, an urgent assessment is being undertaken and we have expressed the view that it should concentrate particularly on the political and logistical problems of delivering supplies. The Commission also confirmed its readiness to use part of its emergency humanitarian aid reserve (circa 10 mecu (£7 million) in 1993) for Armenia if needed. Officials of the EC's technical assistance programme, who are in Armenia, are assessing food needs.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the supply of food and medical aid from the European Community to Armenia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 4 February 1993]: Last winter Armenia received a share of the Community's 250 mecu (£175 million) humanitarian aid grant for the whole of the former Soviet Union. Additionally, an EC loan facility to the value of 38 mecu (£26·4 million) is available to Armenia as a whole, of which the Armenian Government have allocated 36 mecu (£25 million) for food stuffs and 2 mecu (£1·4 million) for medical supplies. The bulk of the supplies have not yet arrived owing to the problems of transportation through neighbouring states.

We have been working with our partners to try to overcome these problems. Following the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 1 February, an urgent assessment is being carried out and we have expressed the view that it should concentrate particularly on the political and logistical problems of delivering supplies. The Commission also confirmed its readiness to use part of its emergency humanitarian aid reserve (circa 10 mecu (£7 million) in 1993) for Armenia if necessary.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the European Community is providing to the care and treatment of Armenian and Azeri refugees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 4 February 1993]: Last year the Community gave 2 mecu (£1·4 million) of emergency humanitarian aid specifically to refugees from Nagorno-Karabakh. The EC has also made available a 38 mecu (£26·4 million) loan facility for humanitarian purposes to Armenia as a whole.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the amount of financial aid given to Sri Lanka in each of the last five years; what specific projects this aid was given for; and where in Sri Lanka these projects were to be developed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The amount of aid given to Sri Lanka in each of the last five years is as follows:

Third World (Financial Reforms)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the International Monetary Fund and World bank to ensure that the poorest people in third world debtor countries are protected when internationally required financial reforms are implemented.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have supported the efforts the International Monetary Fund and the World bank are making to help their member Governments ensure that economic adjustment programmes take account of the needs of the poorest members of society, both through the overall pattern of public expenditure and through specific projects and programmes.

Third World (Military Expenditure)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to urge the multilateral, financial and aid institutions to require the reduction of military expenditure as a condition of third world countries receiving loans; and to what extent this is a criterion when deciding on allocations of United Kingdom overseas aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is for each country to assess and provide for its own legitimate defence needs. However, the United Kingdom actively supports the increased emphasis placed by the International Monetary Fund and the World bank in recent years on the implications for economic and social development of the composition of public expenditure. In the recently completed negotiations on the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA), donors urged that in reviews of public expenditure, IDA management should address the question of whether adequate levels of development expenditures in the budgets of recipient countries are being crowded-out by the weight of large or rising non-development expenditures, including military expenditure, and to take up this question with the Government concerned wherever appropriate.

We have made it clear that we consider the setting of an appropriate level of military expenditure to be an important part of good government. It is therefore one of the factors we take into account when deciding our allocations of bilateral aid.

United Nations (Disaster Assistance)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to encourage the United Nations to co-ordinate international assistance to areas affected by famine and natural disasters more effectively.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We encourage greater co-ordination of international humanitarian assistance in all fora of the United Nations, including the governing bodies of the various agencies concerned. Specifically we initiated the proposal which led to General Assembly resolution 46/182 and the formation of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs in April 1992. We will continue to support the efforts of that Department to ensure good co-ordination, more effective responses to the victims' needs and better value for money.

PRIME MINISTER

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Prime Minister what public appointments he has made since 1 November 1992; and what information he has on the political affiliations of those appointed.

The Prime Minister: Appointments (including reappointments) made by me between 1 November 1992 and 31 January 1993 have been as follows:

	Number
Trustees of museums and galleries	10
Civil service appointments	2
Members of pay review bodies	2
Other appointments	6

Any political affiliations those appointed may have are not relevant to their appointments.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a table indicating the rate in pounds sterling of the uniform business rate in (a) Wales and (b) England in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The uniform rate was not in operation before 1 April 1990. The information for the last three years is given in the folowing table.

Year	Wales	England
1990-91	0·368	0·348
1991-92	0·408	0·386
1992-93	0·425	0·402

The poundage for Wales and England were set in 1990 at a level which ensured that the overall yield from ratepayers remained at the 1989-90 level in real terms. Since 1990 poundages have been uprated in line with the annual increase in the retail prices index as at September in the preceding year.

Honours System

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to make an announcement on his review of the honours system.

The Prime Minister: An announcement will be made shortly.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions Her Majesty's Government have used Crown privilege in criminal cases in the last three years.

The Prime Minister: Crown privilege is now described by the courts as public interest immunity. No central records of such claims are maintained. On 1 February 1993 at column 18 my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General provided particulars of cases conducted by the prosecuting authorities superintended by him, in which claims had been supported by ministerial certificates.

Southwark (Visits)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister how many official visits he has made to Southwark since he became Prime Minister; and if he will give details of the date and purpose of each visit.

The Prime Minister: I visited Guy's hospital on 24 July 1991.

DEFENCE

Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the role and function of building A1.1 at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston;

(2) if he will make a statement on the role and function of building A41 at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: Although we have provided information on the new A90 complex it is not our general policy to disclose the role and function of individual buildings at atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about the death of Walter Mallin from injuries received at Aldermaston; what operations were being carried out at the time of the accident; in what part of the site the accident took place; and how many other persons were injured in this accident;

(2) if he will make a statement about the death of Terence Bishop from injuries received at Aldermaston; what operations were being carried out at the time of the accident; in what part of the site the accident took place; and how many other persons were injured in this accident;

(3) if he will make a statement about the death of Norman Adams from injuries received at Aldermaston; what operations were being carried out at the time of the accident; in what part of the site the accident took place; and how many other persons were injured in this accident;

(4) if he will make a statement about the death of Douglas Whittaker from injuries received at Aldermaston; what operations were being carried out at the time of the accident; in what part of the site the accident took place; and how many other persons were injured in this accident;

(5) if he will make a statement about the death of Peter Allen from injuries received at Aldermaston; what operations were being carried out at the time of the accident; in what part of the site the accident took place; and how many other persons were injured in this accident;

(6) how many workers have died from injuries sustained in accidents at Aldermaston, listing for each worker his or her name and the date of the accident.

Mr. Aitken: AWE records show that a total of seven fatalities among the AWE work force or contractors employed by AWE have occurred as a result of incidents on the Aldermaston site. The dates of each incident and the names of those who died are listed:

11 December 1957; Mr. D. Whittaker died as a result of injuries received when he was sprayed with molten metal which was accidentally released from the equipment on which he was working in a research area of AWE. Five other workers were injured.

26 February 1959; Mr. T. Bishop and Mr. J. W. Malin sustained fatal injuries as a result of the accidental detonation of a conventional high explosive which they were transporting on an electric vehicle in an explosives area. One other worker was injured.

13 May 1959; Mr. N. Adams, an employee of a firm contracted to do work associated with the construction of pressure vessels, died as a result of being struck by a metal plate which blew out from the high pressure line on which he was working. The accident occurred in a nuclear reactor building prior to commissioning. There were no others injured.

14 September 1973; Mr. T. Hughes, a contractor's employee, died as a result of a fall from a boilerhouse chimney stack which he was inspecting. There were no others injured.

23 July 1979; Mr. P. Allen died as a result of an explosive charge detonating close to or on his left temple. The incident occurred within the explosives area, but in a room which was not authorised for explosives detonation. The inquest recorded an open verdict. There were no others injured.

25 November 1986; Mr. R. Preston, a contractor employed as a night watchman, died as a result of injuries received in a road accident on the Aldermaston site. There were no others injured.

In addition, a contractor was killed on 2 November 1985 as a result of falling from scaffolding whilst carrying out construction work on a new boilerhouse at Aldermaston. The boilerhouse was not, however, under AWE management control at the time and therefore the incident is not a matter for detailed AWE recording.

The hon. Member will be aware that my Department did not assume responsibility for AWE, Aldermaston until 1973 and that the earlier accidents occurred when it was within the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. We sympathise with all of the bereaved families who have had to live through these sad experiences, and I am sure that no useful purpose would be served by making further statements on individual cases.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the date of the start of construction of building A1.1 at AWE Aldermaston; on what date construction was completed; on what date the building was declared operational; and how long he expects the building to remain operational.

Mr. Aitken: Construction of building A1.1 began in the second half of 1950 and was completed in 1951. It became operational in 1952, and is expected to remain operational for some years.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which buildings at AWE Aldermaston will be removed from operational service once (a) the A90 complex and (b) the A91 complex are declared operational.

Mr. Aitken: A90 and A91 are planned to replace current facilities which will then be taken out of use and decommissioned.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost, so far, in constructon and commissioning of (a) the A90 complex and (b) the A91 complex at AWE Aldermaston; and what is the estimated expenditure required for completion.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to disclose cost details of individual buildings at Aldermaston.

Arms Transfers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) of 22 January,

Official Report, column 464, when he intends to place in the Library the British contribution to the United Nations register of conventional arms transfers.

Mr. Aitken: The British contribution to the United Nations register of conventional arms transfers will be placed in the Library as soon after its compilation as possible. It is due to be forwarded to the United Nations by 30 April 1993.

Amphibious Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in making a decision on orders for the proposed amphibious helicopter carrier.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 15 January to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) at col. 840.

Portland Naval Base

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisations and individuals responded to his consultation on the future of Portland naval base; what was the consensus of the responses to the consultation; when he expects to make a final decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Responses have been received from the Ministry of Defence industrial and non-industrial trade unions, the Portland Joint Trade Union Action Committee, Dorset county council, Weymouth and Portland borough council and Plymouth city council. My hon. Friends the Members for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) and for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) have made valuable contributions to the consultation process. In addition there have been a number of letters from members of the public. These responses are currently being considered and I expect to make a decision shortly.

Redundancies

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate for the number of service redundancies that have, and are likely to arise, as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" cuts and of the overall cost of redundancy payments involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, 5,969 service personnel have been selected for redundancy as a result of the restructuring of our armed forces. In addition, approximately 6,400 army personnel are due to be notified later this month of their selection for redundancy. For these 12,369 personnel, the estimated cost of redundancy payments—special capital payments—is £363 million All three services are considering carefully what further redunancies will be necessary.

Drugs Offences

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel have been discharged from the services as a result of drugs-related offences in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of personnel dismissed from the services following court martial or summary proceedings for offences of importing, supplying or possessing drugs since 1986, the earliest date for which the information is available, is:

	Number
1986	58
1987	55
1988	59
1989	68
1990	116
1991	160
1992	—[1]

[1] Not yet available.

In addition, the numbers of Army and Royal Air Force personnel administratively discharged for drug offences, since 1982, are as follows:

	Number
1982-83	36
1983-84	31
1984-85	57
1985-86	49
1986-87	13
1987-88	24
1988-89	9
1989-90	31
1990-91	38
1991-92	82
1992-93	[1]287

[1] to 4 February

The Royal Navy record administrative discharges as dismissed only and do not refer to the specific offence.

The armed forces have a comprehensive drug abuse prevention programme and the measures taken to combat drug abuse are regularly reviewed.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those nuclear submarines that have been removed from service and are awaiting disposal, indicating the location of each submarine, and stating whether (a) the reactor fuel and (b) the reactor core of each submarine has been removed.

Mr. Aitken: The reactor core and the fuel are one and the same thing. The information requested is as follows:

HM Submarines	Location	Reactor core status
Dreadnought	Rosyth Naval Base	Removed
Warspite	Devonport Naval Base	Removed
Churchill	Rosyth Naval Base	Removed
Conqueror	Devonport Naval Base	Removed
Courageous	Devonport Dockyard	Undergoing removal
Swiftsure	Rosyth Naval Base	Removed
Revenge	Rosyth Dockyard	On board awaiting removal

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC Butter and Meat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those categories of people eligible to qualify for EC butter and EC meat.

Mr. Curry: People in receipt of income support, family credit, disability working allowance, the homeless and destitute and those living in welfare hostels are eligible to receive food under the arrangements for implementing the EC surplus food scheme in the United Kingdom.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet a delegation of pensioners from Stoke on Trent, North to discuss eligibility for EC butter and meat.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans to do so. I am aware of the views expressed by pensioners. To extend the scheme to all pensioners would spread the available food so thinly that it would be of little benefit to anyone.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the amount of (a) butter and (b) meat which will be destroyed because of non-take up by those deemed eligible.

Mr. Curry: None. The Intervention Board Executive Agency arranges reallocation among other designated organisations for distribution to eligible categories of people.

Agricultural Land (Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area of agricultural land in (i) Lancashire and (ii) Pendle is currently subject to set-aside under the CAP; and what is the annual cost.

Mr. Curry: The latest available figures show that 243 hectares of agricultural land are currently set aside under the five-year scheme in Lancashire. Payments to farmers, in respect of this land are estimated at £50,000 this financial year. Similar information for Pendle is not readily available. Information on land set aside under the new arable area payments scheme will not be available until growers have to declare the area later this year.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Curry: A provisional list of regulations which impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Hill Sheep Farmers

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has made of the number of hill sheep farmers in Cumbria who will suffer a reduction in income due to the change in hill livestock compensatory allowances; and what plans he has to compensate such farmers;

(2) if he will make a statement on the impact of the reduction of hill livestock compensatory allowances on hill sheep farmers in Cumbria.

Mr. Curry: About 2,300 farmers in Cumbria will be affected by the reduction in sheep headage payment rates under the 1993 hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme. The resultant loss of income by the hill sheep sector in Cumbria will be more than offset by significant increases in the 1992 ewe premium, the final instalment of which will be paid in the spring.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average level of income for hill sheep farmers in Cumbria for each year since 1978-79; and what was the percentage change each year.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available.

HEALTH

Contraceptives

173. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of contraceptive pills, coils, diaphragms and spermicides available free on prescription and the number of prescriptions for each named item given by general practitioners in the last year.

Dr. Mawhinney: To release data on the number of prescriptions issued by general practitioners for each named drug would indicate the trading position, and could affect the business, of the manufacturers concerned. It is therefore treated as commercial in confidence. However, the numbers of prescriptions issued in England in 1991 for contraceptives as indicated in the "British National Formulary" chapter 7.3 was 7·7 million. The figures for 1992 are not yet available. The remaining information requested is in the table.

Schizophrenia

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many sufferers form schizophrenia were detained (a) under section 2, (b) under section 3, (c) under section 37 and (d) under sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in each year since 1984;

(2) how many sufferers from schizophrenia were detained under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in each year since 1984, in each regional health authority area;

(3) how many (a) non-offender and (b) mentally disordered offender patients detained in hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983 in each year since 1984 were suffering from schizophrenia.

Mr. Yeo: The available information is given in the tables.

These data are not the number of patients as a person may be admitted more than once during the year.

Information on a comparable basis is not held centrally for later years.

Hospitals (Activity Returns)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 690, what was the total number of hospitals making activity returns in England in 1992, distinguishing between (a) the NHS, (b) joint users and contractuals and (c) independent acute.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 9 December 1992 at column 690. In addition to the 1,578 national health service sites making activity returns in 1990-91 there were 217 independent hospitals which had an operating theatre and could therefore be classified as acute. There are no sites classified as joint users and contractuals making returns to the Department.

The information requested is not available after 1990-91.

Ethnic Communities

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys have been undertaken by her Department as to the health service provision available to elderly members of ethnic communities in (a) London and (b) England; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: District health authorities are responsible for assessing the health care needs of their resident populations, including their ethnic communities, and for ensuring that appropriate services are available. Monitoring access to and use of services by members of ethnic groups will be introduced nationally from April and will provide health authorities with information which they can use in planning services.

The Age Concern Institute of Gerontology has recently completed two studies of health and social services provision for ethnic elders, covering a wide range of localities, including some in London. This work was funded by the Department and the reports are currently being considered.

Chiropodists and Physiotherapists

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider introducing legislation to apply the principles of the Osteopaths Bill to state-registered chiropodists and physiotherapists.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to do so. The state-registered chiropody and physiotherapy professions are already regulated under the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider the preparation of a factsheet on chiropody in the health service "Careers" series.

Mr. Sackville: The need for national health service careers information for a range of occupational groups is regularly reviewed.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which her Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Sackville: A provisional list of regulations which impact on business has recently been collated. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Down's Syndrome

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which health authorities provide (a) full funding and (b) partial funding for pregnant women to undergo the Bart's test for Down's syndrome;

(2) how many pregnant women have had the Bart's test for Down's syndrome in the last two years; and if she will break down the figure by age group;

(3) what information she has on the availability of the Bart's test through (a) non-trust hospitals and (b) self-governing trust hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines her Department has issued on the use or sale of the Bart's test for pregnant women for Down's syndrome.

Mr. Sackville: The provision of advice to clinicians and practitioners on medical procedures is a matter for the professional bodies concerned. No specific guidance has been issued by the Department in respect of biochemical screening for Down's syndrome.

RU486

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement detailing the progress which has so far been made in identifying the source of the pills of the abortifacient drug RU486 which were imported into the United States of America from the United Kingdom, and about which she has received correspondence from the hon. Member for Congleton.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 4 November 1992 at col. 291.

Population Statistics

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures expressed as a figure and as a percentage of relevant population.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 October 1992 at col. 476.

Neither the mid-1992 population estimates nor the 1993 electorate figure is yet available. The Registrar General expects to publish the mid-1992 population estimates in October 1993.

Dentistry

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to assist those patients having difficulty registering for NHS dental services in west Cumbria.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of family health services authorities (FHSAs) to ensure that national health service dental treatment remains accessible locally. FHSAs can apply for permission to employ salaried dentists if they consider it necessary to maintain services. Cumbria FHSA is able to assist those people who need help obtaining NHS dental treatment.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices in west Cumbria are now accepting new NHS patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Cumbria family health services authority, Mr. J. R. Wills, for details.

Registered Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what distinction is made in departmental guidance to local authorities between adult family placement schemes and small homes due to be registered when the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 comes into force on 1 April.

Mr. Yeo: The Department's guidance to local authorities on the implementation of the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 highlights a number of factors which need to be considered in the case of adult placement schemes. These include the fact that registration is not required unless both board and personal care are provided; the possibility of modifying usual registration procedures where checks have already been made on people belonging to a scheme; the scope for local authorities to waive fees; and the fact that placement scheme organisers may be able to help carers fulfil their duties under the Act.

Nurse to Bed Ratio

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the nurse to bed ratio for national health service hospitals, annually, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 29 January 1993]: The information requested is in the table.

Years	Nurse to bed ratio
1979	0·98
1980	1·03
1981	1·10
1982	1·13
1983	1·15

NATIONAL FINANCE

GDP

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) of 26 January, Official Report, column 662, if he will give the actual figures underlying the figures listed for shares of total gross domestic product.

Mr. Nelson: The information for the years 1981 to 1991 is published in table 2·1 of the 1992 edition of the "United Kingdom National Accounts", the Central Statistical Office Blue Book, which is available in the House of Commons Library. Figures for earlier years are held on the CSO database which can be accessed by the Library.

Fuel Differentials

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is (a) the price differential and (b) the tax differential between unleaded petrol and diesel fuel in each EC member state.

Sir John Cope: The information is as follows, based on data for December 1992 using exchange rates as at 1 October 1992—the date used by the European Commission as the reference for exchange rates.

Member State	Price (pence per litre)			Duty (pence per litre)		VAT rate per cent	Tax differential duty plus consequential VAT (pence per litre)

[1] Luxembourg levies VAT at a rate of 15 per cent for diesel and 6 per cent for unleaded petrol.
[2] Now 15 per cent.

Bank Notes

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the size, layout and printing on the £5, £10, and £20 bank notes to make it easier for visually impaired people to distinguish one value note from another.

Mr. Nelson: The design of Bank of England notes is the responsibility of the bank. The bank advises that it keeps the designs of its notes under constant review. In designing the new series of notes the bank consulted widely with representatives of the blind and partially-sighted. Differential sizes were retained for each denomination to help the blind, and a distinctive bold-coloured symbol was included on the front of each note specifically to help the partially sighted.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the practice in respect of treating a limited partnership and the general partner of the limited partnership as one entity for VAT purposes.

Sir John Cope: Where there is one general partner in a limited partnership he is the taxable person for VAT purposes. However, one VAT registration can cover the activities of that limited partnership in addition to any other activities undertaken by the general partner as an individual.

Newcastle Tax Offices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the staff at the Newcastle tax offices was on 1 April 1991, 1 April 1992 and at the most recent available date; and what further changes in numbers of staff are proposed.

Mr. Dorrell: The staff at Newcastle tax offices was as follows:

	1 April 1991	1 April 1992	Now
Newcastle 1 Tax District	137	146	145
Newcastle 2 Tax District	25	25	24
Newcastle 3 Tax District	64	68	64

	1 April 1991	1 April 1992	Now
Newcastle 4 Tax District	74	83	78
Newcastle Collection	53	53	48
Totals	353	375	359

There will be a reduction of approximately four full-time units in the staff allocated to Newcastle 1 tax district following the removal of trust work from that office in March 1993.

The Inland Revenue is reviewing the organisation and structure of its Newcastle tax offices with the aim of increasing the quality of service to taxpayers and the efficiency of the operations. No decisions have yet been made about the structure and staff numbers needed.

Automatic Weapons (Import)

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps Customs and Excise take to prevent the import of automatic weapons from France by individuals arriving at Dover.

Sir John Cope: Though all systematic customs controls on intra-Community traffic ended on 1 January 1993, customs continue to make targeted anti-smuggling checks to prevent the importation of illicit goods, including weapons which represent a serious threat to society.

Television (Expenditure)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has concerning the average weekly household expenditure on (a) cable television, satellite television, video recordings, and other broadcast media and (b) the BBC licence fee.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The information required is published annually at current prices in "Family Spending", the report on the family expenditure survey. The most recently published report is that of 1991. Copies of this volume are available from the House of Commons Library.

Gilt Issues

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will publish on a monthly basis for the period 1965 to date (a) net gilt issuance, (b) gross gilt issuance and (c) outstanding sterling denominated national debt.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 29 January 1993]: Figures on gilt issuance appear in table 3 of the Bank of England "Quarterly Bulletin" for issues published before March 1976 and in table 8 of the Bank of England "Quarterly Bulletin" for issues published between March 1976 and November 1991 inclusive. Figures for 1991 onwards may be found in table 3.5 of Financial Statistics, published by the Central Statistical Office. Figures are published on a quarterly rather than a monthly basis.

Detailed information about the nominal national debt (the total liabilities of the National Loans Fund) is compiled annually. The sterling national debt is published in the February issue of "Financial Statistics" (table S1). The supplementary statements to the Consolidated Fund and the National Loans Fund, published each December as a House of Commons Paper also show the oustanding national debt and its components as at 31 March each year.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the amount of capital receipts likely to be released in the smallest area for which figures are available which covers the Hyndburn constituency during the calendar year 1993 and the financial year 1993-94 from the sale of council-owned dwellings under the right-to-buy legislation.

Mr. Baldry: At the time of last year's autumn statement it was estimated on the basis of local authorities estimate for 1992-93 that around £2¾ billion of capital receipts would be raised by local authorities in the United Kingdom in 1993-94, mainly from the sale of council houses. No estimates are available for individual local authorities or regions of the United Kingdom, nor for the 1993 calendar year.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the structure of the means test for home improvement grants; what is the grant withdrawal rate for a couple, a couple with one child, and a couple with two children assuming receipt of community charge benefit and/or family credit; and how many such grants were awarded in each nation and region in the last complete year.

Mr. Baldry: The details of the means test for house renovation grants are set out in the Housing Renovation etc, Grants (Reduction of Grant) Regulations 1990 (SI 1990 No 1189) as amended. These regulations are summarised in the Department's circulars 12/90 and 5/91 on house renovation grants. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

The level of grant awarded depends in the financial circumstances of each applicant and the cost of the proposed works. The Department does not collect information on the grant withdrawal rates for the groups listed.

Information on renovation grants awarded is available only for England as a whole but data are available for numbers of grants paid in each English region. The figures are as follows:

	Number
Grants Awarded
England	38,141
Grants Paid
England	18,731
By Region
North	1,954
Yorkshire and Humberside	2,027
East Midlands	2,038
East Anglia	908
Greater London	1,608
South East	2,976
South West	1,828
West Midlands	2,227
North West	3,165

The renovation grant systems in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the appropriate Secretary of State.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that mandatory grants for house improvement should remain mandatory.

Mr. Baldry: A number of changes to the house renovation grant system are being considered for inclusion in the consultation paper announced by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing and Planning on 12 January at columns 707-8. Nothing is being ruled out at this stage.

Housing Associations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses or flats have been bought in each local authority area under the grant to housing associations announced in the autumn statement for the purchase of properties; how many of these properties in each area have been newly built; what has been the average price paid in each authority area for newly built properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have today deposited in the Library a table providing the information requested.

I am delighted that purchases have already been approved in over 90 per cent. of the local areas in England, which will take over 13,000 properties off the market. The proportion of purchases approved from builders and developers so far has been around 60 per cent., as these deals are typically the quickest to complete. Last week only a third of approvals were for such purchases, and the great majority of the remainder were for purchases from private individuals. The Housing Corporation estimate that housing associations will be able to buy some 17,000 properties in England by the end of March as a result of these measures, and another 3,500 purchases will be made possible through cash grants to tenants. Taken together with recent substantial falls in interest rates, this package should certainly have a very positive impact on the housing market.

Council Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the booklet "How to Appeal", in relation to council tax, will be made available to local authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is planned to publish the booklet later this month, when regulations introducing the appeals system have been made. The final text of the booklet was sent to authorities on 2 February.

Ecolabels

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he regards the testing of cosmetics on laboratory animals as a relevant criterion in assessing fitness of a product for an ecolabel award by the Ecolabelling Board;

(2) what guidelines have been provided to member states by the European Commission in relation to the scope for life cycle assessment studies for ecolable criteria studies; and if he will place the guidelines in the Library;

(3) what is the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board's target for the range of market share to be obtained by products receiving an ecolabel; if the board intends to issue an ecolabel to at least one brand of each product; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that an adequate objective standard is met in all cases where an ecolabel is issued.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board has been established to administer and promote the European Community ecolabelling scheme nationally and has responsibility for dealing with the operational aspects of the scheme. I have therefore asked the board to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has had from Body Shop in relation to the standards of assessment established by the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board; what response has been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has received no representations from the Body Shop on this matter. I understand, however, that the Body Shop has raised the matter with the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board and I have asked the board to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board to be financially self-sufficient; and what impact on the timetable for self-sufficiency he expects the rate of awarding labels will have.

Mr. Maclean: One of the aims of the UK Ecolabelling Board is that it should ultimately become self-financing. My Department has asked the board to prepare a plan for covering its costs in the sixth year of operation. This target will be reviewed annually following discussions of the board's corporate plan and in the light of the success of the scheme.

Urban and Inner City Policies

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give a breakdown of the £10 billion referred to in the oral statement by the Home Secretary of 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 167, as having being spent by the Government on urban and inner city policies since 1985-86;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the £4 billion a year referred to in the oral statement by the Home Secretary of 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 167, as being spent by the Government on projects in the inner cities.

Mr. Robin Squire: Government support for urban regeneration of £10 billion is based on the total of expenditure for 1988-89 (£3 billion), 1989-90 (over £3 billion) and 1990-91 (£4 billion).

The £4 billion a year total divides broadly into support of £1 billion under each of the following heads:

Targeted urban group of programmes
Housing programmes
Employment, Trade and Industry programmes
Other Action for Cities programmes, and Scotland and Wales

Refrigerators (Disposal)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the provision for safe disposal of refrigerators in each local authority.

Mr. Maclean: Local waste regulation authorities are required to produce plans detailing the arrangements needed to treat, recycle or dispose of controlled waste likely to arise or be situated in their areas. Waste disposal and treatment facilities may be provided by waste disposal authorities or by the private sector; regulation of such facilities is the responsibility of waste regulation authorities.

Where refrigerators are controlled waste, compliance with the duty of care requires the waste producer to take all reasonable steps to ensure that the waste goes only to legally authorised destinations. These would be sites that are licensed to treat or dispose of this type of waste, or specially exempt from the requirement to be licensed, or operated by a local authority under a resolution under section 11 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Local authorities may bid for supplementary credit approvals for the provision of facilities for recycling chlorofluorocarbons. £15 million is available for recycling facilities in 1993-94.

Waste Management

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue an updated version of waste management paper No. 25.

Mr. Maclean: A revised version of waste management paper No. 25 is in preparation and it is hoped a public consultation draft will be issued shortly for comment.

Owner Occupiers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to assist overcrowded owner-occupiers trapped by (a) negative equity and (b) low income.

Mr. Baldry: Reductions in average mortgage rates mean that they are now lower than at any time since March 1969, and mortgage repayments as a proportion of earnings are at their lowest since 1978. Mobility is also made easier by the raising of the ceiling on unsecured loans by building societies, and by measures in hand to allow the security of the new property to be substituted for that of the old without the loss of mortgage interest tax relief.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he received prior to his decision to overrule the Boundary Commission recommendation in relation to Leyton and Redbridge; from whom they were received; which favoured an overruling of the Boundary Commission; and on what dates they were received.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State has accepted all the proposals of the Local Government Boundary Commission for the boundary between Leyton and Redbridge, with one minor modification to the proposal for Hollybush hill, thereby moving the boundary from the centre to the western edge of the road to ease highway maintenance. This modification was made in the light of a letter of 17 June 1992 from the chief executive of the London borough of Waltham Forest.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy as President of the European Environment Council to place the issue of the environmental risk of transporting plutonium from Europe to Japan on the agenda for the European Community-Japan bilateral meeting on environmental co-operation to be held on 3 and 4 December in Brussels.

Mr. Maclean: [holding answer 24 November 1992]: No. The meeting on 3 and 4 December is one between officials of the Commission of the European Communities and Japan. Shipments of plutonium take place only in compliance with stringent internationally agreed standards.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now list by how much each local authority benefits from the area cost adjustment in 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 2 February 1993]: I have placed in the Library a table showing all those authorities which benefit from the area cost adjustment, and by how much, within standard spending assessments for 1993-94. All other authorities receive an area cost adjustment of zero.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outcome of the consultation on the local government finance settlement for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 28 January, column 854]: I am today placing in the Library and the Vote Office a further table showing the standard spending assessment and grant entitlement of each local authority. These reflect small revisions to the tax base of some authorities as a result of the treatment of boundary changes.

TRANSPORT

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost to the Exchequer of the decision not to proceed with the construction of the Birmingham northern relief road as a publicly funded road; and if he will break down the cost into its component parts.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following the decision to seek private finance for the Birmingham northern relief road, the Department reimbursed some £38,000 to individuals and organisations who had incurred costs in objecting to proposals for a publicly-funded road. In addition about £1,000 was paid to engineering consultants who arranged storage of data on the public scheme. The total cost of the public scheme taken to the inquiry was estimated at about £310 million at 1990 prices. The decision not to proceed with a publicly-funded BNRR has therefore produced a substantial saving to the Exchequer.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate at current prices the total identifiable expenditure incurred by Her Majesty's Government in relation to the proposed Birmingham northern relief road (a) as a public road and (b) as a toll road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: About £11·4 million was spent by my Department in working up proposals for a publicly-financed Birmingham northern relief road, mainly on consultants' fees, purchase of land and objectors' costs. The subsequent costs to date of selecting a private sector promoter, negotiating a concession agreement, purchasing land and contributing to the preparation of draft orders are currently estimated at about £6·3 million. Both figures are at outturn prices: figures at current prices could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Some costs of land purchase are recoverable.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the public inquiry into the Birmingham northern relief road will start; what is the name of the inspector appointed to carry out that report; what is the length of time allocated to carry out the inquiry; and what is the venue involved.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I cannot answer any of these questions because the draft orders for the Birmingham northern relief road are yet to be published. Upon publication my Department will take the necessary steps, along with the planning inspectorate, to make arrangements for the public inquiry.

ATOLs

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the steps taken by the Civil Aviation Authority to ensure that all passengers whose travel is arranged through package operators are adequately protected through the holding of air transport organiser's licences.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority examines each ATOL licence holder annually to ensure that it is managed by persons who are fit to hold a licence and have a financial bond as a guarantee of security against financial failure. Should the bond prove inadequate in the event of failure, the Air Travel Trust, which is managed by Civil Aviation Authority officials, is designed to meet claims which would properly have been payable from the bond.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify the types of bookings on scheduled air services which require the organiser to hold an air transport organiser's licence.

Mr. Norris: Under The Civil Aviation (Air Travel Organisers' Licensing (ATOL)) Regulations 1972, as amended, an ATOL licence is required where a person selling air seats on scheduled flights is acting as a principal in the sale to the public rather than acting as the agent of the airline. An airline does not need an ATOL in order to advertise or sell tickets for carriage on its own aircraft.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what protection exists for clients of packaged air travel operators who do not hold an air transport operator's licence and do not satisfy EC regulations.

Mr. Norris: Most air tour operators are required by The Civil Aviation (Air Travel Organisers' Licensing) Regulations to hold an ATOL. ATOL holders are required to show their ATOL number in all their brochures, leaflets and advertisements.

There are some air tour operators without an ATOL who may currently have alternative bonding arrangements with the Association of British Travel Agents (ABTA), pending the completion of requirements for an ATOL.

Hereford Bypass

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a detailed break-down of the Q2/1992 prices for construction of the A49-465 Hereford bypass using the (a) published route and (b) western alternative route 1C; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, a public inquiry into the proposals for the Hereford bypass was held between March and September 1991 and in May 1992. The inspector heard evidence on the relative merits of the Department's published route and objectors' alternative route 1C and much of what the hon. Gentleman now asks, with many other issues, was discussed, in principle, at that time.

The inspector has submitted his report to the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport. They are presently considering his recommendations and will announce their decision soon. It would not be right for me to comment further on the merits of the eastern and western routes.

Shipping

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all British ships registered by his Department on 23 January, 1 April 1992, 1 April 1991 and 1 April 1990; and if he will, in each case, indicate whether the vessel is (a) an oil tanker, (b) a passenger/freight ferry and (c) carrying out North sea offshore operations.

Mr. Norris: I have placed in the Library lists of vessels on the United Kingdom, Channel Islands and Isle of Man registers on the nearest available dates.

Road Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to the answer of the President of the Board of Trade of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 472, what assessment has been made of the effect on road safety of requiring motor advertisers to include within advertisements a safety warning that speed kills.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No such assessment has been made and I am not convinced that there would be any substantial safety benefit in imposing this requirement on motor advertisers.

All vehicle advertisements are assessed by the Advertising Standards Authority against its code of practice and those which are regarded as placing an undue emphasis on speed are already banned. I am encouraged to see that there is an increasing compliance with the code and that numerous manufacturers are now choosing to advertise their vehicles on safety grounds. This indicates a welcome increase in market demand for safer vehicles.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, how many representations he has had since 1 January 1992 about (a) the change in the size in the British merchant fleet, (b) the change in the number and quality of vessels flying flags of convenience sailing in United Kingdom waters, (c) the change in the level of the United Kingdom's invisible earnings from shipping and (d) the ability of the merchant fleet to support the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We have received a number of representations from interested parties covering these and other shipping issues.

A detailed breakdown of meetings, discussions and correspondence on these issues cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Cash Limits

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits and running costs limit for his Department for 1992-93.

Mr. MacGregor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limits in class VII will be changed as follows:

Class and vote	Current cash limit	Changes	Revised cash limit
VII, 1	2,124,259,000	[1]—6,314,000	2,117,945,000
2	215,205,000	[12]—2,300,000	212,905,000
4	171,769,000	[23]—785,000	170,984,000
5	439,851,000	[4]900,000	440,751,000

[1] Transfers of £3,000,000 to the Department of Environment, Class VIII, Vote 3 for the Bristol Spine Road and of £4,814,000 to Class VII, Vote 3 to cover payments to British Rail pension funds in respect of pre-1975 obligations. These are offset by a transfer from Class VII, Vote 2 of £1,500,000 for certain running costs.
[2] A transfer of £800,000 to Class VII, Vote 4 in respect of certain running costs.
[3] A reduction of £1,585,000 in respect of demand financing.
[4] An increase of £900,000 in grant to the Humber Bridge Board.

My Department's gross running costs limit has been decreased by £1,585,000 from £393,458,000 to £391,873,000 as a consequence of (c) above.

Where increases are involved these will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Westminster Pier

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is part of his transport strategy for London that commuters on the River Thames should have access to Westminster pier; and how many people he estimates would benefit from this.

Mr. Norris: I understand from the Port of London Authority, which owns Westminster pier, that the pier is used to capacity in the summer months by existing contractual licence holders, who are primarily geared to meeting the needs of tourists, and that in its present form the pier could not safely accommodate extra commuter services of the type, for instance, operated by Riverbus.

The River Thames working group, which I established recently, will be studying the general issue of commuter access to the river, including the potential benefits which improved access could bring.

Air Navigation Licences

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct the Civil Aviation Authority not to issue any further licences under the Air Navigation Order 1989, or under section 38 of the Airports Act 1986, and to withdraw any licences already issued but not yet operated upon, in circumstances where no public announcement of the issue of the licence was made;

(2) if he will instruct the Civil Aviation Authority not to issue any further licences under the Air Navigation Order 1989, or under section 38 of the Airport Act 1986, and to withdraw any licences already issued but not yet operated upon, in circustances where the operation of the licence could affect the operations of an airport within a 30-mile radius;

(3) if he will instruct the Civil Aviation Authority not to issue any further licences under the Air Navigation Order 1989, or under section 38 of the Airports Act 1986, and to withdraw any licences alrady issued but not yet operated upon, in circumstances where the putative licence operator has previously given assurances that no such operation would be commenced and the operations under the order will cause financial damage to private citizens;

(4) if he will instruct the Civil Aviation Authority not to issue any further licenses under the Air Navigation Order 1989, or under section 38 of the Airports Act 1986, and to withdraw any licences already issued but not yet operated upon, in circumstances where no planned permission has been obtained;

(5) if he will instruct the Civil Aviation Authority not to issue any further licences under the Air Navigation Order 1989, or under section 38 of the Airports Act 1986, and to withdraw any licences already issued but not yet operated upon, in circumstances where the operation of the licence would affect the value of an airport within a 30-mile radius.

Mr. Norris: Licensing of airfields under the Air Navigation Order, and the grant of applications under section 38 of the Airports Act are matters for the Civil Aviation Authority. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has no powers to direct the Civil Aviation Authority in these circumstances.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct the Civil Aviation Authority not to issue any further licences under the Air Navigation Order 1989, or under section 38 of the Airports Act 1986, and to withdraw any licences already issued but not yet operated upon, in circumstances where there would be potential environmental damage, and a full environmental impact assessment has not been carried out and publicly discussed.

Mr. Norris: No. The circumstances under which a full environmental impact assessment would be required for an airport/aerodrome development, are set out in the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Israel

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the appropriate steps that will be taken to ensure that Israel complies with United Nations Security Council resolution 799 on the Palestinian deportees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have repeatedly urged the Israeli Government to comply with Security Council resolution 799. Their decision to allow 100 of the deportees to return is a useful step in the right direction. We hope they will build on this. We are stressing to all concerned that the top priority is to resume the peace process.

Muslims, India

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence has been gathered from the Foreign Office posts in India about violence towards Muslims on account of their religion; and what discussions have taken place with the Government of India about this problem.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received regular reports from our posts in India about the recent communal violence there. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed the situation with the Indian Prime Minister during his visit to India in January. We have condemned the violence and support the principles of Indian secular democracy and protection for religious minorities.

Cyprus

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Turkish Government about progress made by the United Nations on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary discussed Cyprus with their Turkish counterparts in London on 23 November. The Secretary of State has since kept in close touch via our ambassador in Ankara. He has made clear to the Turks that we expect them to encourage the Turkish Cypriots to work actively towards a settlement.

Birmingham Summit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 563, how the costs of the Birmingham summit were met.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The costs of the Birmingham summit were met from public funds.

UN Charter

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on adapting article 2(7) of the United Nations charter to take into account humanitarian aspects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. Article 2(7) prohibits the United Nations from intervening in matters which are "essentially" within domestic jurisdiction. Article 55 requires the United Nations to promote human rights, which are now a matter of international concern. The prohibition in article 2(7) does not apply to enforcement measures under chapter VII.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken by officials at the post in Islamabad concerning applications by Shenaz Begum (DOB: 5:7:1979); Afsar Khan (DOB: 31:10:1980) and Shaira Begum (DOB: 5:7:1989) to join their father in the United Kingdom; when their applications were submitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British High Commission at Islamabad is not satisfied that Shenaz Begum, Afsar Khan and Shaira Begum are British citizens by descent from Mr. Mohammed Gham Ghani as claimed on their passport applications made in October 1991. This is because, according to Mr. Ghani's certificate of registration as a citizen of the United Kingdom and colonies, his wife's name is Zaitoon Jan. The children's mother Zartaj Bibi, claims that she is his first and only wife. The decision to withhold passport facilities from the children was communicated to Zartaj Bibi on 17 January 1993.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on an application to the post in Islamabad by Mrs. Janat Begum (Ref: B6038) to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The High Commission in Islamabad agreed on 3 February to issue entry clearance to Mrs. Janat Begum to join her husband in the United Kingdom. The entry clearance officer will write to Mrs. Begum, inviting her to call in to collect her visa.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on an application made at the post in Islamabad by Mr. Raja Ibrar Hussain, who was born on 8 November 1962, to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A decision was taken by the British High Commission in Islamabad on 15 November 1992 to refuse entry clearance to Mr. Raja Ibrar Hussain as the entry clearance officer was not satisfied, as he is required to be under the immigration rules, that Mr. Hussain was related to his wife as claimed; that the primary purpose of the marriage was not to gain entry to the United Kingdom; and that there was adequate support and accommodation available for Mr. Hussain in this country without recourse to public funds.

Iran

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have recently been made in international bodies over the continued human rights abuses in Iran.

Mr. Douglas-Hogg: The UN Secretary-General's special representative on human rights in Iran presented his latest report to the UN General Assembly in November. We and our EC partners co-sponsored the critical resolution reflecting his concerns, which was adopted on 18 December. The Edinburgh Council's conclusions on Iran at the EC summit in December made it clear that improvement in Iran's human rights record, among other factors, will be important in determining the extent to which relations with and confidence in Iran can be developed.

South Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of British personnel from South Korea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 18 January at column 50.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answers to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 18 January, Official Report, column 38, when he expects to introduce primary legislation on the chemical weapons convention; and which interested bodies he will consult on the implementation in the United Kingdom of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Sainsbury: Legislation to implement the United Kingdom's obligations under the chemical weapons convention will be introduced when the parliamentary timetable permits.

Consultation arrangements have not yet been finalised, but those to be consulted will include the Chemical Industries Association, the British Chemical Distributors and Traders Association, and the Confederation of British Industry.

Steel

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the Government of the United States of America concerning duties imposed by the United States department of commerce on imports of flat rolled steel from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: The provisional anti-dumping duties of 109·22 per cent. on British Steel exports of steel plate are unwarranted and wholly disproportionate.

The actions, brought by the highly protected US steel industry, will not help efforts to secure a much needed international settlement in the multilateral steel agreement negotiations.

The President of the Board of Trade has written to US Commerce Secretary Ron Brown urging him to focus on these matters at the earliest opportunity. The issue was raised at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 February.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recently imposed United States tariffs on steel imports.

Mr. Needham: The provisional anti-dumping duties of 109·22 per cent. on British Steel exports of steel plate are unwarranted and wholly disproportionate. They were in addition to the earlier countervailing duties imposed on United Kingdom exports of plate and bar. To penalise genuinely privatised companies which have not received subsidies for over six years is unfair and economically unsound.

The actions, brought by the highly protected US steel industry, will not help efforts to secure a much needed international settlement in the multilateral steel agreement negotiations.

The President of the Board of Trade has written to US Commerce Secretary Ron Brown urging him to focus on these matters at the earliest opportunity. The issue was raised at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 February when the actions were condemned as unacceptable.

International Trade Commission

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cases have been brought against United Kingdom-based companies, by United States companies, to the International Trade Commission in each of the last five calendar years; and what United Kingdom Government advice or assistance is available to companies faced with such hearings.

Mr. Needham: The table details, according to the best information readily available, the number of cases against United Kingdom companies with the US International Trade Commission.

The British embassy in Washington monitors the filing of complaints. My officials notify any United Kingdom companies affected by these quasi-legal investigations.

My department is not in a position to offer financial assistance for legal fees. But DTI and the British embassy do provide general advice and assistance to British companies on such matters as tactics and procedure and in anti-dumping cases are prepared to raise particular points with the Department of Commerce, in support of the European Community, if it appears that the US authorities are not operating their rules fairly. My Department is in any event directly involved in any countervailing duty cases as these involve questions of government subsidy.

Intangible Technology

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans Her Majesty's Government have to introduce legislation to control the export of intangible technology.

Mr. Needham: While current export controls apply only to technology in a tangible form, they in practice enable significant transfers of technology to be controlled.

The control of intangible technology raises very considerable practical difficulties and while the Government have no immediate plans to introduce such legislation, it is keeping the position under review.

Nature Conservation Bodies

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the role of statutory nature conservation bodies under the new arrangements for the out-of-round award of petroleum production licences.

Mr. Eggar: The role of statutory conservation bodies under the new arrangements for out-of-round awards of petroleum production licences is the same as their role in licencing rounds. It is our general and established policy, before offering blocks for licence in any part of the United Kingdom continental shelf, to consult relevant statutory and non-statutory bodies (including conservation bodies) in advance of any announcement and to attach licence conditions agreed with such bodies which reflects each block's sensitivities.

Petroleum Production Licences

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he consulted the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and other appropriate statutory conservation agencies before making his decision to award petroleum production licences for North sea blocks 39/1 and 39/2.

Mr. Eggar: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee and other appropriate statutory conservation agencies were consulted about blocks 39/1 and 39/2 in March, as part of the 14th round consultation process. At that time no out-of-round application had been received for these blocks and it was envisaged that they would be offered in the 14th round.

Biofuels

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his Department has analysed the potential of bio-diesel as a transport fuel in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry has today published through HMSO a review of the potential of bio-diesel as a transport fuel which was prepared by the energy technology support unit. The report assesses the economics of bio-diesel production and concludes that a subsidy of approximately 15p per litre would be required for bio-diesel to be commercially viable in the United Kingdom. It also considers the environmental implications of bio-diesel production and use. The review will inform those contemplating growing oil seed rape, investing in the conversion plant or using bio-diesel as a vehicle fuel. A copy of the report has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Coal Review

Mr. Beggs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements he has made for making the evidence submitted to his Department's coal review available to the public in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Eggar: Copies of the evidence to the review, other than commercially confidential material, have been placed in the following libraries, where members of the public may call, by appointment, to view it:

Edinburgh:
The Library, Scottish Office, St. Andrew's House, Edinburgh, EH1 3DH.
Cardiff:
The Library, Welsh Office, New Crown Buildings, Cathays Park, Cardiff, CF1 3NQ.
Belfast:

SCOTLAND

Car Crime

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reduce car crime in Scotland and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office launched a major advertising campaign aimed at reducing car crime in April 1992. Scottish police forces have taken complementary local initiatives. Recent statistics point to an overall reduction in car crime following the campaign.

Decisions on the priority to be given to car crime in the crime prevention programme for 1993-94 have yet to be taken.

Motorways

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway in Scotland are without central reservation crash barriers; and what percentage of the total mileage this represents.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are 285 km (178 miles) of motorway in Scotland of which, by the end of March 1993, approximately 32 km (20 miles) will be without central reserve safety fencing. This represents 11 per cent of the total length.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway in Scotland are unlit at night; and what percentage of the total mileage this represents.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Of a total of 178 miles of motorway in Scotland, 145 miles are unlit, which equates to approximately 81 per cent.

Health Boards (Revenue Allocation)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board their revenue allocation for 1992-93 and 1993-94, the percentage change for each health board between the two periods after allowing for inflation and the percentage variation from Scottish health authoritities resources equalisation parity for each health board for each period.

Mr. Stewart: Details of individual board revenue allocations for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are contained in the table.

Health Board	£ million Revenue Allocation 1992-93	[1]Distance from Parity (Under)/Over per cent. after 1992-93 Allocation	£ million Revenue Allocation 1993-94	[1]Distance from Parity (Under)/Over per cent. after 1993-94 Allocation	Percentage change between 1992-93 and 1993-94 after allowing for Inflation

Drug and Alcohol

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve aftercare facilities for drug users in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office has made available to health boards £2·4 million in the current financial year specifically for the support and provision of drug misuse services. Assistance is also given to local authorities through the urban programme for drug-related projects. The planning and development of services are primarily the responsibility of health boards and local authorities, in consultation with the voluntary sector and having regard to local circumstances.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers of notifications of drug addicts and the proportions of the communities in (a) Greenock, (b) Port Glasgow, (c) Paisley, (d) Strathclyde and (e) Scotland as a whole in each of the past three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 February 1993]: Information on addicts notified to the Home Office from Scotland is collected on a health board rather than town or regional basis. The table gives the number of notifications and the proportions of the population they represent in 1989, 1990 and 1991 for (a) Argyll and Clyde health board, within which Greenock, Port Glasgow and Paisley lie; (b) Strathclyde; and (c) Scotland. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions are to be made for residential care and treatment for drug and alcohol abuse and misuse under the new community care arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: [holding answer 4 February, 1993]: From 1 April 1993, under the NHS and Community Care Act 1990, local authorities will make provision within community care plans for people who misuse alcohol and drugs. They will be responsible for assessing the social needs of individual alcohol and drug misusers and arranging appropriate packages of care, including residential care provision. Residential services offer a number of different treatment approaches, and local authorities will need to ensure that individuals are referred to a service best suited to their needs. The Scottish Home and Health Department will shortly be issuing special guidance to local authorities, encouraging them to give special attention to the needs of alcohol and drug misusers within community care.

Breast Screening

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the preliminary results of the breast screening programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: A report on the Scottish breast screening programme will be published towards the end of March 1993 in conjunction with similar reports for England and Wales and I shall place a copy in the Library of the House.

The data of the Scottish report will relate to 1991-92 which was the first full year of operation. Preliminary results indicate that attendance was 72 per cent. of women invited and that the rate of cancers detected was 6·3 per 1,000 women screened.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of long-term unemployed people in each travel-to-work area in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The information is available on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information.

Investment

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total value of investment and the names of organisations or companies invested in by each local enterprise company in Scotland and by Highland Enterprise and Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. Stewart: Investments made by local enterprise companies are a matter for these bodies, subject to their respective delegated authorities. The most significant investments made by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, in terms of value and proportion of capital held, are reported in the bodies' published annual accounts, copies of which are in the Library. I am arranging for the chairmen of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member with details of the remainder of their investments.

Right to Buy

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the right of tenants to buy houses owned by par value co-ops including their eligibility for the relevant discounts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are two types of par value co-operatives: non-fully mutual co-operatives, and fully mutual co-operatives. Secure tenants of local authorities who transfer to a non-fully mutual co-operative have a preserved right to buy and are eligible to purchase their houses at a discount in accordance with section 128 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988. Fully mutual co-operative tenants do not have a statutory right to buy. Their rights are defined by the tenancy agreements drawn up between them and the co-operatives.

Dentistry

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many patients have been de-registered by their dentists for NHS treatment in (a) each Scottish health board and (b) Argyll and Bute since (i) 1979, (ii) 1 October 1990 and (iii) 8 July 1992.

Mr. Stewart: Formal arrangements for patients to be registered with a specific dentist were introduced under the new contract for general dental services on 1 October 1990. No information about de-registration is therefore available prior to October 1990. Information about de-registrations since 1 October 1990 supplied by health boards for their area is contained in the table. Information for individual local government districts is not available.

Lambs

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has of infringements of the law regarding the time limit on the castration of lambs in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I have no reports of infringements relating to the castration of lambs.

This practice is regulated by the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act 1912 which prohibits castration without the use of an anaesthetic from the age of three months.

The code of recommendations for the welfare of sheep stipulates that castration must be carried out only in strict accordance with the law and by a competent trained operator. Where anaesthetic is used, the provisions of the Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966, as amended, restrict operators to veterinary surgeons only.

The Farm Animal Welfare Council recently reconsidered the general practice of castration of farm animals. On its recommendation the Government are funding a research programme which is now in progress.

Legal Aid

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average legal aid cost per case at (a) the sheriff court in a solemn procedure trial and (b) a High Court trial, where (i) there is one accused and (ii) there is more than one accused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1991-92 the average legal aid cost of a case in (a) a Sheriff court solemn procedure trail was £2,049 and in (b) a High Court trial was £5,716.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average legal aid cost of a High Court of Justiciary trial day.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1991-92 the average legal aid cost of a case in a High Court trial was £5,716.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average legal aid cost per case at (a) the sheriff court in a solemn procedure trial and (b) a High Court trial applicable to (i) the advocate involved and (ii) the solicitor involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For 1991-92 the information is as follows:

Average cost per case (£)

	Counsel	Solicitor
Sheriff Court—solemn trial	182	1,702
High Court—trial	1,960	3,358

Note: In addition various outlays such as payments to witnesses, may be payable.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average legal aid cost per case at the sheriff court in summary trials.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1991-92 the average cost per case was £798.

Records Office

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future organisation of the Scottish Records Office.

Mr. Lang: I have decided that, under the next steps initiative, the Scottish Record Office should be considered for executive agency status.

MV Braer

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the aftermath of the grounding of the MV Braer.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 February 1993]: Follow-up action to the Shetland oilspill received the highest priority. The Government's bridging fund for businesses facing economic hardship is now in place; the health survey of people living in the vicinity has started; the remit and chairman, Professor William Ritchie, of the ecological steering group have been announced and the remaining membership will be shortly; and the fishery exclusion zone has been extended. The Government will continue to ensure that all necessary steps are taken.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) business frauds, (b) cheque, credit and cash card frauds, (c) thefts from companies, (d) thefts from employees, (e) offences of shoplifting, (f) offences of vandalism against business and (g) assaults at the work place were committed (i) in Scotland and (ii) in each police force area in 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The only available information collected centrally is given in the table.

Number of Cases of theft by shoplifting recorded by the police in Scotland, 1991

Police Force	Number
Northern	905
Grampian	2,329
Tayside	2,918
Fife	1,064
Lothian and Borders	5,750
Central	1,723
Strathclyde	14,862
Dumfries and Galloway	547
Scotland	30,098

Disability

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held recently with the Council of Scottish Local Authorities concerning the new arrangements for the provision of personal assistance services to people who would previously have been eligible for financial assistance from the independent living fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: [holding answer 4 February, 1993]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State most recently met representatives of the convention's social work committee on 2 October 1992 when a number of community care issues were discussed. This meeting preceded the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People on 24 November about the future of the independent living fund and its successor body arrangements to be introduced from 1 April.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland subsequently announced on 2 December that in 1993-94 £2·8 million was being added to both Government supported expenditure and to aggregate exchequer finance to cover costs to local authorities arising out of their responsibilities under the new arrangements.

Disadvantaged Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many producers are entitled to hill livestock compensatory allowances in the Highlands region; and how many of those are located in severely disadvantaged areas.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 February, 1993]: In Highland region 3,989 producers were paid hill livestock compensatory allowances under the 1992 scheme. Of these 3,955 were located in severely disadvantaged areas.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish the specification for the post for each category of judicial appointment, outlining the selection criteria.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The criteria employed by the Lord Chancellor are set out in the latest edition of the booklet "Judicial Appointments: the Lord Chancellor's Policies and Procedures", which was published in November 1990. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Judiciary

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to reform the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has confidence in the judiciary in its present form. However, he is always ready to bring forward proposals for reform which he considers to be desirable in the public interest. For example, the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Bill [Lords], at present before this House, provides among other things for reduction of the retirement age of judges to 70.

Law Officers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what requirements there are that (a) the Lord Chancellor, (b) the Attorney-General and (c) the Solicitor-General be legally qualified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor must be a person able to discharge duties as the President of the Supreme Court of Judicature—that is, the Court of Appeal, the High Court and the Crown court—and also as the presiding chairman of the House of Lords in its judicial capacity and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General must be legally qualified in order that they may perform their general duties; and are members of the Bar in order that they may represent the Crown in each of the Queen's courts in England and Wales and in Northern Ireland.

Barristers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to make available to barristers who are unsuccessful in an application for silk the grounds on which he decided not to put their names forward.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Competition for appointment as Queen's counsel is intense. It is inevitable that many able applicants will be disappointed. However, it is always open to any unsuccessful applicant to see a senior official of the Lord Chancellor's Department to discuss his or her application and the view the Lord Chancellor took in that case. Each year a number of practitioners avail themselves of this facility.

Court Lists

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what instruction he has given to magistrates courts regarding the imposition of charges for court lists; if he will list the level of such charges in all courts in England and Wales: and whether these are levied across the board or apply only to specific groups.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None; however, in 1989 the Home Office advised magistrates courts that the news media should be asked to meet the costs of providing copies of court papers. The charges, and the circumstances in which they may be sought, will vary from court to court and details could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Legal Aid

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what number and proportion of cases granted legal aid in each of the past five years are those where the involvement of a solicitor could have been avoided because other agencies could have helped free of charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available. However, advice agencies are able to provide a high standard of advice on a wide range of matters, such as housing and employment difficulties, about which solicitors are also consulted.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Iranian authorities to stop executions, with particular reference to cases where defendants claim that they have not had a fair trial.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Together with EC partners we made representations to the Iranian authorities in May 1992 about the high number of executions in Iran and specifically the summary execution of a member of the Baha'i community. In October we made representations about the death sentences passed on two other Baha'is following summary trials and the right of defendants to a lawyer. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs also raised these latest cases with the Iranian Foreign Minister at the United Nations General Assembly in September. They are now being reviewed by the Iranian authorities. International concern at the high number of executions and the absence of guarantees of due legal process in Iran was highlighted in the resolution on human rights in Iran, which we and our EC partners co-sponsored, and which was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 18 December.

Council of Europe

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government were represented at the fourth part of the forty-fourth ordinary session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe from 1 to 5 February.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs attended the Parliamentary Session on 2 February, in his capacity as chairman of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, to deliver the statutory report of that body and to answer questions from the parliamentarians. He took the opportunity to make a short statement in his national capacity.

Bosnia

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the relative contributions of countries providing military support towards the United Nations humanitarian aid effort in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following troops have deployed to the United Nations protection force in Bosnia to offer protective support for convoys of humanitarian aid and released detainees:

	Number
United Kingdom	2,500
France	1,800
Canada	1,200
Spain	750
Netherlands	580
Denmark	150
Belgium	120
Norway	35
Portugal	12

Council of Ministers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals or decisions have been made for the presidency or secretariat of each Council of Ministers of the European Community to issue an official minute of each of their meetings, to include a reflection of the views expressed, the decisions reached and the record of votes cast.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Council secretariat already issues press releases after each Council meeting providing brief details of the discussion and of any agreements reached. Following a decision by the Edinburgh European Council, the Council secretariat will include in this press release the record of the vote, including explanations of the vote where delegations request these, whenever a formal vote is taken in Council.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding his policy towards the renewal of the United Nations mandate in Croatia and Bosnia Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We consider renewal of the mandate of the United Nations protection force in Croatia to be crucial to the peace process and will pursue it in the Security Council when it falls due. Initial discussions are already under way.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the numbers of displaced persons currently in Bosnia Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimates that there are some 740,000 displaced people in Bosnia Herzegovina; of these 480,000 are in central Bosnia and western Herzegovina.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the prevalence of war crimes in Croatia and Bosnia Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are appalled by the numerous allegations that violations of international humanitarian law have taken and continue to take place in the territory of former Yugoslavia. The United Nations Security Council has established a commission of experts to examine and analyse information on such breaches submitted by states.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom staff are employed in Her Majesty's embassies in (a) Zagreb and (b) Belgrade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 8 February, there were seven United Kingdom-based staff at the British embassy in Zagreb and 28 United Kingdom-based staff at the British embassy in Belgrade.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the supply of arms and munitions to Serbian irregulars, militia and Chetniks currently operating in Bosnia Herzegovina and Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of allegations in the media concerning the supply of arms to these groups. We have no specific information to corroborate these reports.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of current United Nations sanctions on Serbia and Montenegro.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The economic effects of sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro are becoming increasingly evident. In concert with our EC and other partners, we are offering assistance to the Danube's riparian states in order to prevent the recurrence of the recent breaches of the embargo. On 4 February, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe appointed an executive sanctions co-ordinator, who will be responsible for ensuring that sanctions are applied as rigorously as possible.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has of the number of people killed through artillery fire in the current conflict in Croatia and Bosnia Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are unable to provide definitive statistics about casualties caused by artillery fire in Croatia and Bosnia. Reports of numbers killed differ radically according to source.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Southern Africa

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest assessment by Her Majesty's Government of the capacity of the Governments of the south African region adequately to feed all their people.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The prospects are that this year's harvest will be much better than last year's, but it is still too early to make an accurate assessment.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements exist within his Department to assess need for aid to Sierra Leone and monitor its use.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Officials of ODA's west and north Africa department, in conjunction with the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and with the high commission at Freetown, make regular assessments of economic and social conditions in Sierra Leone, and thus of the need for aid. British aid activities in that country are monitored by the high commission and by officials from the Overseas Development Administration.

Lithuania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new applications he is considering for the use of the know-how fund in Lithuania.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund is considering four new projects which will benefit the agriculture and energy sectors and small business creation. These are valued at approximately £366,000. Other smaller projects are also in the pipeline, but have not yet been costed.

UNESCO

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect on Overseas Development Administration programmes in the first and second years of a return by the United Kingdom to UNESCO.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No decision has been taken to rejoin UNESCO.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research Councils

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the total identifiable expenditure (a) of all and (b) of each of the research councils (i) has been spent in England and in Wales in each of the last five years and (ii) is intended to be spent in England and Wales in 1993-94.

Mr. Robert Jackson: In 1991-92 the research councils collectively spent approximately 72 per cent. of their grant in aid in England, and approximately 4 per cent. in Wales. The respective percentage figures for the individual Research Councils were as follows:

	Per cent.
Agricultural and Food Research Council	84 and 7
Economic and Social Research Council	81 and 2
Medical Research Council	82 and 1
Natural Environment Research Council	75 and 15
Science and Engineering Research Council	67 and 2

Figures for earlier and subsequent years are not available.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what procedures are employed in the selection of members of (a) research councils, (b) the boards of research councils and (c) the funding committees of research councils; and what independent mechanism within his Department exists to ensure the fairness of the process and the distribution of members among the various institutions active in each field of research;

(2) what procedures are employed to ensure that membership of research councils, the boards of those councils and the funding committees of those councils does not give any undue advantage in the allocation of funds to institutions to which the members belong.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Members of the research councils are appointed after wide consultation with interested Departments and the councils themselves. The Government aim to secure an appropriate balance of academic and industrial expertise and experience.

The composition of their committees is a matter for the councils themselves, as is the allocation of funds to institutions. Each council operates a system of peer review, aimed at securing the highest scientific quality in competition for the funds available.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

"Red Hot Dutch"

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many complaints he has received from those members of the public who have paid for decoders which enable them to receive a satellite programme called "Red Hot Dutch".

Mr. Brooke: I have received some 450 letters from members of the public about the satellite television channel "Red Hot Dutch", now renamed "Red Hot Television". Most of those who have written appear not to be subscribers to the channel; but it is not possible to be sure of that.

BBC Income

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the total income of the BBC in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how much and what percentage of that income was derived from the licence fee in each of those years.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Year	Net licence fee income £ million	Total income £ million	Licence fee income as a percentage of total income Per cent.
1982-83	683·2	694·4	98·39
1983-84	702·0	718·9	97·65
1984-85	723·1	736·0	98·25

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

35. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Attorney-General if he will outline the proposed restructuring of the Crown prosecution service.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to my earlier reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns).

37. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the policy relating to criminal prosecutions by the Crown prosecution service.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service applies the principles set out in the "Code for Crown Prosecutors". A copy of the code is in the Library.

Lambeth Council

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration the Serious Fraud Office has given to the issues arising out of the recent report under section 5 of the Local Government Act 1988 on the conduct of some departments of Lambeth council.

The Attorney-General: The director of the Serious Fraud Office has been in contact with the Audit Commission in connection with this report and has asked the Metropolitan police to keep him informed of matters brought to their attention regarding Lambeth council so that he can decide what, if any, action by the Serious Fraud Office might be appropriate.

TRANSPORT

Disabled People (Public Transport)

12. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with local authorities regarding access to public transport for the disabled.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is in close and regular touch with local authorities on a wide range of issues to improve services for the disabled including the introduction of low-floor buses, design standards for light rapid transit systems and accessible taxis.

Coach Safety

13. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has recently had with the European Commission on the subject of coach safety.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has regular communication with the European Commission on directives covering various aspects of vehicle safety, including those affecting coach safety.

Rail Privatisation

14. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what support he has received from the United Kingdom freight industry for his proposals to privatise British Rail freight.

Mr. MacGregor: Our discussions suggest that the great majority of existing rail freight users support our proposals to privatise British Rail's freight businesses. Like us, they believe that they offer the best hope of providing a rail freight industry for the future which will be competitive and respond to customers' needs.

15. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications of his legislative proposals for British Rail upon the lines north and west of Inverness.

Mr. Freeman: As my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State announced on Second Reading of the Railways Bill, ScotRail, which includes the services north and west of Inverness, will be one of the first groups of services to be prepared by BR for franchising.

18. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to ensure that the present standards of safety currently held by British Rail are imposed upon new private sector operators.

Mr. Freeman: We have accepted all the Health and Safety Commission's recommendations for a safety regime which will ensure that high safety standards on the railways are maintained after privatisation. The recommendations have also been endorsed by the chairman of BR.

23. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the future of rail services in south Wales after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in this House on 2 February in the debate on the Second Reading of the Railways Bill.

27. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the subsidy required to maintain the Southampton-Eastbourne railway service after the franchising of this route.

Mr. Freeman: I have made no such estimate. In the process of franchising British Rail passenger services, subsidy requirements will in future be market tested. It has not yet been decided whether this service would be franchised on its own or as part of a larger grouping.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps will be taken to ensure that a privatised British Rail will cater adequately for disabled passengers.

Mr. Freeman: Under our proposals for railway privatisation, all railway operators will be required by the terms of their operating licences to have regard to the needs of passengers with mobility handicaps. The regulator will be responsible for issuing and checking compliance with railway licences and he will have a specific statutory duty to look after the interests of disabled passengers.

Regional Airports

16. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to develop regional airports within the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: We believe that future development at regional airports is best undertaken in the private sector. That is why we are encouraging their privatisation. We are also providing more opportunities for air services from regional airports through our liberalisation policies.

Traffic Cameras

17. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will extend the use of red light and speed cameras in London.

Mr. Norris: It is for the Metropolitan police and the City of London police to decide on the deployment of red light and speed cameras in their respective areas of London.

Jubilee Line

19. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest position on the plans to extend the Jubilee line.

Mr. MacGregor: Negotiations are continuing with the administrators of Olympia and York Canary Wharf on the terms of an agreement on which they are to contribute towards the cost of the Jubilee line extension. We have made provision for the construction of the extension subject to a satisfactory agreement being reached.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make statement on the current outturn of expenditure on the Jubilee line development relative to budget.

Mr. Norris: Through London Underground Ltd., the Government have spent nearly £160 million preparing to build the Jubilee line extension. The latest approved estimate of the total cost of the extension is £1·5 billion at June 1990 prices—something over £1·8 billion cash.

Railway Closures

20. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to keep in place the present procedures which must be undertaken before a railway is closed.

Mr. Freeman: The Railways Bill sets out new closure procedures no less rigorous than the present ones. The current arrangements will continue to apply to lines and stations which are not currently operated by British Rail.

Buses (Urban Areas)

21. Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has taken to encourage the use of buses in urban areas.

Mr. Freeman: I recently announced the allocation of over £15 million to local authorities in England for bus priority measures in 1993-94. This represents a substantial increase on the sum originally budgeted for. Some £4 million was allocated in 1992-93 for similar schemes.

Bypasses

22. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses he plans to start building in the next financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We plan to start 19 new bypasses, 83 miles in length, in the next financial year.

In addition to these schemes, there are 22 other national schemes planned to start in England next year. Although not described as bypasses, most of these relieve one or more communities of through traffic.

My Department is also funding the construction of 24 local bypasses and relief roads through the transport supplementary grant and borrowing approvals announced in December.

London Transport (Investment)

24. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the level of London Transport's investment in 1993-94.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about London Transport's investment plans for 1993-94 and subsequent years. These have included letters from hon. Members, local councillors and members of the public.

M1 (Lighting)

25. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to extend the lighting on the M1 motorway.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is proposed to extend the lighting on the M1 between junctions 40 and 42 and to light the M1/M62 interchange. Further lighting is expected on sections of the M1 as they are widened to four lanes.

Waterloo-Exeter Line

26. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when British Rail expects to introduce the proposed new trains on the Waterloo-Exeter line.

Mr. Freeman: The first new train for the Waterloo-Exeter line was delivered to British Rail on 23 January. It will enter passenger service shortly. The remaining trains should be in service by July.

Public Transport (London)

28. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of his Department's budget for London is spent on public transport.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not have a separate budget for expenditure in London. But, in the current financial year, London Transport and Network SouthEast are expected to invest in total about three times the amount which the Department will be spending on the construction and capital maintenance of roads in London.

London Underground

29. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has received from London Transport on capital investment for the modernisation of London Underground.

Mr. Norris: My Department regularly receives investment proposals from London Underground. Spending plans for 1993-94 and following years have not yet been finalised.

The Minch

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Minch is designated by Her Majesty's Government as an internal sea or an internationally recognised navigable strait; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: By virtue of the United Kingdom Territorial Water Order in Council 1964 the area known as the Minches is within the internal waters of the United Kingdom.

By virtue of article 5 of the UN convention on the territorial sea and contiguous zone 1958, ratified by the United Kingdom on 14 March 1960 there exists a right of innocent passage through that area.

Rail Freight

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the results of his review of section 8 grants.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's speech during the Second Reading of the Railways Bill on 2 February, Official Report, columns 164-65.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase the section 8 grant budget.

Mr. Freeman: This will depend on demand and other calls on public expenditure. The budget is kept under review and to date no schemes have been turned down through lack of funds. The need for additional funding will be considered in the light of the proposals put forward by my right hon. Friend on 2 February, Official Report, columns 164-65.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list what information he has of individual items of traffic transferred from rail freight distribution and train load freight to roads since July 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter between British Rail and its customers.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the operational and infrastructure cost savings he expects for the rail freight sector following privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: Privatisation and open access to the network will transform rail freight from a public sector monopoly into a competitive privately owned industry. Operators will need to improve constantly to stay ahead of their competitors. They will be free from public sector constraints on finance and will be able to benefit directly from the cost and service improvements they make.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the report by Mercer Management Consultants into the future of the rail freight industry.

Mr. Freeman: No. The report will contain commercially confidential information. We will be publishing proposals on the future of British Rail's freight businesses after we have studied Mercer's report.

MV Braer

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his written answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 1, what evidence the marine accident investigation branch has now taken or plans to take in respect of the progress of the steps that were being taken by the owners of the MV Braer at the time of its accident to renew the insurance cover of the vessel.

Mr. Norris: The conduct of the inquiry into the Braer accident is a matter for the inspector, and I cannot discuss the evidence which is being obtained in the course of the investigation.

M66–A664 (Report)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report of the public inquiry into the M66 junction A664; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Soon.

Eastgate Cement Works

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Government funding has been spent on providing freight facilities at Eastgate cement works since 1975 to help transfer freight from road to rail.

Mr. Freeman: There has been no Government assistance towards facilities at Blue Circle's Eastgate cement works. However, a 50 per cent. freight facilities grant under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 was awarded in January 1984 towards the provision of modern wagons, for the movement of cement from Eastgate to northern destinations, and for work at two of the reception depots. The award led to a total grant payment of £728,000. In common with all awards the traffic has continued to be monitored annually and the results have shown that the original grant has been more than justified.

Passengers Charter

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will amend the passengers charter so as to require British Rail to offer a full discount on fares on InterCity trains which arrive at their destination one and half hours or more late.

Mr. Freeman: Under the passengers charter, a full refund is available if the train a passenger planned to catch is cancelled or delayed, and the journey is not made. In addition, British Rail offer vouchers of 20 per cent. or more of the fare paid if a journey, or any leg of it, is delayed by more than an hour. Where delays are particularly serious, the compensation offered can be as much as 100 per cent. I believe that these arrangements provide reasonable recompense to those who are seriously inconvenienced.

Shipping Routes

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are being made for the submission of evidence to Lord Donaldson's inquiry into possible measures to protect United Kingdom coastlines from pollution by merchant shipping.

Mr. MacGregor: Lord Donaldson held a preliminary hearing at Church house, Westminster on 29 January at which he invited written submissions to the inquiry to reach the secretariat by the end of February. Lord Donaldson emphasised that although his Inquiry was set up in reaction to the Braer accident, he will not be investigating that accident. It is already the subject of investigations by the marine accident investigation branch and the Liberian Government. Nor does his inquiry cover the ecological effects of the Braer oil spill, which will be assessed by the ecological steering group appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Lord Donaldson said he would consider any issues within his terms of reference which appear to him to be relevant but he expects to concentrate on finding answers to four questions:

What incidents could occur in the future which could cause damage to the coastline of the United Kingdom? The inquiry is likely to concentrate on oil pollution but other pollutants will be considered if they appear to be relevant.

How might such incidents arise?

What practical steps can be taken to make such incidents much less likely to arise?

What practical steps can be taken to reduce or eliminate the adverse effects of such an incident if it does arise?

At this stage, the following topics have been identified as ones which the inquiry expects to consider:

Navigational issues, including routeing, weather forecasting and position finding.

Vessel structure, including design, classification by the classification societies and standards and systems of maintenance.

Vessel operation including who takes crucial decisions, whether the responsibility of ships masters is being eroded, training officers and crews and communications.

Effectiveness of existing national and international legislation, and possible improvements.

Lessons from worldwide experience of accidents and near-accidents.

Insurance and compensation, as they influence decisions taken in potentially dangerous situations.

Salvage and whether present and traditional arrangements are satisfactory in the context of a hazardous cargo.

Treatment of pollution, including means of preventing pollutants reaching the coast, treatment of pollutants which do reach the coast and contingency planning.

Lord Donaldson hopes that a very wide range of individuals and organisations with relevant expertise will send written submissions on these matters to the inquiry. These should be sent to:

The Secretary to Lord Donaldson's Inquiry
Room 3/2, Sunley House
90-93 High Holborn
LONDON
WC1V 6LP

Freight

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will allow private sector freight interests access to British Rail's operational and infrastructure accounts.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail does not produce separate operational and infrastructure accounts at present.

British Rail (Accounts)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct British Rail to produce accounts separating infrastructure accounting from operations, in accordance with the relevant EC directive.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is already making preparations for the implementation in its accounting year 1993-94 of the provisions of Council directive EEC 91/440 requiring that the accounts for business relating to the provision of transport services and those for business relating to the management of railway infrastructure are kept separate.

Northern Ireland Railways

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what property, rights or liabilities of Northern Ireland Railways are affected by the Railways Bill.

Mr. Freeman: It is not the intention that Northern Ireland Railways should be affected in any way by the provisions of the Railways Bill.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what property, rights or liabilities of British Rail relate to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman: That is a matter for British Rail, but I understand that the board has no significant property, rights or liabilities in Northern Ireland.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Norris: A provisional list of regulations that impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Darlington-Bishop Auckland Railway Line

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present apportionment of costs between British Rail sectors for the Darlington to Bishop Auckland railway line; and what will be the change in apportionment of track costs following withdrawal of cement trains later in the current year.

Mr. Freeman: This is primarily a matter for British Rail. The route between Darlington and Bishop Auckland is Regional Railways sponsored. In such cases, freight flows are charged only incremental costs and there is not, therefore, likely to be any effect.

Rail Track Costs

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what legislation inhibits the public payment of rail track costs for freight operators; and if he will seek to revoke that legislation.

Mr. Freeman: The proposed new grant towards track changes would be paid under EC regulation 1893/91, subject to the designation of the Secretary of State as the competent authority for that purpose. It would take effect when Railtrack is established and when the new regime for track access and charging commences.

Forth Bridge

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requests for funding he has received from British Rail for the maintenance of the Forth bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None.

MVs Derbyshire and Tribulus

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will contact the European Shipping Commissioner and Mr. Alex Underwood of Salmond street, Gateshead to collect further evidence about the MV Derbyshire and the MV Tribulus.

Mr. Norris: My Department is in frequent contact with the EC Commissioner responsible for shipping matters.

If anyone has information about the MV Derbyshire which they regard as "new and important" evidence under the terms of section 57 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1970, it should be sent to my Department for consideration. Any information about the MV Tribulus accident in 1990 should be sent to the Isle of Man marine administration, with which the ship is registered.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider his decision not to order a full public inquiry into the sinking of MV Derbyshire.

Mr. Norris: A formal investigation into the loss of the MV Derbyshire was held between October 1987 and March 1988. I have no plans to order a further public inquiry.

Passenger Services

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the increase in public service obligation grant that will be required to maintain passenger services at their present level following withdrawal of freight services.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is in the process of preparing its budget for 1993-94, which will provide the basis for determining public service obligation grant for next year. The board's claim for grant will take account of the impact of any expected changes in the pattern of freight flows on the finances of the grant-supported businesses.

London Transport (Sub-contractors)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to apply the policy of prompt payment of sub-contractors towards new developments by London Transport.

Mr. Norris: I am advised that London Transport has a policy of settling payments to all suppliers and contractors strictly in accordance with the terms agreed in its contracts with them. This applies equally to investment in the existing infrastructure and in new development.

British Rail (Capital Investment)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the capital investment at constant prices by British Rail in 1991-92, 1992-93, planned for 1993-94 and 1994-95, in the 1991 autumn statement and now proposed for 1993-94 and 1994-95, excluding spending associated with the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail invested a total of £1,005 million in 1991-92, of which £751 million was spent on the existing railway. British Rail is planning to invest around £1·5 billion in 1992-93, over £1 billion of which is expected to be spent on the existing railway. BR is currently considering plans for future years as part of its 1993-94 budget and 1993 corporate plan.

InterCity (Timetabled Journeys)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with British Rail concerning the lengthening of timetabled journeys on InterCity arising from track maintenance shortfall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to plan its track maintenance programme within available resources. Prudent timetabling must have regard to the implementation of this programme.

West London Rail Links

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are for improvements to rail transport arrangements between Ealing, Greenford, Hanwell, Perivale, Northolt and Paddington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Most stations in these areas will benefit from the £750 million upgrading of London Underground's Central line with new trains and signalling or from the £240 million modernisation of Network SouthEast's Thames and Chiltern division with new trains, signalling and station improvements.

Jubilee Line Extension

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects construction work to start on the Jubilee line extension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: That depends upon the settlement of detailed terms for the private sector contribution to the cost of the extension, upon which negotiations with the administrators of Olympia and York continue.

M1

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects junction 2 on the southbound section of the M1 to reopen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Given reasonable weather conditions, the junction should be reopened before the end of March.

PRIME MINISTER

Relate

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister what steps are taken to co-ordinate the work of the United Kingdom Departments and Scottish and Welsh Offices concerned with Relate; and if he will make a statement on the grants for Relate for future years.

The Prime Minister: Consultations take place within government on this matter as necessary. The Home Office grant to Relate supports marriage guidance in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. The grant for 1993-94 of £1,530,000 is 38 per cent. higher than that for 1991-92. It is planned to increase the grant for Relate in 1994-95 by 4 per cent. over the 1993-94 level, subject to public expenditure constraints. The Scottish Office provides a grant to Marriage Counselling Scotland. In 1993-94 this will amount to £87,288, an increase of one and half times compared with 1992-93.

Coal Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Prime Minister if he will undertake a comparative study of the employment effects of any tax or consumer subsidy for coal mining on the existing job in nuclear energy supply and in the offshore gas and oil industry.

The Prime Minister: The coal review being undertaken by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is considering, among other options, methods and costs of reducing the price of British Coal by providing support to the coal industry, for example by subsidy or levy arrangements, and the implications for other energy providers and customers. The effect of any measures on employment in other energy sectors is one of the factors being considered. Evidence on this has been submitted to the review from organisations and individuals within the nuclear, oil and gas industries, and is being given full consideration.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Vehicle-Taking Offences

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the current legislation to introduce stiffer penalties where death has occurred as a result of aggravated vehicle-taking offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: It is not our present intention to change the sentencing provisions of the Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Act 1992. We have, however, made clear our intention to raise the maximum penalty for causing death by dangerous or drink driving to 10 years as soon as a suitable legislative opportunity is available.

Drug Problems

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new strategies he intends to promote to tackle drug problems in Mansfield and in Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Jack: The Government's strategy for tackling drug misuse is aimed at reducing both the supply of and the demand for drugs. In Nottingham a local drugs prevention team has been set up under the Home Office drugs prevention initiative—DPI—and they will continue to work with the local community in finding effective ways of preventing the spread of drug misuse. As the work of the 20 local teams is evaluated and lessons are learnt from it, we aim to ensure that other areas of the country have the opportunity to benefit from the DOI's experience.

Nottinghamshire, like other areas, will benefit from other aspects of the Government's drug strategy such as the measures in the Criminal Justice Bill to tighten the law on drug trafficking and money laundering, the assistance we are providing to other countries to help reduce the supply of drugs into this country and the tougher controls which we are introducing on precursor and essential chemicals.

At the national level, we are committed to bringing forward proposals to ensure that the control of drug misuse is co-ordinated effectively, and the Criminal Justice Bill which we hope to bring before the House shortly, further tightens the law on drug trafficking and money laundering.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new strategies his Department intends to promote to tackle drug problems in Greater London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Government's strategy for tackling drug misuse is aimed at reducing both the supply of and the demand for drugs. Within the Greater London area, six local drug prevention initiative teams are working in key areas with the local community in developing imaginative strategies specifically designed to tackle local drugs problems. In addition, the London drug policy forum, which receives funding from the Home Office, has initiatives in hand for promoting the co-ordination of local authority effort on drug-related matters.

At the national level, we are committed to bringing forward proposals to ensure that the control of drug misuse is co-ordinated effectively and the Criminal Justice Bill, which we hope to bring before the House shortly, further tightens the law on drug trafficking and money laundering.

Offenders (Rehabilitation)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to prepare and motivate for employment those who are subject to a court sentence in (a) Mansfield and (b) Nottinghamshire as part of their rehabilitation.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 11 January to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) at column 600. It is the responsibility of the Nottinghamshire probation service to prepare and implement local plans to achieve the objective of ensuring effective provision for offenders under its supervision in relation to training and employment; in partnership with training and enterprise councils, the employment service and others locally.

In relation to those who receive a custodial sentence, the prison service has been working closely with the employment service to introduce preparation for job search courses and job clubs in prisons to improve the help given to prisoners in preparing for and finding jobs.

The Home Office funds two national voluntary organisations, Apex Trust and the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders, which provide employment services for offenders and ex-offenders. Part of their programme of work is to assist probation services with employment and training for offenders under their supervision, and to assist the prison service in preparing prisoners for release.

Sri Lanka (Deportations)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of Sri Lankans deported from the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is given in the table.

Sri Lankan citizens removed from the United Kingdom under the deportation process

Year	Number
1988	8
1989	12
1990	4
1991	4
[1]1992	5

[1] January to September.

Race Relations

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 798, if he will give a breakdown by region of the number of posts at present funded or part-funded by section 11 grant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Section 11 is not administered on a regional basis. The table shows approximate numbers of posts, in full-time equivalent terms, for which payment of grant has been approved to local authorities and other eligible bodies, grouped on a geographical basis:

	Number
North West	1,320·6
North East	1,587·9
Wales	66·8
West Midlands	1,545·6
East Midlands	701·4
East Anglia	131·7
South West	89·1
London	3,784·5
South East	898·5

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 798, how many posts at present funded or part-funded under section 11 grant, are engaged in (a) education in schools, (b) training, (c) advice work and (d) economic development.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in the form requested. Approval for funding has been given for some 8,876 posts, in full-time equivalent terms, in education. A large proportion of these posts are school-based. In addition, approximately 1,250 posts, in full-time equivalent terms, have been approved in other service areas, including social services, housing employment, training and enterprise.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many posts in (a) Hampshire county council and (b) district councils in Hampshire are currently funded under section 11; what is the total cost of these posts; and if he will list the number and purpose of each post funded in each authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Numbers of posts approved for funding from 1 April 1992 are given in the table, with current full-year potential grant cost:

Local authority	Total No. of full-time equivalent posts	Total grant cost £
Hampshire county council	52·9	681,698
Southampton city council	1·62	19,550
Overall total:	54·52	701,248

Hampshire county council's posts provide a school and college-based English language development service. Southampton city council's posts are concerned with support services for Asian women experiencing domestic violence.

European Election Boundaries

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 11 January, Official Report, column 595, when he proposes to bring forward legislation on the European election boundaries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government's proposals on the basis for this legislation will be brought forward shortly. The legislation itself will be introduced at the appropriate time bearing in mind the dates of future elections.

Prisoners (Media Interviews)

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many media interviews with convicted prisoners have been published in the last two years; and what are the criteria for allowing such interviews.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications to interview prisoners are generally processed through the Home Office public relations branch. Each application is dealt with on its merits and a decision to proceed is made by the public relations branch in conjunction with prison governors, senior officials and, where necessary, Ministers.

At the outset, the journalist involved would need to outline fully his or her request and justify the need to interview prisoners.

If the interview is allowed to proceed for research or private purposes, an undertaking would need to be given that none of the material obtained would be used in any publication or broadcast.

Statistical information about the number of media interviews with convicted prisoners, published or broadcast during the last two years, is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Relate

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase, in real terms, the grant to the charity Relate.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the question from the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent North (Ms. Walley) on 4 February at columns 288-89.

Bingo Clubs

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what way and for what reason he intends that licensed bingo clubs should be regulated differently from the proposed national lottery.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The arrangements for the regulation of licensed bingo clubs are set out in the Gaming Act 1968 and the Gaming (Bingo) Act 1985. The proposed regulatory framework for the national lottery is set out in the National Lottery Etc. Bill currently before the House. The differences between the two sets of controls reflect the different nature of the activities involved.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been instituted for illegal telephone tapping since the coming into force of the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Interception of Communications Act 1985 came into force on 10 April 1986. From 1986 to 1991 there have been six prosecutions under section 1(1) of the Act. Information collected centrally does not identify whether the communications were by post or by means of public telecommunication systems.

Firearms

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of offences recorded by each police force in England and Wales in which firearms are reported to have been used in each quarter of 1987, 1988, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Jack: The tables give the information requested. Statistics for 1992 are not yet available.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all homicides since January 1987 by the police in England and Wales in which firearms are reported to have been used, including the date of recording, the names of individuals killed, the police force area for each incident, and whether in each case a person or persons have been (a) charged and (b) convicted in respect of each incident.

Mr. Jack: The table gives a summary of the information sought. Similar information for 1992 is not yet available.

I will write to the hon. Member with the individual details of each case.

[1]CONVICTED refers to a case decided at court to be homicide and suspect found guilty.
CHARGED refers to a case where a suspect was charged with homicide but no conviction was recorded, e.g. the case is still pending or the suspect was acquitted and a further suspect is being sought.
NO CHARGE refers to a case where no suspect has been charged with homicide. This could be because it was not possible to charge a potential suspect (e.g. where suspect died before charge could be brought) or where the case remains unsolved.

Canonbury Academy (Seminar)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the cost of the policing and security measures undertaken in relation to the seminar at the Canonbury academy, Canonbury place, London N1, on 27 January 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not the Government's policy to disclose details of the resources devoted to the subject of anti-terrorism.

Devon and Cornwall Police

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the last tranche of recruits began service with the Devon and Cornwall constabulary; when the next tranche of recruits is expected to begin service with the constabulary; and how many police officers are expected to retire between these two dates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The last tranche of recruits began service on 7 December 1992. The next tranche is expected to begin service in either May or June this year. The force anticipates 25 retirements between December 1992 and May 1993.

Released Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy that facilities and support for those released from prison after a delayed appeal or miscarriage of justice will (a) be generous and immediate and (b) be arranged in a way which leaves the ex-prisoner free to accept or reject what is on offer;

(2) if he will publish standard arrangements to meet the needs of people released from prison after a delay of appeal or miscarriage of justice.

Mr. Jack: I intend that it should remain the case that there should be no compulsion on any person who is released from prison following the quashing of a conviction to accept support, financial or otherwise, from any official body. I am not at present convinced that it would be either practicable or right to attempt to establish comprehensive arrangements on a contingency basis to deal with a category of case that I hope in future will diminish in frequency.

But I believe that compensation should be available in appropriate cases. That is the case now. Thus, under section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, my right hon. and learned Friend may authorise payment of compensation in the case of a convicted quashed on an appeal out of time where a new or newly discovered fact has arisen which shows beyond reasonable doubt that a miscarriage of justice has occurred. Moreover, he may also offer ex-gratia payments from public funds in other exceptional circumstances; the criteria which he considers in such cases were set out by my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) on 29 November 1985, Official Report, columns 689-90.

A successful appellant is under no obligation to apply for compensation or to accept any offer of compensation. The amount of any award of compensation is determined according to the assessment or advice of an independent assessor who applies principles analogous to those governing the assessment of damages for civil wrongs. Subject to the agreement of the assessor, an interim payment may be made.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake a study of former hostages and the problems they have experienced as part of research to determine the facilities needed for ex-prisoners released from gaol after a delayed appeal or miscarriage of justice.

Mr. Jack: I have no present plans to do so. Our current research programme does not enable us to undertake the study suggested.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake an investigation into the experience of prisoners released from goal after a delayed appeal of miscarriage of justice and publish a report identifying the common problems they have experienced.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to do so.

Unit Fines

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hon. Members have written to him about the new unit fines system.

Mr. Jack: The provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 relating to unit fines were implemented on 1 October 1992. Since that date some 50 right hon. and hon. Members have written about the sentencing provisions of the Act. Thirty seven of these letters were concerned either in whole or in part with the unit fines system.

Travel Documents

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the fee for issuing and renewing all forms of Home Office travel documents.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is in accordance with our normal practice and within the provisions of the 1951 and 1954 conventions to charge a fee similar to that for a standard British passport. The fee for a passport was recently increased to £18 and my right hon. and learned Friend has therefore decided that, with effect from today, the fee for issuing and renewing Home Office travel documents should be £18.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were refused entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom or to vary their leave once in the United Kingdom on grounds of (a) lack of maintenance, (b) lack of maintenance and accommodation and (c) lack of accommodation, in each year since 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The available information is given in the tables for spouses, fiancés and children refused entry clearance or variation of leave on the grounds of lack of accommodation, or of maintenance or of both accommodation and maintenance. For entry clearance refusals, information is available only for the Indian sub-continent.

Refusals[1] of after-entry applications to vary leave, solely on grounds of lack of accommodation, or maintenance or both accommodation and maintenance, by husbands, wives and fiancés[2], 1986 to 1992 (January to September)[3].

Prison Education

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department began consideration of the effect of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the contracting out of prison education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 8 December, Official Report, columns 555-56. When the decision was made to invite competitive tenders for the future provision of education in prisons, the view was taken that the tendering of an already contracted-out service would not necessarily involve the transfer of an undertaking. This view was confirmed in legal advice which the Prison Service obtained.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans he has made for the timetable for contracting out prison education if the original planned start date becomes impossible.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to her questions on 27 January at columns 715-16. Where the existing providers agree, the present arrangements will continue until 31 August 1993. Where the existing providers do not, contracts will be awarded to take effect from 1 April 1993 under the recent competitive tender.

Departmental Contracts

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made for monitoring any of his Department's functions which are contracted out.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 4 February 1993]: In the case of a contracted out prison monitoring is undertaken by a controller. In the case of contracted-out prisoner escort arrangements, monitoring is undertaken by a prison escort monitor. These posts can be held only by Crown servants, appointed by the Secretary of State under the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

In the case of other functions, where an external contractor is appointed, an in-house contract control manager will have the responsibility of ensuring that the benefits of contracting out are delivered.

D Notices

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances D notices are issued to the press in relation to seminars and conferences taking place on private property, organised by private companies, organisations or individuals; and what difference there is in applicability between national newspapers and local newspapers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

It is not the practice to issue D notices in respect of specific seminars or conferences. They are provided by the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee to editors and publishers as general guidance on matters which engage aspects of national security. Editors are invited to consult the D notice secretary if they are in doubt about their particular application.

Any advice given by the secretary on issues of national security is equally applicable to national and local newspapers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Money Supply

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what weight he gives to his monitoring range of 4 to 8 per cent. for broad money; and what are the consequences for the economy for a fall in the annual growth in M4 to below the bottom of the range.

Mr. Nelson: Broad money—M4—is one of the indicators taken into account in conducting monetary policy and setting interest rates. The monitoring range has been set at a level which is believed to be consistent with progress towards the Government's inflation objectives. The recent fall in M4's 12-month growth rate to below the lower limit on the monitoring range was one of the reasons for the decision to cut interest rates on 26 January.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average growth in consumption and average growth in gross domestic product for each year since 1979 and the cumulative percentage change over the same period.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested for the years 1987 to 1991 can be derived from table 3 of "Economic Trends", January 1993 edition No. 471, which is available in the House of Commons Library. Figures for earlier years are available in "Economic Trends Annual Supplement", 1993 edition. They are also held on the Central Statistical Office database which can be accessed by the Library. The CSO database identifiers are:

	Identity
Consumers' expenditure	CCBH
Gross domestic product	CAOP

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the average consumption per capita and average gross domestic product per capita for each year since 1979 together with the cumulative percentage change for both over the period.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested for the years 1988 to 1991 can be found in table 8 of "Economic Trends", January 1993 edition No. 471, which is available in the House of Commons Library. Figures for earlier years are held on the CSO database which can be accessed by the Library. The CSO database identifiers are:

	Current prices	Constant prices
Consumers' expenditure per capita	FBCC	FBCF
Gross domestic product per capita	CAQB	CAQC

Bank Charges

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has had from the business community in relation to bank charges.

Mr. Nelson: Between 1 November 1992 and 3 February 1993 the Treasury has received some 780 complaints from small businesses about their banks. Thirty-five of these were solely about bank charges and a significant number of the rest included references to charges, but an exact figure cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

In addition, I recently met representatives of the Bank Action Group to discuss their complaints, and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has recently seen the chief executive of the Forum of Private Business at which relations with banks were discussed.

Wealth Distribution

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the distribution of wealth implied by the 1989 Inland Revenue study of 35 per cent. of the adult population.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates for the distribution of personal wealth, including provisional figures for 1989 and 1990, are published in section 11 of the 1992 edition of "Inland Revenue Statistics".

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The firms of consultants used by Treasury for work relating to the market testing programme since November 1991, are Touche Ross, Prime Strategy Consultants and Ernst and Young. The spend to date has been £26,000 and there is a further committed expenditure of £55,000.

Banking and Insurance Industry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for further regulation of the banking and insurance industry.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has already outlined to the House—Official Report, 22 October 1992, column 576—the steps that we intend to take to implement the recommendations in the Bingham report which bear on the regulation of banking.

The House has recently passed legislation to implement into United Kingdom law the second banking co-ordination directive, which along with the second directive on consolidated supervision, the solvency ratio directive and the own funds directive, came fully into force on 1 January 1993. Further measures will be taken later in the year to implement the large exposures directive, which comes into force on 1 January 1994, and any of the other directives currently under discussion which may be adopted for implementation by that date.

The regulation of insurance is a matter for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. He will shortly be laying before the House regulations to strengthen the appointed actuary system. Later this year he will be bringing forward for approval regulations to implement the third non-life and life insurance directives and the insurance accounts directive.

International Monetary Fund

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to visit the IMF to discuss structural adjustments.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend will be attending the next meetings of the interim committee of the IMF on 30 April 1993 and the joint development committee of the World bank and the IMF on 1 May. I expect aspects of structural adjustments to feature in the discussions.

Auditors

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to bring forward proposals for imposing a duty on auditors to report suspicion of fraud or other criminal activity to the proper authorities.

Mr. Nelson: We will be publishing shortly a consultation document which will include draft regulations imposing a statutory duty on auditors to report to the Bank of England any information which they believe to be relevant to their client bank's fulfilment of the authorisation criteria in the Banking Act.

The consultation document will also include draft regulations extending a similar duty to report to the relevant regulatory authority, for auditors of building societies, friendly societies, companies regulated under the Financial Services Act 1986 and, at the initiative of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, companies regulated under the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will provide an estimate based on the most recent census of production of the added value per head in British manufacturing industry (i) as a whole and (ii) in plants in the United Kingdom of enterprises based in (a) other EC countries, (b) the United States of America, (c) Japan and (d) the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will provide an estimate based on the most recent census of production of added value relative to final sale value in British manufacturing industry (i) as a whole and (ii) in plants in the United Kingdom of enterprises based in (a) other EC countries, (b) the United States of America, (c) Japan and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The required information is available from "Business Monitor PA 1002, Report on the Census of Production, Summary Volume". Tables 1 and 2 give information for all public and private sector enterprises operating in the United Kingdom. Table 18 gives further information on private enterprises in the United Kingdom controlled from overseas. Copies of this volume for years up to 1990 are available from the Library of the House.

Income Tax

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the practice of the Inland Revenue in accepting payments in instalments for arrears of tax for small businesses and individual traders; and what plans he has to review this practice to take account of the current economic climate.

Mr. Dorrell: The first duty of the Inland Revenue is to collect tax that is properly due and in carrying out this duty it aims to treat all taxpayers fairly and impartially. The Revenue recognises that businesses may face temporary financial difficulties and in such circumstances the collector should be contacted at the earliest opportunity to discuss how the difficulty may be resolved. All reasonable offers of payments, including payment by instalments, are considered. This practice will continue to operate.

Whiskey and Whisky

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 255-56, if he will list the dates and the changes in (a) duty rate and (b) total duty, in real terms, received on whisky and whiskey in each of the last 15 years; and what assessment he has made of the main reasons for the domestic volume changes that underlay the fluctuations in estimated duty on whiskey and whisky in the years from 1981-82 to 1985-86.

Sir John Cope: The information is as follows:

Date of Budget	Excise duty on spirits (£ per litre of pure alcohol)		Estimated whisky/whiskey duty in real terms
	Rate	Rate in real terms		£ millions
1978 11 April[1]	10·44	28·95	1977-78	1,278
1979 12 June[1]	10·44	25·62	1978-79	1,495
1980 27 March	11·87	25·39	1979-80	1,303
1981 11 March	13·60	25·82	1980-81	1,131
1982 10 March	14·47	24·91	1981-82	1,095
1983 16 March	15·19	24·99	1982-83	[2]784
1984 14 March	15·48	24·18	1983-84	[2]1,284
1985 20 March	15·77	23·23	1984-85	882
1986 18 March[1]	15·77	22·29	1985-86	1,007
1987 17 March[1]	15·77	21·43	1986-87	911
1988 15 March[1]	15·77	20·71	1987-88	917
1989 14 March[1]	15·77	19·20	1988-89	844
1990 20 March	17·35	19·54	1989-90	747
1991 19 March	18·96	19·72	1990-91	761
1992 10 March	19·81	19·81	1991-92	730

[1] No change in duty rate.
[2] Receipts in 1982-83 and 1983-84 were substantially affected by the introduction of duty deferment on wines and spirits in February 1983. If duty deferment had not been available, receipts of duty from spirits in 1982-83 would have been higher than those recorded and conversely lower than recorded in 1983-84.

The real terms figures have been calculated using the RPI. Estimated whisky duty is at 1991-92 prices. Duty rates are at March 1992 prices and use the RPI applying in the Budget month where as December RPI is normally used or revalorisation.

For information on the percentage duty changes I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 20 January 1993, at column 256.

Stock Exchange

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage and amount of the equities bought on the stock exchange are bought by (a) pension funds, (b) insurance companies and (c) each other type of financial institution; and how these percentages have changed since 1979;

(2) what percentage of shares bought on the stock exchange is bought by (a) financial institutions and (b) individuals.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The amount and percentage of ordinary shares, in terms of market capitalisation, owned in United Kingdom companies listed on the London stock exchange, excluding issues on the unlisted securities market, as at 1 January 1992 are set out in the table.

	£ billion	Percentage
Pension funds	165·0	31·1
Insurance companies	109·7	20·7
Banks	1·1	0·2
Unit trusts	30·4	5·7
Other financial institutions	14·5	2·8
All financial institutions	320·7	60·5
Individuals	104·8	19·8
Unincorporated businesses	1·3	0·2
Non-profit making bodies	11·4	2·2
Public sector	6·8	1·2
Industrial and commercial companies	17·5	3·3
Overseas	67·8	12·8
All sectors	530·2	100·0

Note: Components may not add to totals due to rounding.

Other financial institutions comprise: building societies, unit trusts, securities dealers and other miscellaneous financial institutions. They also include SEPON—the stock exchange account into which shares are placed while in transit between buyer and seller—in 1992, amounting to around £3·1 billion and around 0·6 per cent.

Comparable figures for 1979 are not available, but percentages for 1981, the nearest available year, are as follows:

	per cent.
Pension Funds	26·7
Insurance Companies	20·5
Banks	0·3
Unit Trusts	3·6
Other Financial institutions	6·8
ALL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS	57·9
Individuals Unincorporated businesses	28·2
Non-profit making bodies	2·2
Public Sector	3·0
Industrial and commercial companies	5·1
Overseas	3·6
TOTAL	100·0

Further details and information for earlier periods is available in an article "The 1992 Share Register Survey", published in "Economic Trends" No. 466 which is available from the Library.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 4 November 1992, Official Report, columns 270-74; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 4 February 1993]: There have been only two changes to the list of appointees to the public bodies for which the Chancellor is responsible. Dr. C. Swan, Garter King of Arms, has been appointed as a member of the Royal Mint Advisory Committee. Mr. N. Fox Bassett, lawyer, has been appointed to the Building Societies Commission.

No details are held of the political affiliation of appointees to any of the public bodies for which the Chancellor is responsible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pit Closures

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from mining equipment manufacturing companies about the effects on export and domestic business of a programme of pit closures.

Mr. Eggar: Representations have been made both by a number of individual companies and their trade associations. The Government have made it clear that they will give every proper assistance to the industry, including help to build upon their impressive export record.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Trade and I intend to meet representatives from the industry again shortly.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total cost of the consultants' reports commissioned as part of the review of the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated total cost to the Department of consultants commissioned to carry out studies and advise in respect of the coal review is £1·4 million.

Electricity

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to (a) the competition and (b) other implications of the granting of permission to individual large users of electricity to buy electricity directly from a generator at a cheaper rate than other industrial users; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is in dialogue with larger users of electricity about their electricity prices. We have noted the recommendations by the Trade and Industry Select Committee that large users with unvarying demand should be able to bypass the pool and that the fossil fuel levy should be tapered, so that larger users pay a lower percentage.

Engineering Employers Federation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the Engineering Employers Federation on industrial strategy since October 1992; and what response he has made.

Mr. Sainsbury: Ministers and officials at my Department have a continuing dialogue with the EEF. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade wrote to the EEF on 14 December in response to the launch of the EEF's industrial strategy document and is due to meet with representatives of the EEF shortly.

Intellectual Property Rights

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what actions his Department is taking in order to incorporate considerations relating to intellectual property rights in the Uruguay round of the GATT negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The draft final act of the GATT Uruguay round presented by the GATT director general, Mr. Dunkel, in December 1991 included an agreement on trade-related intellectual property rights. The views of business, industry and other organisations were actively sought and carefully considered as part of the negotiations. The draft agreement is considered to be a good text which we are encouraging other countries to accept without any amendments, as part of an overall agreement in the Uruguay round.

Energy Policy

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he is making to section VII on opencast, of the first report of Session 1992-93 from the Trade and Industry Committee on British energy policy and the market for coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The findings of the Trade and Industry Committee report are being considered and the Government will respond in due course.

Fuel Prices

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish his estimate of the trend in world prices of oil, natural gas and coal over the next 10, 20 and 30 years.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 February 1993]: As part of a study of energy-related CO_2 emissions the Department of Trade and Industry recently published a range of fuel price assumptions in Energy Paper No. 59, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the Health and Safety Commission's emergency planning consultative document No. 32 concerning the definition of zones for radiation emergencies.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, together with the Secretary of State for Scotland, has responsibility for the regulations proposed in this consultative document. The consultative document proposed that the existing arrangements for determining the scope of detailed and extended planning should continue following the introduction of the Off-Site Plan (Licensed Nuclear Installations) Regulations. Some commentators sought a wider planning area, but most supported the existing basis for planning.

Regional Preferential Assistance

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give a breakdown of regional preferential assistance in constant prices for each United Kingdom region for each year since 1980-81.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 January 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 5 June to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), Official Report, columns 675-78. The regional schemes that were included in the answer are the same as those that make up regional preferential assistance.

International Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the International Atomic Energy Authority concerning increased levels of funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 February 1993]: None. I expect the agency to submit proposals for its regular budget in March.

EDUCATION

Class Sizes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average class size in Hampshire in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in each year since 1987 as calculated (i) including non-teaching heads and (ii) excluding non-teaching heads.

Mr. Forth: The average sizes of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in Hampshire local education authority for each year 1987 to 1992 are shown in the table. The figures may include some classes taught by head teachers, but it is not possible to identify these classes separately.

Average sizes of classes taught by one teacher—Hampshire LEA

	Primary schools	Secondary schools
1992	26·5	20·7
1991	26·8	20·6
1990	26·0	20·4

	Primary schools	Secondary schools
1989	26·0	20·4
1988	26·0	20·5
1987	25·8	21·0

Primary Education

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average spending per primary school pupil in Southampton in 1979 and in 1992 on (a) teaching costs and (b) non-teaching costs; and if he will express those figures in actual and 1979 values.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is collected by local education authorities only, so separate figures are not available for Southampton. Average net institutional expenditure per pupil in primary and nursery schools in Hampshire are shown in the table. The table shows spending in cash for 1979-80 and 1990-91, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available, and at 1979-80 prices.

	Teaching costs £	Non-Teaching costs £
1979-80 (cash)	274	110
1990-91 (cash)	830	431
1990-91 (in 1979-80 prices)	383	199

Notes to table:

1. Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. For 1990-91, figures include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.
2. Figures for teaching posts include gross salaries and employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions. Non-teaching costs include all other items of net institutional expenditure.
3. Figures for 1990-91 have been repriced to 1979-80 prices using the GDP (Market Prices) Deflator index.

Correspondence

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the hon. Member for Hammersmith can expect a reply to his letter to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State dated 7 December 1992 and referring to his answer of 17 November 1992, Official Report, column 134.

Mr. Forth: A full reply was sent on 3 February.

Autism

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many autistic children and adults are currently receiving specialist educational help in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available centrally. It is the responsibility of local education authorities and schools to ensure that individual autistic pupils receive the special education they require. The Department for Education and the Department of Health are currently jointly funding a research project into the education and treatment of children with autism in England and Wales.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what specialist educational services are provided for autistic children and adults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Local education authorities and schools have statutory responsibilities to ensure that pupils with special educational needs, including individual autistic pupils, receive appropriate special educational provision. The Department for Education and the Department of Health are currently jointly funding a research project into the education and treatment of children with autism.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provisions have been made by his Department to ensure legislation regarding the special needs of autistic children and adults in education is implemented in a fair and consistent way.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill currently before Parliament would require the Secretary of State to issue a code of practice to which local education authorities would have to have regard when carrying out their statutory duties towards children with special educational needs including those with autism. The national code will encourage consistency. The special educational needs tribunal will ensure fairness in the code's implementation.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what specialist education and welfare provisions are provided to ensure the specific needs of autistic children are met effectively in schools; and what steps his Department is taking to identify those who need help.

Mr. Forth: There is a range of provision available for children with autism, both in schools maintained by local education authorities and in schools run by voluntary organisations. The Department for Education and the Department of Health are currently funding a research project into the education and treatment of children with autism.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps have been taken to ensure that all grant-maintained schools have adequate insurance cover; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: On becoming incorporated all grant-maintained schools are required to sign a financial memorandum. This makes it clear that, unless otherwise agreed with the Department, the governing body must obtain insurance cover for building and contents and employers' and public liability. It is the responsibility of each school to ensure that the cover which it arranges is adequate for its needs.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to amend the arrangements for insurance cover for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: There are no plans at present to amend the arrangements for insurance cover for grant-maintained schools.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance has been laid down for the number of companies which must be invited to tender to provide insurance services to a grant-maintained school before a contract can be entered into.

Mr. Forth: The financial memorandum which all grant-maintained schools sign sets out the procedures that governing bodies should follow to ensure that they obtain value for money for all purchases of goods and services. Contracts should normally be placed on a competitive tender basis and the lowest tender accepted unless there are good reasons to the contrary.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools in England are, or have been, in dispute with a statutory body over property jointly used or owned by the local community; and how many grant-maintained schools are currently in litigation with a statutory body over property jointly used or owned by the local community.

Mr. Forth: There is one case where the Education Assets Board has been unable to reach agreement with a local authority on the transfer of facilities used jointly by the school and local community. The matter has been referred to my right hon. Friend to determine.

I am not aware of any grant-maintained school in litigation with the Education Assets Board.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all schools in the Greater London area which have opted to adopt grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The information, correct on 5 February, is listed in the table:

Recovery Programmes

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those local education authorities that have instigated reading recovery programmes other than those that have been awarded Government funding to do so.

Mr. Forth: We are aware of five such authorities: Cheshire, Croydon, Northamptonshire, Surrey and Westminster.

National Curriculum

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will publish his new proposals for the national curriculum; when these will be introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend intends to ask the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority, once it is set up, to offer him a plan for the regular review of national curriculum subjects over time. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales published proposals for a revised technology order in December. Proposals for a revised statutory order for English are expected to be published in the spring. The revised curriculum for both subjects should come into force from autumn 1994 for key stages 1 to 3 and autumn 1995 for key stage 4.

Nursery Education

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children under five years in Northumberland received nursery education in 1979 and the latest available year.

Mr. Forth: In 1979 approximately 12 per cent. of the local three and four-year-old population attended maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in maintained primary schools in Northumberland. In 1991 —the latest year for which information on participation rates is available—the figure was 31 per cent.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Boswell: Regulations relating to education can be found in "The Law of Education" which is published by Butterworths and which is available in the Library. This is regularly updated with the text of regulations as amended.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Atkins: A provisional list of regulations which impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consideration of definition.

Casement Park Murders

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons convicted of offences arising from the Casement park murder trials were members of Provisional Sinn Fein or of the Provisional IRA.

Mr. Mates: It would not be appropriate to provide the information requested.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many letters he has received concerning the Casement park murder trial convictions.

Mr. Mates: My right hon. Friend has received 18 letters, from 16 people or organisations, about convictions for murder arising from the deaths of two Army corporals near Casement park in March 1988.

Farm Workers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many regular full-time hired farm workers are employed on farm holdings in the severely disadvantaged areas according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

	Number
1978	514
1979	[1]—
1980	528
1981	486
1982	[1]—

Farm Incomes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978, how many farmers within the areas of LFA designated severely disadvantaged receive a level of farm income at or below the level at which a family of two adults and two children of school ages 13 and 17 could expect to be entitled to family credit at the current rate.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the level of indebtedness among mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers respectively in the severely disadvantaged areas for each year since 1978.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is given in the table for beef cattle and sheep farms in the severely disadvantaged areas for the period 1984-85 to 1991-92. No data are available for earlier years or for mostly sheep farms.

	Total external liabilities (£'000 per farm)	Indebtedness (external liabilities expressed as a percentage of total assets
1985-86	7·2	4·2
1986-87	8·8	4·7
1987-88	10·5	5·2
1988-89	9·3	4·5
1989-90	10·5	4·9
1990-91	14·5	6·8
1991-92	11·4	5·4

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes there have been in the proportion of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers in severely disadvantaged areas in relation to the number of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers in total for Northern Ireland since 1978; and if he will chart the change.

Mr. Hanley: The proportion of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farms in the severely disadvantaged areas in relation to the number of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farms in all areas was as follows:

Year
1978	[1]
1979	[1]
1980	66·7
1981	65·6
1982	64·6

1989	58·7
1990	57·8
1991	57·9
1992	58·1

[1] Not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many farmers were in receipt of hill livestock compensatory allowances in the severely disadvantaged areas according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978.

Mr. Hanley: The number of farmers who were paid hill livestock compensatory allowances was as follows:

Year	Number of Farmers
1978	12,882
1979	12,596
1980	12,410
1981	12,090
1982	11,977
1983	11,959

1991	12,333
1992	12,273

Nursing Vacancies

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will establish a database for nursing vacancies.

Mr. Hanley: The establishment of a database for nursing vacancies is a matter for health and social services boards and provider units as they are in the best position to assess current and future nursing manpower requirements based on service need.

HEALTH

Mrs. Tracey Evans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 540, if she will release to Mr. Robert Evans copies of the reports which she has received from the local agencies, and of the admission reports at Brighton general hospital, concerning the case of Mrs. Tracey Evans.

Mr. Yeo: Mr. Evans has been sent a copy of the summary and conclusions of the report by the area child protection committee.

The hospital admission reports are confidential to both the patient and the national health service. It would therefore be inappropriate to release these documents. Indeed, the confidentiality of all local agency reports is governed by common law or by statutes, restricting their access to any individuals other than Mrs. Evans herself.

Patient Statistics

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in 1990-91 and 1991-92 by each individual trust/shadow trust and directly managed unit individually and by region.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Geriatric Patients

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of geriatric patients treated per regional health authority in the last 10 years; and what are the predicted numbers for the next 10 years.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is given in the table.

Notes:
From 1982 to 1987-88 the figures are for discharges and deaths.
From 1988-89 to 1991-92 the figures are for finished consultant episodes.
[1] Provisional.

The information covers patients treated in the specialty of geriatric medicine and does not include the large numbers of elderly people treated in general acute wards, who are not separately identified.

Health authorities are responsible for assessing the health needs of their resident populations and planning their purchasing strategies accordingly. We do not routinely make long-term forecasts of patients numbers in view of the uncertainty attaching to assumptions about future trends. Various studies have been undertaken in this area including work carried out by the Department's economics and operational research division, published in "The Health of Elderly People: an epidemiological overview: Companion Papers", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Private Medicine

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances the new helpline service may provide information advising callers to use private medicine; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The regional health information service, which was launched on 26 January 1993, has proved very popular with the public.

The service deals with each request for information on an individual basis and it was set up to provide information rather than advice.

When a member of the public calls the service and makes a specific request for information related to private medicine, he will be directed to the appropriate source of further information.

Nursing Care

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances a local authority may make arrangements for continuing nursing care of a person in hospital, without seeking the consent of the person involved; and how the position will change from 1 April.

Mr. Sackville: Local authorities currently have no power to make arrangements for continuing nursing care. From 1 April they will be able to make arrangements for nursing home care, but except in certain very exceptional cases, local authorities have no power to provide care for people without their consent.

Project 2000

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals the Government have for increasing the number of students in receipt of Project 2000 bursaries.

Mr. Sackville: The number of students receiving bursaries will increase as more schemes are approved and funded to operate Project 2000. Sixty-four schemes have been established, with 17 remaining to be approved. An announcement will be made shortly concerning funding for new schemes in 1993-94.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the policy of the national health service towards the use of Project 2000 student nurses on clinical placements in the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Project 2000 students are counted as part of the rostered work force for 20 per cent.—1,000 hours—of their training. This occurs towards the end of their course during the specialist branch programme. During the remainder of the course students are supernumerary, but gain experience in clinical placements under the supervision of qualified nurses.

Project 2000 students gain experience during clinical placements and contribute to patient care under supervision, but only to the extent that this provides opportunities for learning.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will extend the terms of reference of the review body for nursing staff, midwives and health visitors to cover the remuneration of Project 2000 students;

(2) what consideration is being given to the annual adjustment of bursaries paid to Project 2000 students so that they are comparable with average net basic salaries paid to existing student nurses;

(3) whether the same considerations relating to the adjustment to bursaries for Project 2000 students are being taking into account in 1993 as were taken into account in 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Project 2000 students are not salaried employees: they receive bursaries. There is, therefore, no question of extending the pay review body's remit to Project 2000 students.

Nor do we consider it appropriate to link the level of Project 2000 student bursaries to the current earning power of other student nurses because Project 2000 students are not employees.

Student bursary levels will continue, as in 1991, to be kept under review in the light of recruitment and retention trends.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the wastage rate for (a) Project 2000 nurses training and (b) other nurse training courses.

Mr. Sackville: The average wastage rates for pre-registration nurse training are as follows.

	1990 Per cent.	1991 Per cent.	1992 Per cent.
Traditional courses	5·4	5·3	4·7
Project 2000 courses	1·3	5·2	5·5

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what independent evaluation has taken place on the contribution of (a) Project 2000 student nurses and (b) other nurses in training in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The National Foundation for Educational Research has been commissioned by the Department of Health to undertake a longitudinal study of the implementation of Project 2000. The National Foundation for Educational Research is due to report later this year. The study does not include other nurses in training in the national health service.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is a health economist on the secretariat serving the advisory committee on NHS drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The secretariat of the advisory committee on national health service drugs can if necessary obtain professional and other advice, including economic advice, from within the Department.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 479, if she will investigate the cost to the national health service of prescribed but unused drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. It is for individual general practitioners to ensure that the drugs they prescribe are the minimum necessary and that patients comply with instructions for their use. Advice on the appropriate level of prescribing is available from professional medical and pharmaceutical advisers employed by family health services authorities and via publications such as the "British National Formulary" which are issued free of charge to all general practitioners.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many economists will serve on the expanded advisory committee on NHS drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The advisory committee on national health service drugs is, and will continue to be, a committee of health care professionals—doctors, dentists and pharmacists. There are no plans to include an economist.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to require all hospital waste to be treated as clinical waste.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Residential Homes

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirement is laid down for the provision of tap and running water in registering residential homes for children and the elderly; and what guidance is issued in the event of disconnection.

Mr. Yeo: Registered children's homes and residential care homes for the elderly are required by law to provide adequate washing, showering and bathing facilities, with hot and cold water supply, for their residents. There is no departmental guidance on the action to be taken in the event of the disconnection of the water supply.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a table showing those district health authorities that are over their capitation target indicating (a) the percentage that they are over capitation and (b) the cash amount that this represents of current budgets.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not currently held centrally in a comparable and meaningful format. We recognise the value of comparable data, however, and the national health service management executive is currently collecting comparable figures for 1993-94. When available, a copy of these figures will be placed in the Library.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines are issued by her Department about the monitoring of decisions affecting extra-contractual referrals;

(2) what guidelines are issued by her Department about the rights of patients to appeal against extra-contractual referral decisions;

(3) what guidelines are issued by her Department about whether decisions on extra-contractual referrals are notified (a) to district health authority members and (b) community health councils.

Dr. Mawhinney: District health authorities are responsible for approving and monitoring extra-contractual referrals and, therefore, will have access to decisions made about them. No specific guidelines exist about whether to notify community health councils about decisions on extra-contractual referrals.

From 1 April 1992, the patients charter has given patients the right to have any complaint about national health service services—whoever provides them—investigated and to receive a full and prompt written reply from the chief executive or general manager.

Nurse Regradings

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of appeals against nurse regrading remain outstanding at regional and national level at the most recent convenient date; what is the average period that has elapsed since the appeals were lodged; what steps she is taking to expedite the processing of appeals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: At 31 December 1992, there were 16,304 appeals outstanding at English regional health authority level and 1,625 at national level. The average period of time that has elapsed since those outstanding appeals were lodged is 23 months at regional level and 11 months at national level. It is the responsibility of the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council to discuss how to bring the process to the earliest possible conclusion.

Population Structure

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the basis for Office of Population Censuses and Surveys calculations of future population structure.

Mr. Sackville: Projections of the population of the United Kingdom and its component countries are made by the Government Actuary's department in consultation with the registrars general. These are based on the most recent population estimates and on the assumptions about future births, deaths, and migration which seem most appropriate given the statistical evidence available at the time.

Subnational population projections for England are prepared by the OPCS. These project the population of local and health authority areas. The assumptions made reflect recent demographic evidence for each area and are consistent with the national projections. Local and health authorities are consulted about these projections before they are finalised.

Further details are given in the OPCS publications national population projections: 1989-based—series PP2 No. 17—and subnational population projections: 1989-based—series PP3 No. 8—copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is planning to make to its calculations of future population structure in the light of its over-estimate of the number of persons aged over 85 years in the London area as revealed by the 1991 census; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The methods used in making these population estimates have been published by the OPCS in its occasional paper 37. The information which is available about migration, especially its age and sex composition, is the least satisfactory component of the estimation procedure. Because of this a review of migration data sources has been carried out—OPCS occasional paper 39. The review identified some exploratory work on possible enhancements. This is now being undertaken. In the light of overestimation of persons aged 85 and over in the London area, the OPCS is looking again at its methodology; but it is not yet known whether it will prove practicable to make improvements to it.

Teaching Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing (a) the service increment for teaching allocations between regions for each year from 1990-91 to 1993-94 and (b) the distribution of service increment for teaching allocations between hospitals and trusts within the northern region for the same years.

Mr. Sackville: The service increment for teaching—SIFT—was expanded in 1990-91 to provide for the excess service costs of research, becoming the service increment for teaching and research—SIFTR. The regional allocations of SIFTR for the years 1990-91 to 1993-94 are set out in the table.

The allocation of SIFTR at a sub-regional level is the responsibility of the regional health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Carr CBE, the chairman of Northern regional health authority, for details.

Disabled People (Insurance)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy on the insuring of wheelchairs and other aids for disabled people; what advice is given to health authorities on this; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Guidance of national health service insurance was contained in the management executive's letter EL(90)195 of 2 October 1990. This advised health authorities that the public sector generally should carry its own risks unless greater value for money can be obtained by commercial insurance. National health service trusts are free to make the insurance arrangements which they consider to be most cost effective.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner fund-holding practices there are in each region; what percentage this represents of the regional total of general practitioner practices; and what percentage of the regional population they serve.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is given in the table.

Region	Number of GP practices fundholding in 1992-93	Percentage of GP practices fundholding in 1992-93	Percentage of population covered by GP fundholders in 1992-93
Northern	40	7·7	16·0

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the allocations made for general practitioner fund-holding practices in each region.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is contained in the table.

Nurses

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what central information her Department collects on the number of newly qualified nurses seeking employment.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those regional health authorities that have deployed strategies to ensure that student nurses are not employed when they qualify.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will establish a national database of nursing vacancies;

(2) if she will list those regional health authorities which have sent information to the NHS management executive on the number of student nurses due to qualify in 1993.

Mr. Sackville: With around 390,000 nursing posts in the national health service in England, the matching of newly qualified nurses to vacancies is best handled at local level. The Department does not therefore routinely collect information about nursing vacancies or newly qualified nurses seeking employment.

Regional health authorities are responsible for ensuring there are sufficient trained nurses to meet local requirements. All regions have reported to the NHS management executive about their plans to manage the supply of trained nurses to posts in 1993.

Nurses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified nursing staff were employed in each region in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Paediatric Nurses

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by regional health authority area, the number of qualified paediatric nurses in employment in the NHS for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Child Emigration

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 698, in what circumstances her permission is required for the emigration of a child who is in care; and in how many cases such permission has been granted in each year since 1967.

Mr. Yeo: The permission of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not been required since the implementation of the Children Act 1989 on 14 October 1991. Figures relating to the number of applications made to the Secretary of State before the Children's Act's implementation could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The courts now decide such matters. Their approval is given only: if emigration is in the child's best interests; if suitable arrangements are made for the child's reception and welfare in the country where the child will live; if the child has consented to living in that country; and if every person who has parental responsibility for the child has similarly consented.

Birmingham Hospitals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the new Birmingham children's hospital is to be built;

(2) what capital resources are to be made available in each of the next three years for the implementation of the "Building a Healthy Birmingham" plan; and if she will make a statement on its likely progress during the above time scale;

(3) when there is to be a replacement for M block at Selly Oak hospital;

(4) when the new Birmingham accident and trauma unit is to be built.

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the West Midlands regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of West Midlands regional health authority, who may be able to assist with the information requested.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department made during its consideration of proposed hospital closures in South Birmingham district health authority of the possible risks of cross-infection entailed by locating a burns unit on the same site as orthopaedic and surgical units at the South Birmingham general hospital.

Mr. Sackville: All matters, including that referred to by the hon. Member, were considered before my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State took her decision in favour of the proposals put forward by South Birmingham district health authority.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she took to discuss the proposed closure of the Accident and Royal Orthopaedic hospital with local hon. Members prior to making her decision on 1 February; and what steps she took to communicate her decision to local hon. Members at the same time as she communicated it to West Midlands and South Birmingham health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: I met the hon. Member on 27 October 1992, in relation to the proposals put forward by South Birmingham district health authority. The hon. Member was also given the opportunity on two subsequent occasions to meet me to discuss the matter.

I wrote to the hon. Member and the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 1 February 1993, informing them of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's decision in favour of South Birmingham DHA's proposals and to all other local hon. Members on 2 February.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women are currently prescribed oral contraceptives.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is the current cost of supplying oral contraceptives, and how much of a saving would accrue, if the categories listed in her press release of 12 November 1992 were removed.

Dr. Mawhinney: The net ingredient cost of supplying oral contraceptives dispensed by community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and prescribing doctors during 1992 was £37·65 million. Decisions on which individual products will no longer be available on national health service prescription will be made only on the recommendation of the advisory committee on NHS drugs and cannot be predicted in advance.

Autistic People

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom are officially classed as being autistic.

Mr. Yeo: These data are not available centrally. It is estimated that the prevalence of autism is between four to five per 10,000 population.

Student Nurses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many student nurses were recruited in each quarter of each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville: Information about numbers recruited to employment is not available centrally.

Traditional nurse training is being replaced by Project 2000 training. In 1991-92 in England, 9,280 students entered Project 2000 training. Students are supernumerary and are not included in manpower numbers.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how her Department publicises the availability of free prescription certificates.

Dr. Mawhinney: The FP10 prescription form advises patients that free prescriptions and prescription prepayment certificates are available, and directs those who need more detailed information to obtain leaflet P11 "National Health Service—Prescriptions—How to get them free". This leaflet and leaflet AB11 "Help with NHS costs" are widely available from a variety of sources including Benefits Agency offices and family doctors. Information about help with NHS charges is published in a range of ethnic languages and posters advertising free prescriptions are supplied to family doctors, pharmacies and NHS hospitals. The leaflets and posters are also freely available to organisations such as citizens advice bureaux, welfare rights groups and charities which can obtain them from the health publications unit.

Drug Tariff List

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of the people who decide what items are on the NHS drug tariff list; what are the qualifications of each of those people; what criteria were used to make the decisions to include items on the list; how often the drug tariff list is reviewed; what is the legal status of the drug tariff; and what discretion is open to consultants to waive the restrictions of the drug tariff and prescribe non-listed items on the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: The drug tariff, which is published monthly, sets out inter alia the list of appliances and dressings that general practitioners may prescribe under the national health service.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is required to promulgate this list under regulation 18 of the National Health Service (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992 which are made under section 41 of the National Health Service Act 1977, as amended. It follows that general practitioners cannot prescribe under the national health service items that are not on this list; consultants are not restricted by this legalisation but prescribe within locally agreed priorities and available resources. We decide what new categories of appliances should be added to the drug tariff, taking into account the availability of resources. The assessment of whether particular products within these categories should be listed is undertaken by officials, with relevant professional qualifications and expertise. The criteria used are the quality, safety and efficacy of the product, the value it offers for public money and the effect on overall costs.

NHS Staff

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS staff were employed on local pay and conditions agreements on 31 December 1992; and of those how many were recruited (a) after 1 April 1992, (b) after 1 April 1991 and (c) after 1 April 1990;

(2) how many NHS staff were employed on Whitley Council pay and conditions at 31 December 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the cost of compliance of hospitals within the national health service with the requirements of EC directive 5761/92 concerning the disposal of clinical waste by incineration; and whether this cost will be met by extra allocations from her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The draft directive 5761/92 has been issued for discussion. We have not yet undertaken an assessment of the cost of implementing it in the national health service.

Anophthalmia

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will commission research into the cause of anophthalmia;

(2) what assessment she has made of the effects of (a) benomyl and (b) other pesticides on unborn children.

Mr. Sackville: Before a pesticide is approved for use in the United Kingdom a careful assessment is made of its safety in use which includes data related to any possibility of risks to unborn children. We must seek advice from the independent expert statutory Advisory Committee on Pesticides before approving any pesticide.

Benomyl was last reviewed by the ACP in March 1992 and it advised that applied in accordance with the approved conditions of use both consumers of produce and operators should not be at risk. The ACP has been asked to consider at its next meeting in March the most recent study conducted by the university of California. This study, which adds little to present knowledge of the effects of benomyl in laboratory animals, was undertaken to investigate the eye defects and dosed rats at a level that was known to cause these defects and was 1,000 times higher than the likely human exposure level.

Anophthalmia and the related condition microphthalmia are known in some cases to be of genetic origin and some may be the consequence of infection with rubella or toxoplasmosis. Few studies have been done into the causes of anophthalmia and microphthalmia, and their comparative rarity makes it difficult to show any environmental association; nevertheless, that same rarity argues against commonly used pesticides or other chemicals alone being a cause. Clinicians at the Moorfields hospital are at present investigating a number of children born without eyes or with very small eyes. The Government will consider the results from this study with great care and take any action necessary.

Health Authority Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the criteria by which nominations to (a) district health authorities and (b) trust boards are judged.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 8 December 1992, at column 638.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she issues to regional health authorities about the methods by which nominations are sought for (a) district health authorities and (b) trust boards.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional health authorities are asked to nominate people from a variety of backgrounds, with the experience and skills which will enable them to contribute to the management and strategic direction of the authority or trust. Individuals may nominate themselves or be nominated by others.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the full list of names she has received as nominees to (a) district health authorities and (b) self-governing trust boards.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The process of nomination and selection for appointments is confidential.

Mental Health Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table to show expenditure on (a) mental illness, (b) mental handicap or learning disability and (c) social services as a proportion of gross domestic product for each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 29 January 1993]: The information requested is given in the table.

Gross expenditure on mental illness, mentally handicapped or learning disabilities and social services as a percentage of gross domestic product[1 2 3]
England

Year	Mental illness Per cent.	Mentally handicapped or learning disabilities Per cent.	Total personal social services Per cent.
1979-80	0·43	0·27	1·11
1980-81	0·49	0·30	1·18
1981-82	0·51	0·32	1·22
1982-83	0·50	0·32	1·24
1983-84	0·48	0·31	1·22
1984-85	0·48	0·32	1·22
1985-86	0·45	0·30	1·16
1986-87	0·44	0·29	1·16
1987-88	0·46	0·29	1·17
1988-89	0·48	0·31	1·15
1989-90	0·47	0·31	1·16
1990-91	N/a	N/a	1·20

[1] Gross domestic product (GDP) figures for England relate to calendar years; all other expenditure figures relate to financial years. Percentage figures are therefore approximate.
[2] Figures for spending on services for mentally ill and people with learning disability combine relevant (current) expenditure in the Hospital and Community Health Services and Personal Social Services. Figures do not include spending by Family Health Services. From 1988-89 onwards spending on Community Mental Health Nurses and Community Psychiatric Nurses is identifiable and included in the figures.
[3] Changes in data definition and collection may mean that figures are not directly comparable.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many courses of dental treatment for children were undertaken in each family health services authority area in each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, with the percentage change for 1991-92 over 1989-90 for each authority.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The information requested is given in the table. Following the introduction of the new dental contract on 1 October 1990, most payments to dentists for treating children are by way of capitation fees. Under capitation, it is not possible separately to identify courses of treatment. Thus the number of child courses of treatment in 1989-90 and 1991-92 cannot be directly compared, and such comparisons are seriously misleading. In 1989-90, dentists in England were paid £163·9 million for treating children. In 1991-92, this had risen to £244·0 million.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Car Park Permits

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many parking permits have been issued for the underground car park in each year since 1990, and at the latest available date to (a) hon. Members, (b) hon. Members' secretaries with over 15 years' service, (c) late-night staff and staff with over 15 years' service, (d) named members of the Press Gallery, (e) officers of the House, (f) Government Whips and office staff, (g) parliamentary Labour party staff, (h) Opposition Whips' office staff and (i) Liberal Democrat Whips' office staff.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: It is not possible separately to identify the number of parking permits issued in 1990, 1991 and 1992. However, on 31 January 1993 the following categories and numbers of permits were on issue:

Permit holders	Category	Current permits
(a) Members	1	638
(b) Members' secretaries with over 15 years' service	5	20
(c) Late night staff	4	297
Staff of the House with over 15 years' service	3	63
(d) Named members of the Press Gallery	4	18

WALES

Further Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total funding per full student equivalent at colleges of further education in each local education authority in Wales during each of the last three years; and what are the estimated totals for the next three years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The annual total funding per full student equivalent by each local education authority in Wales is not held centrally. From 1 April 1993 the Further Education Funding Council for Wales will assume responsibility for funding the further education sector. The funding council has yet to announce its allocation to colleges for 1993-94.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount of access fund money allocated to (a) further education within each local education authority in Wales during the last two years, (b) teacher training colleges, (c) other public sector higher education and (d) university colleges; and what was the proportion actually spent and the number of access fund applications in each instance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Universities Funding Council has been responsible for distributing access funds to the colleges of the university of Wales. In 1991-92 the Welsh Office made £620,000 in access funds available to the other further and higher education institutions in Wales. This was divided between the three groups eligible for assistance from the funds as follows:

Further education students—£209,634
Higher education students—£368,251
Postgraduates—£42,115

The allocations to institutions were made on the basis of student numbers. It is for institutions to decide on the distribution of the funds among eligible students. In 1991-92 a total of £651,221·11 was disbursed by institutions which included access funds carried over from the previous year.

A total of 3,932 students applied for assistance from the access funds in 1991-92. This represented less than 17 per cent. of students eligible to apply. Information on the use made by colleges of the £630,000 allocated in 1992-93 will be available later this year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will issue guidelines to the institutes of higher education to provide continuity of accommodation for further education students who have commenced courses housed in higher education campuses; if he will place a copy of his guidance in the Library; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has for transitional protection for further education students who have commenced courses traditionally located in institutes of higher education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: From 1 April 1993 responsibility for ensuring that further education facilities are available will transfer from the local education authorities to the Further Education Funding Council for Wales. The FEFCW is currently addressing the issue of transferring further education courses from certain higher education institutions to the further education sector.

Community Councils

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average length of time taken by his Department to respond to general inquiries by community councils in Wales in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Detailed information on community council correspondence for the last three years is not available. Every effort is made to reply to all correspondence within 15 working days of its receipt.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline the procedures established by his Department in responding to correspondence from community councils in Wales; and if he has any plans to review the effectiveness of these procedures.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department's procedures for dealing with correspondence from community councils in Wales are the same as those established for handling all external correspondence. Every effort is made to reply to all correspondence within 15 working days of its receipt.

Hospitals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 769, what was the total number of hospitals in Wales in (a) 1979, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992 broken down into (i) the national health service, (ii) joint user and contractuals and (c) independent acute.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were 173 NHS hospitals open in Wales as at 31 December 1979 and 145 as at 31 December 1991 and 1992.

In addition to these there were six independent acute hospitals open as at 31 March 1991 and 1992. It is not known centrally how many independent acute hospitals there were in Wales in 1979. Some of these hospitals would have treated NHS patients under contractual arrangements.

There are no joint user hospitals in Wales, nor were there any in 1979.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Marine Mammals (Transuranic Radioactivity)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies are made by his Department of transuranic radioactivity in marine mammals off the Welsh coast and in Welsh estuaries.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food directorate of fisheries regularly undertakes monitoring of transuranic radioactivity in fish and shellfish off the Welsh coast. Details of this monitoring can be found in the "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report No. 29—Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters off the British Isles 1990", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

No routine transuranic radioactivity monitoring is undertaken in respect of sea mammals because they are not normally consumed by the general public.

Coastal Protection Services

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what surveys he has conducted as to the readiness of Welsh coastal protection services to cope with a major oil pollution incident.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for dealing with any major oil pollution on the Welsh coastline rests with coastal local authorities, in conjunction with the marine pollution control unit of the Department of Transport. They maintain contingency plans which are tested in exercises and in response to specific incidents.

The Welsh Office's role is to offer support and it maintains its own oil pollution incident plan for this purpose. The Welsh Office will also seek to ensure that any lessons, relevant to Wales, to be learnt from the MV Braer incident are acted upon.

Farming

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of part-time (1) farm workers and (ii) farmers in (a) less-favoured areas, (b) severely disadvantaged areas and (c) disadvantaged areas in each year since 1985.

Mr. David Hunt: Readily available information requested is shown in the following tables. The figures exclude the numbers of farmers or farm workers on minor holdings of less than 6 hectares, in which there is no regular full-time farmer or worker, in which the labour input is less than 100 standard man days per year and in which glasshouse area is less than 100 sq m.

[1] Data for 1985 are based on classification prior to the 1984 extension of the less favoured areas and are not comparable with other years.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (i) farm workers and (ii) farmers in (a) less-favoured areas, (b) severely disadvantaged areas and (c) disadvantaged areas who (x) also did other jobs or (y) claimed income support in each year since 1985.

Mr. David Hunt: The following table shows, for 1985, 1987 and 1990 the number of farmers—occupiers—and other family workers on main holdings in less-favoured areas who had other paid work. Data are available only for these years as the source is the EC farm structure survey which is held every two or three years. Separate figures for severely disadvantaged and disadvantaged areas are not available for 1985. There is no information on farmers or farm workers claiming income support.

Note: Between 1985 and 1986 the method of classification of holdings used in the June Agricultural Census was changed. Consequently, the information for 1978 to 1985 is not comparable with later years.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the level of indebtedness amongst mostly sheep farmers and sheep and beef farmers, respectively, in the severely disadvantaged areas for each year since 1978.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

[1]— Information not available.
[2]— Sample of farms too small to provide reliable information.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978, how many farmers within less-favoured areas designated severely disadvantaged receive a level of farm income at or below the level at which a family of two adults and two children of school ages 13 and 17 could expect to be entitled to family credit at the current rates.

Mr. David Hunt: Farm income is not directly comparable with the measure of income used for determining eligibility for family credit. The average farm income does not represent disposable income, it is declared before payment of interest but assumes rent is paid on the holding irrespective of its tenure. It includes an allowance for changes in the value of trading stocks but is net of depreciation. Payments of family credit also take account of family savings and information on the savings of farmers relative to their incomes is not available. It is therefore not possible to provide the information requested.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes there have been in the proportion of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers in severely disadvantaged areas in relation to the number of mostly sheep farmers and sheep and beef farmers in total for Wales since 1978; and if he will chart the change.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by name the environmentally sensitive areas currently designated in Wales, and in respect of each state the area covered, the payment per hectare and the total annual payments which have been made each year since their introduction.

Mr. David Hunt: The environmentally sensitive areas in Wales are listed as follows with details of the areas covered by each designation and the total annual payments since the schemes were introduced. In each area there is a range of payments per hectare reflecting the different levels of environmental management which participants in the scheme agree to undertake. Details are set out in the relevant statutory instruments and in the published scheme literature.

ESA	Total area (ha)	Annual Payments (£)
		1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92

Unemployment, Gwent

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many men aged 16 to 64 years were registered as unemployed on 1 May 1992, 1 May 1991 and 1 May 1990 in (a) the county of Gwent and (b) each of the district councils in Gwent; how many of them had been registered as unemployed for more than six months, more than 12 months, more than two years and more than five years; how many of them have never had a job; and if he will present the figures as a percentage of all economically active males and provide comparable figures and percentages for females.

Mr. David Hunt: The unemployment data requested are available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed on line by House of Commons Library staff.

No local area information is collected centrally on those who have never had a job and unemployment rates for specific age groups are not available.

Tourist Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it would be possible for the chairman of the Wales tourist board also to hold the post at the British Tourist Authority.

Mr. David Hunt: It would be possible for the chairman of the WTB to hold the post of chairman of the British Tourist Authority also.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he intends to make regarding the role of the chairman of the Wales tourist board and the next chairman of the British Tourist Authority.

Mr. David Hunt: The appointment of the British Tourist Authority chairman is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage, in consultation with myself and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. The chairman of the Wales tourist board will continue as a member of that authority.

Health Service Pay and Conditions

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many NHS staff in each of the health authority areas in Wales were employed on local pay and conditions agreements at 31 December 1992; and of those how many were recruited on or after 1 April 1992;

(2) how many NHS staff in each of the health authority areas in Wales were employed on Whitley Council pay and conditions at 31 December 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information relating to numbers of staff employed by health authorities and the Pembrokeshire national health service trust is given in the table.

DHA Area	Staff employed at 31 December 1992
	On Whitley Council pay and conditions[1]	On locally determined pay and conditions
Clwyd	2,032	nil
East Dyfed	1,355	nil
Gwent	2,239	nil
Gwynedd	1,423	1
Mid Glamorgan	2,632	20
Pembrokeshire	802	480
Powys	535	nil
South Glamorgan	3,867	178
West Glamorgan	2,136	nil

[1] Excludes staff groups covered by the Pay Review Bodies ie doctors and dentists, nurses, midwives, health-visitors and professions allied to medicine.

Note:

Information on the number of staff on locally determined pay and conditions recruited since 1 April 1992 is not held centrally.

Nurses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a national database for nursing vacancies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have no plans to do so. Needs and requirements for nursing staff throughout the NHS in Wales are considered as part of the annual work force planning process.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many suckler cow premium application forms were processed during each month of 1992 and what was (a) the shortest period and (b) the longest period to elapse between receipt of the application and payment of the claim.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Number
January	1,431
February	733
March	299
April	156
May	94
June	121
July	35
August	24
September	16
October	466
November	3,750
December	1,894

It is not possible to provide the information requested on (a) the shortest period and (b) the longest period to elapse between receipt of the application and payment of the claim except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many late applications for suckler cow premium in respect of 1992 he has received to date.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of 127 late applications were received after 15 December 1992.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many late applications were received for suckler cow premium in respect of 1990 and 1991; and how many of these were (a) paid in full, (b) paid in part and (c) refused.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	1990	1991
Number received	85	46
Paid in full	None	None
Part paid	75	43
Refused	10	3

Information and Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sum he proposes to spend on information and publicity in the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office plans to spend about £2·5 million on publicity in 1993-94. The main areas to which resources will be committed are:

Industry, with continued campaigns in support of Enterprise Wales and export promotion;
Roads, including road safety publicity;
Health, including aids and alcohol and drugs misuse activity;
Education, including teacher recruitment and citizens charter material;
Agriculture, including the production of Welsh-language publications.

Executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Welsh Office and the Department's executive agency CADW have separate provision for publicity expenditure. In previous years, expenditure by CADW has been treated as part of the Welsh Office total.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the principal elements of the increase the estimate for the present year's publicity expenditure given in his answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 435, and the figure given in his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West of 29 January 1993, Official Report, column 886.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures given for my Department's estimated publicity expenditure for 1992-93 are the best estimate of the cost of the programme at that time. The difference is accounted for by adjustments and changes in costs across the programme in general and not by particular additions.

Telephone Boxes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of GVIR, K6-type, Giles Gilbert Scott-designed telephone boxes still in service in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I am informed by BT that 1,435 telephone boxes of this type are still in service in Wales.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish the study he commissioned from Touche Ross management consultants on the transitional costs of local government reorganisation.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today placed copies of the Touche Ross report in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will request from the Secretary General of the United Nations a copy of the report listing the names of military and dual-use equipment suppliers to Iraq, given to the United Nations special investigation commission on Iraq by the Iraqi Government on 26 January.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to comment in detail on the information we request or receive from the United Nations special commission on Iraq.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the types and models of (a) aircraft and (b) missiles attacked by allied aircraft in Iraq in January; and what assessment has been made of the technical threat posed to United Kingdom and allied aircraft by such weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Allied forces attacked SAM-3 strategic surface-to-air missile sites and shot down a MiG-29 fighter aircraft that had entered the southern no-fly zone. These types of assets pose a significant potential threat to United Kingdom and allied aircraft.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has made in his Department to implement the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Mr. Aitken: Appropriate arrangements are in hand.

Northern Ireland Duties

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect changes in United Nations obligations in the last three years have on the ability to provide soldiers with a two-year break from duties in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The only additional United Nations commitment to impact on intervals between unaccompanied operational tours, whether in Northern Ireland or elsewhere, is the recent deployment of an infantry battle group to former Yugoslavia. If sustained this would have the effect of reducing tour intervals from 17 months to 15 months during the current year. The announcement by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 3 February, Official Report, columns 319-21, means that this interval will revert to 17 months and provides greater assurance that the target of two years between such unaccompanied tours will be achieved once restructuring is complete. Tour intervals for other units of other arms have not been significantly affected by recent changes in United Nations obligations.

Tay House, Glasgow

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the timetable for the purchase of Tay house in Charing Cross, Glasgow.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decision has been made to purchase Tay house or any building in Glasgow or elsewhere to meet the requirement for the new Army personnel centre. A number of buildings which might meet this requirement remain under consideration and a final decision will be made only in the light of the outcome of the consultation period currently under way. Once that final decision is made, I expect that the purchase of the chosen building will be completed quickly.

Contaminated Land, Woolwich

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what volumes of waste and contaminated soil have been removed from his Department's site at Repository road, Woolwich Common, since 1990; where this material has been disposed of; what operations are currently under way with respect to the excavation, handling, movement and disposal of contaminated soil and radioactive wastes from this site; what authorisation or administrative equivalent, as defined by the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, applies requiring prior approval of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution with regard to any excavation and or disturbance of the contaminated soil; and what procedure is used to check that this requirement has been fully complied with.

Mr. Aitken: Since 1990, approximately 40 cu.m. of slightly contaminated building rubble have been disposed to a specialised contractor for disposal at his own disposal site. Currently a further 9 cu.m. of waste are awaiting disposal to the Drigg land burial site in Cumbria. No operations are currently under way to dispose of contamination. However, an area measuring about 3,000 sq. m. has been radiologically surveyed and shown to have some sub-surface radioactivity, which is not uniformly distributed. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has visited the site, authorised disposals under RSA60 and been kept aware of developments. The contamination poses no danger to any member of the public.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has formulated with regard to its intention for the best management or disposal of the contaminated land at his Department's site at Repository road, Woolwich Common; what arrangements his Department has made to provide full details of the volumes and inventory of the wastes there, and any other radioactive wastes deposited at present or past military establishments in the general area of Woolwich, for inclusion in the 1992 United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory currently in joint preparation by UK Nirex and the Department of the Environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Invitations to specialised contractors to tender for a contract for the removal and disposal of the contaminated soil will be issued in the next few weeks. The work is expected to take about a year to complete.

Since past wastes have been, and future wastes are likely to be, disposed of either by specialised contractors who have their own facilities for disposal or directly to the Drigg disposal site in Cumbria, it is not necessary to include details of wastes arising at the Woolwich garrison in the United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent, in terms of land area, overall volume and average specific radioactivity of contaminated land and wastes deposited at his Department's establishment site located at Repository road, Woolwich Common; what is the nature of the wastes in terms of radionuclide and chemical content; when the wastes were deposited at this site; what were the original sources of the wastes; and what assessment he has made of the compliance of the disposal of these wastes to legislation, controls and good practice at the time, and of the subsequent care and management of the site to good practice and regulatory requirements of radioactive waste management.

Mr. Aitken: The contaminated land measures about 3,000 sq. m. in area. The radioactivity is unevenly distributed at a depth greater than about one metre; the top metre is clean hardcore. The main radionuclide is radium-226 and the highest measured specific activity is 23 Bq/gm. The contamination has arisen from the burning of various materials arising from luminising operations involving radium-based paints carried out in an adjacent workshop building during the 1950s and 1960s. Such practices were common at that time. Current activities associated with radioactive waste management are being undertaken in accordance with all statutory requirements.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what controls have been implemented to ensure that there has not been, and will not be, any spread of contamination from his Department's site at Repository road, Woolwich Common; what has been the extent of radioactive monitoring and surveying of the general vicinity of the contaminated site; and what current monitoring is undertaken.

Mr. Aitken: The contamination is sub-surface. The area has a gravel/hardcore surface to a depth of about one metre which minimises the likelihood of airborne dispersal. Radiation measurements have been carried out at the nearest public access points by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the contamination shown to pose no danger to members of the public. The garden of a local resident has been monitored by the defence radiological protection service, and the results indicate no enhanced levels of radium-226 contamination in the garden. No monitoring is currently being undertaken, but it will be resumed when the contamination is being removed.

Warrior Vehicle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Defence Export Services Organisation has taken to ensure the use of a British-made turret in exports of the Warrior armoured fighting vehicle.

Mr. Aitken: The Defence Export Services Organisation aims to maximise the United Kingdom content of all defence equipment sold overseas. In the case of the potential sale of Warrior to Kuwait, however, the customer has specified a United States-designed turret.

Tornado

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made for the purchase of spare parts for Tornado aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Spare parts for the Tornado aircraft are purchased through the tri-national NAMMA organisation using standard procedures based on contracting, as far as possible on a competitive basis, for anticipated requirements.

RAF Expenditure

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of expenditure on (a) repair contracts and (b) spare parts for the Royal Air Force in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could not be provided without disproportionate effort and expense. I will write to the hon. Member.

Spare Parts

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the combined total amount of expenditure on spare parts for Harrier and Chinook aircraft in each year since 1979.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could not be provided without disproportionate effort and expense. I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy relating to the release of official information on expenditure for spare parts for defence equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Official information on expenditure for spare parts for defence equipment may be released subject to the constraints of commercial confidentiality and security. The Department's total expenditure in recent years on equipment, including spare parts, is published annually in "Defence Statistics". Expenditure plans for the forthcoming financial year, including those for spare parts, are contained in the annual supply estimates.

United Nations Military Planning

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts relating to the United Nations military staff committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO support for United Nations peacekeeping was discussed by alliance Defence Ministers at the Defence Planning Committee meeting in Brussels in December 1992; liaison continues between staffs at the NATO and United Nations headquarters. The Government fully support the idea of strengthening the military component of the United Nations Secretariat in order to help improve the planning and conduct of United Nations operations with a military element. This is being pursued as part of the follow-up to the United Nations Secretary-General's report "An Agenda for Peace" in which the United Kingdom is playing an active part.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the establishment of a military planning group at the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government fully support the idea of strengthening the military component of the United Nations Secretariat in order to help improve the planning and conduct of United Nations operations with a military element. This is being pursued as part of the follow up to the United Nations Secretary-General's report, "An Agenda for Peace" in which the United Kingdom is playing an active part.

Nuclear Submarines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will make a decision about the final disposal method for nuclear submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The policy for final disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines remains under consideration. We shall come to a decision as soon as possible.

Naval Bases

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 October 1992, Official Report, column 802, if he will give details of all the measures that potentially affect naval bases which have been examined; which Departments have been consulted as part of this work; when work started; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Many proposals which could have implications for the naval bases are examined as part of the departmental planning process. Some are taken forward, some are not. It is not possible for a variety of reasons, not least because of the uncertainty that may be caused in the areas concerned, to publish the details of such work. Other Government Departments are consulted as appropriate. The trade unions and other interested parties are consulted about these proposals which are taken forward. All relevant factors are considered before final decisions are announced.

Naval Dockyards

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the requirement for naval dockyards in the event of British maritime forces becoming involved in a major conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: All the Royal Navy's requirements are taken into account in determining our support and repair arrangements.

"Options for Change"

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes in his policy over the last three years have resulted from his "Options for Change" study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Plans for restructuring Britain's armed forces were set out in detail in both the 1991 Statement on the Defence Estimates, "Britain's Defence for the 90s" (Cm. 1559-I), and "Britain's Army for the 90s" (Cm. 1595). These were updated in the 1992 statement (Cm. 1981), and have since been supplemented by a number of public announcements, including my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence's statement on 3 February 1992, Official Report, columns 319-28, about Army manpower.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners' Incomes

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be in a position to publish figures on pensioners' income based on data from the 1989 family expenditure survey.

Miss Widdecombe: It is expected that pensioners' income figures from the 1989 family expenditure survey will be published shortly.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Miss Widdecombe: Lists of all statutory instruments for which the Department is responsible are published in "The Law Relating to Social Security" and in "War Pensions" which are available in the Library. A list of statutory instruments relating to the child support arrangements which come into effect in April 1993 will be published in "The Law Relating to Child Support", which will be placed in the Library shortly.

A provisional list of all Departments' regulations which have an impact on business has recently been put together by the central deregulation unit in the Department of Trade and Industry, and consideration will be given to placing that list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Housing Benefit (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) tenants of Lambeth council and (b) tenants of other landlords were upon average in receipt of housing benefit for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The average number of local authority tenants in receipt of housing benefit in 1992 in the London borough of Lambeth was 22,800. The average number of tenants for other landlords, in the same year, was 12,900.

Notes:
The information covers benefit units, and not individuals; couples are counted as one unit.
The source of the data is the Housing Benefit Management Information System quarterly caseload returns for February, May, August and November 1992.
All figures are rounded to the nearest one hundred.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much refund of housing benefit was paid to Lambeth council in each of the 12 months of 1992.

Mr. Burt: Monthly payments on account of housing benefit subsidy made to Lambeth council in 1992 are shown in the following table:

1992

Month	Rent allowance[1] £	Rent rebates (non-HRA)[1] £	Rent rebates (HRA)[2] £	Total £
January	1,450,750	268,599	3,688,722	5,408,071

TOTAL	28,113,375	835,865	35,477,088	64,426,328

Notes:
[1] Paid by the Department of Social Security.
[2] Paid by the Department of the Environment.
[3] Negative amounts, due to recovery from 1991-92.

In addition, the Department paid £110,361 to Lambeth council in 1992 in respect of the direct administration subsidy for housing benefit. The monthly profile of this subsidy was as follows:

Month	£
January	36,787
February	36,787
March	36,787
April	79,179
May	79,179
June	79,179
July	79,179
August	79,179
September	79,179
October	79,179
November	79,179
December	79,179
Total	110,361

Note:
The table shows administration subsidy payments on account made by DSS.
Administration subsidy for housing benefit is paid in two parts: 50 per cent. direct grant from DSS and 50 per cent. through the revenue support grant.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what public appointments he has made since 1 November 1992; and what information he has on the political affiliations of those appointed.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made the following public appointments and re-appointments since 1 November 1992.

Name of Body	Name of Appointee
Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions	Mr. W. Dunn MBE JP Mrs. P. L. Newnes OBE Brigadier H. L. B. Salmon
Social Security Advisory Committee	Mrs. J Anelay Rev. H. Good Hon. Mrs. R. H. Price
Industrial Injuries Advisory Council	Dr. J. Asherson Professor M. Cinnaamond Professor A. Newman Taylor OBE
Occupational Pensions Board	Sir Jeremy Rowe CBE

The above appointees were chosen on the basis of their expertise or experience of the type of work involved in the appointment. Their political affliation was not a relevant factor.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the present level of invalid care allowance as a percentage of national average earnings.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 25 January 1993 at column 585.

Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer of 1 February 1993, Official Report, column 26, concerning the value of the basic retirement pension and state earnings-related pension scheme, if he will (a) publish similar figures for 1993-94 and (b) for all years given in his answer, including 1993-94, show what the monetary equivalents would be if the proportions were applied to estimated average earnings in 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table.

	1993-94	1993-94 £	2015-16 £	2025-26 £	2035-36 £	2045-46 £
Basic pension	16·9	56·10	40·45	34·85	30·00	25·85
Average additional pension (Women)	10·6	34·95	45·80	42·20	42·00	39·15
Average additional pension (Men)	17·0	56·45	67·35	55·95	47·65	42·75

Note:
The additional pension percentages are based on the amount of SERPS payable in each respective year to an individual who had average earnings in each year of his or her working life. They are not based on average AP awards to new pensioners as these cannot be estimated.
Assumes real earning growth of 1·5 per cent. per annum.

Oral Contraceptives

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will adjust the level of benefits paid to women of child-bearing age who are prescribed oral contraceptives, to meet the additional cost of paying for a brand which has been placed on the selected list.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of Health to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Pickthall) on 18 January 1993, at column 97. Since the real clinical needs of patients will continue to be met from items available on prescription under the NHS, we have no plans to adjust benefit levels.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer of 1 February 1993, Official Report, column 24, concerning the level of the upper and lower earnings limits for national insurance contributions, if he will publish figures showing what the monetary equivalents would be if the proportions were applied to estimated average earnings in 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is given in the table.

Earnings limit	2015-16 £	2025-26 £	2035-36 £	2045-46 £
Lower	40·40	34·80	30·00	25·85
Upper	303·05	260·65	225·10	193·85

Note:
Assumes real earnings growth of 1·5 per cent. per annum.

European Standing Committee Papers

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department took to make available to hon. Members papers relevant to the proceedings of European Standing Committee B held on Wednesday 3 February; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: On 7 January 1993 this Department sent a set of relevant papers to each hon. member of European Standing Committee B in advance of the Committee's meeting due to take place on 13 January. At the same time copies were placed in the Libraries of each House and 150 copies were supplied to the Vote Office.

Following the adjournment of the debate on 13 January, additional papers requested by the Committee were sent on 27 January to each hon. member of the Committee and to the Vote Office.

Reduced Rate Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men and women, respectively, would be receiving unemployment and sickness benefits at each of the reduced rates if those rates had not been abolished by the Social Security Act 1986; and how many more people would be receiving invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Grants and Loans (Refusal Rate)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the refusal rate for (a) community care grants and (b) social fund loans at the Northfield and Moseley Road Benefits Agency offices in Birmingham for April 1992 to date.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 5 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the refusal rate for community care grants and social fund loans at Northfield and Moseley Road offices in Birmingham.

Information is held for the Benefits Agency's Birmingham South West District, which comprises the Northfield and Moseley Road offices. The refusal rate for community care grants and social fund loans for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 December 1992 (latest available data) is 74·9 per cent and 31·6 per cent. respectively. I should emphasise that the vast majority of community care grants refusals are because the application fails to meet the basic criteria.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Offical Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the effects of the proposed abolition of wages councils on (a) black and Afro-Caribbean workers, (b) workers of Indian sub-continent origin and (c) white workers respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Black, Indian, white and other workers will benefit from the abolition of the councils, which will free up the labour market and increase job opportunities.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the future of the TECs.

Mr. McLoughlin: I see TECs as continuing their important role as business-led strategic bodies in the areas of training, education and enterprise support with clear responsibilities in such areas as the youth training guarantee.

Training Schemes (Accidents)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people on (a) youth training schemes and (b) employment training schemes met with accidents in each year since 1989; and how many were fatal.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following table gives the youth training and employment training figures for the years 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

	1989	1990	1991	1992
Youth training
Fatal	4	2	4	2
Major	585	492	378	293
Minor	2,690	2,127	1,561	1,389
Employment training
Fatal	1	3	0	1
Major	203	193	121	79
Minor	969	908	562	419

Notes:

(a) Employment Department figures for trainees have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for employed persons. However, the Employment Department's figures include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments, and road traffic accidents, which would not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

(b) Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985. These regulations, which came into force on 1 April 1986, reclassified fractured wrists and ankles as major injuries. These were not classed as major injuries in the previous regulations, the Notifications of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR).

Industry Training Organisations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made by the joint Employment Department/National Council of Industry Training Organisations group considering the recommendations of the review of industry training organisations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The work of the Industry Training Organisations network review implementation group has been completed. A copy of its report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Trade Union Commissioner

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many appeals have been lodged with the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members since the post was created; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since her office was created in 1988, the independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members has received 178 formal applications for assistance and has granted 39 of them.

Ministerial Group on Women's Issues

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) when is the next meeting of the Ministerial Group on Women's Issues; and what is on the agenda for that meeting;

(2) when was the last meeting of the ministerial group on women's issues; and what was discussed at that meeting.

Mr. McLoughlin: The last meeting of the Ministerial Group on Women's Issues (MGWI) was on 5 March 1992. The Ministerial Group on Women's Issues was superseded by the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Women's Issues in April 1992. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear, the Government do not give details of the topics discussed by individual Cabinet committees, the timing of meetings, or their proceedings, although it will continue to make the committee's decisions known to Parliament and the public.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Severely Disadvantaged Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers were in receipt of hill livestock compensatory allowances in the severely disadvantaged areas according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978.

Mr. Gummer: Precise annual figures covering this period are not available but the number of claimants paid each year under the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme to farmers with holdings located either wholly or partially within the severely disadvantaged area, or the corresponding area prior to the extension of the less-favoured areas in 1985, has declined marginally from about 52,300 in 1980 to 51,500 in 1991.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many regular full-time hired farm workers are employed on farm holdings in the severely disadvantaged areas according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978.

Mr. Gummer: The number of regular full-time hired farm workers employed on farm holdings in the severely disadvantaged areas in England for each year since 1978 is shown in the table.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes there have been in the proportion of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers in severely disadvantaged areas in relation to the number of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers in total for England since 1978; and if he will chart the change.

Mr. Gummer: The number of mostly sheep[1] and sheep and beef holdings[2] located either wholly or partially within the English severely disadvantaged areas, or the corresponding areas before the extension of the less-favoured areas in 1985, as a percentage of such holdings in England is shown in the table:

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978, how many farmers within less-favoured areas designated severely disadvantaged receive a level of farm income at or below the level at which a family of two adults and two children of school ages 13 and 17 could expect to be entitled to family credit at the current rates.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the level of indebtedness among mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers, respectively, in the severely disadvantaged areas for each year since 1978.

Mr. Gummer: The following table shows the average level of total external liabilities from a sample of mainly sheep and cattle and sheep farms in the severely disadvantaged areas of England, together with the proportion that these represent of total assets.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by name the environmentally sensitive areas currently designated in England, and in respect of each state the area covered, the payment per hectare and the total annual payments which have been made each year since their introduction.

Mr. Curry: The environmentally sensitive areas in England are listed in the table with details of the areas covered by each designation. In each area there is a range of payments per hectare reflecting the different levels of environmental management which participants in the scheme agree to undertake. Details are set out in the relevant statutory instruments and in the published scheme literature. Total annual payments since the schemes were introduced were given in reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang) on 14 December 1992, Hansard column 66.

Whisky and English Wine

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide financial assistance for the establishment of a sales point at Calais docks for English wine and Scotch whisky.

Mr. Curry: No.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward proposals to ensure that all irradiated food will be explicitly labelled to identify all food which has undergone irradiation.

Mr. Soames: Rules for the labelling of all foods and listed ingredients which have been irradiated have already been agreed by the EC and implemented in the United Kingdom. Further proposals on food irradiation currently before the Council of Ministers include more detailed rules on the labelling of irradiated ingredients. The Government are seeking to ensure that the further requirements on ingredient declarations are as comprehensive as practicable.

EC Intervention Stocks

Mr. Dover: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how large current intervention stocks of cereal and butter are within the European Community; and what were the levels in each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Curry: Tables showing current levels of all produce held in intervention within the European Community are deposited in the Library of the House at monthly intervals, most recently on 29 January. The information currently held in the House Library goes back to January 1985; it is not possible to provide earlier figures within the time available.

Agriculture Returns

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 134, whether the requirement of the Commission for agricultural returns to be in hectares applies to both (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) between the United Kingdom and European Commission; and if he will set out the text which gives effect to this requirement.

Mr. Curry: Council directive on the approximation of the laws of the member states relating to units of measurement No. 80/181 EC as amended by Council directive No. 89/617 EC states:

"Whereas the laws which regulate the use of units of measurement in the Member States differ from one Member State to another and as a result hinder trade; whereas, in these circumstances, it is necessary to harmonise laws, regulations and administrative provisions in order to overcome such obstacles;"

It goes on, in chapter 1, section 4 of the annex, to specify the units to be used in determining the area of farm land in the following terms:

Units and names of units permitted in specialised fields only

Quantity	Name	Unit Symbol	Value
Vergency of optical	dioptre*		1 dioptre = $1 m^{-1}$
Mass of precious stones	metric carat		1 metric carat = 2×10^{-4} kg
Area of farmland and building land	are	a	1 a = 10^2 m^2
Mass per unit length of textile yarns and threads	tex	tex	1 tex = 10^{-4}kg m^{-1}

Note: The prefixes listed in 1·3 may be used in conjunction with the above units. The multiple 10^2 a is, however, called a 'hectare'.
This directive is directly applicable in all Member States and therefore affects all returns completed with the United Kingdom and returns provided by the United Kingdom for the European Commission.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) of 11 January, Official Report, column 623, what steps he is taking to ascertain the needs of United Kingdom areas which are dependent on fishing; what sort of appropriate assistance he is proposing to the European Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Studies have been carried out by consultants engaged by the European Commission to help define fisheries-dependent areas and their economic needs. We are presently examining these studies and our officials will be seeking the views of the fishing industry. As far as any new measures are concerned, we shall be seeking to ensure that they properly recognise the needs of fisheries-dependent areas in the United Kingdom, as well as representing good value for money and providing for needs that could not be met through the mechanisms that are already available.

Flooding (Evacuations)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to organise with all interested bodies and people affected a full-scale exercise of evacuation procedures in the event of river and sea flooding in the eastern counties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department is responsible for ensuring that adequate warning procedures exist and are able to operate smoothly in the event of potential river or sea flooding. The National Rivers Authority holds regular reviews of emergency procedures and mounts exercises with the police and local authorities to test contingency plans and operational procedures. If the police and local authorities wished to test their emergency evacuation procedures in the event of flooding in a particular area this could be done in conjunction with an NRA exercise. However, a full-scale evacuation exercise involving members of the public in all the areas potentially at risk in the eastern counties would be extremely expensive and would not necessarily provide information that would be helpful in an actual emergency.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the hill livestock compensatory allowance rates for each of the last five years in each EC country; and what information he has about plans for future changes to such rates.

Mr. Curry: Directly equivalent schemes to the hill livestock compensatory allowances do not exist elsewhere in the European Community. When member states change the rates of the schemes that they operate under the same EC provisions, they are required to notify the Commission but not other member states. The information requested is not therefore available in a readily accessible form. To compile a list of, and the rates applicable under, the various schemes for each of the past five years could be done only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Muir Russell

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the departmental responsibilities in which Mr. Muir Russell has been involved over the past five years.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Russell's departmental responsibilities over the last five years have been:

Present position—Under Secretary Housing, The Scottish Office Environment Department.
April 1990-August 1992—Under Secretary, Secretariat, Cabinet Office.
February 1989-April 1990—Assistant Secretary, The Scottish Office Finance Division I (which deals in particular with the Public Expenditure Survey and The Scottish Office Administration Vote).
February 1986-February 1989—Assistant Secretary, The Scottish Office Local Government Finance Division.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how often Mr. Muir Russell of his Department has met representatives of Stagecoach plc in connection with his official duties in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: Before the first discussion of his possible appointment as a non-executive director, which was held on 1 December 1992, Mr. Russell had no meetings with representatives of Stagecoach Holdings plc.

Road Accidents

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by road user group the number of people (a) slightly injured and (b) killed or seriously injured on (i) built-up roads and (ii) non-built-up roads in each of the last three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for the latest available three years is as follows:

Casualties by road user group, severity, for built up and non built up areas: Years 1989 to 1991

Legal Aid

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much gross expenditure on civil legal aid increased between 1987-88 and 1991-92.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Gross expenditure on civil legal aid in 1987-88 was £15·697 million. The figure for 1991-92 was £16·581 million. Projected expenditure in 1992-93 is £23·5 million.

Stagecoach Group

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what forms of support the Stagecoach group of companies has received from the Scottish Development Agency and its successor bodies.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Development Agency invested £500,000 in Stagecoach in preference shares and convertible preference shares in 1989, in order to fill a funding gap to facilitate expansion of the company.

Sheriff Courts (Cost)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost of a sheriff court day (a) in criminal trials, giving details of (i) direct costs to Scottish courts administration, (ii) legal aid, (iii) Crown Office costs, (iv) the prison service and (v) the police and (b) in civil proofs, giving details of (i) direct costs to Scottish courts administration and (ii) legal aid costs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The costs in 1992 of a sheriff court sitting day, averaged over summary criminal and civil business, was £784. This includes all direct costs borne by Scottish courts administration—staff salary costs, accommodation costs, central management costs and related adminstrative expenditure—but excludes judicial salaries which are borne on the Consolidated Fund. In addition, in criminal trials involving juries, there were additional costs for shorthand writers of £150 per day and payments to jurors of £631 per day.

The average cost to the Crown Office of a procurator fiscal depute's time is £250 per day. The average cost of the time spent by a procurator fiscal depute in court is £150 per day. To this figure falls to be added the cost of witness expenses, administrative costs of witness citations and the overheads associated with case preparation.

Information about legal aid costs is not available in the form requested. In 1991-92 the average cost per case for providing legal aid in a sheriff court solemn trial was £2,049; in a sheriff court summary trial £798 and in a sheriff court civil case £699. These costs include fees paid to solicitors and counsel and outlays, including witness expenses.

Information in regard to the costs borne by the prison and police service for the provision of services in respect of daily sheriff court sittings is not available in the form requested. The Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland has assessed the annual cost of police officers attending all the Scottish courts on, exclusively, witness duty as £7·8 million.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by name the environmentally sensitive areas currently designated in Scotland, and in respect of each, state the area covered, the payment per hectare and the total annual payments which have been made each year since their introduction.

Sir Hector Monro: The environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland are listed in the table, together with details of the areas covered by each designation and the annual payments made since the schemes were introduced. In each area there is a range of hectarage payments reflecting the different levels of environmental management which participants in the scheme agree to undertake. Details are set out in the relevant statutory instruments and in the published scheme literature.

Severely Disadvantaged Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers were in receipt of hill livestock compensatory allowances in the severely disadvantaged areas according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978.

Sir Hector Monro: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Year	Number of HLCA recipients in Severely Disadvantaged Areas of Scotland
1978	19,802
1979	19,164
1980	19,198

Geese

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences have been granted under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the shooting in the winter of 1992-93 of (a) barnacle geese and (b) Greenland white-fronted geese; what assessement he has made of the implications of such licences for the management scheme for Islay geese; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Six licences to shoot barnacle geese and three to shoot Greenland white-fronted geese were issued in November 1992 prior to commencement of the Islay goose management scheme. Four barnacle licences and two white-front licences were subsequently revoked upon the decision of the licence holders to participate in the management scheme.

I am encouraged by the rate of voluntary participation in the scheme. I am also content that those not participating should continue to be able to seek licences to protect their crops.

Nurses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish a national database for nursing vacancies.

Mr. Stewart: No. The changes in funding arrangements for nurse education and training in Scotland which will take place on 1 April 1993 mean that health boards will have the responsibility for assessing the demand for pre-registration nursing, midwifery and health visiting education and training of all employers within their areas. The matching of newly qualified nurses to vacancies is best handled at local level. In addition the Employment Service, through its jobcentres, can advertise vacancies for any occupational group in any locality on its national computer network provided that they are notified by employers.

Legal Aid

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the savings in the financial year 1993-94 which will result from the changes he has announced in financial elegibility for civil legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The purpose of the proposed changes announced on 16 November is to ensure the continuation of reasonable access to legal aid for the most needy, while at the same time taking action to control the rate of growth in legal aid expenditure. The proposed changes are expected to reduce forecast expenditure on civil legal aid by between £2 million and £3 million in 1993-94. Expenditure on civil legal aid is, however, expected to continue to increase.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of people who were granted civil legal aid in 1992-93 who would not have been granted legal aid if the changes in financial eligibility being introduced from 1 April 1993 had been in force in 1992-93

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposed changes would not have affected the number of those eligible for civil legal aid. However, some people who did not pay a contribution would have been required to do so and those who did would have had to pay an increased contribution.

Oral Contraceptives

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will retain all the oral contraceptive brands currently listed for prescription.

Mr. Stewart: Changes to the range of oral contraceptive available on national health service prescription will be made only on the recommendation of the advisory committee on NHS drugs. The committee will ensure that all the real clinical needs of patients continue to be met.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the joint geological investigation relating to the Skye bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has made arrangements to have a copy of the factual report from the joint geological investigation lodged in the Library. The designers will collate the various volumes of the factual report as quickly as possible.

Heritable Property

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the disposal of heritable property which he regards as no longer required as for civil defence purposes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The Government's policy towards the disposal of such properties is set out in chapter 32, paragraph 1 of "Government Accounting", which requires Departments to ensure that they obtain the best possible price so as to protect the taxpayers' interests.

Civil Defence Facility (Anstruther)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors influenced his decision to offer for sale the civil defence facility at Anstruther.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: In view of the continuing reduction in the threat of attack on the United Kingdom the Government have concluded that it is no longer necessary to retain a number of sites containing special protected administrative centres known as regional government headquarters or zone headquarters. Anstruther is one such site.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums have been spent on the civil defence facility at Anstruther in each of the last 10 years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The Scottish Office Home and Health Department have spent the following sums on the running costs and maintenance of the civil defence facility at Anstruther.

1992-93	70,000
1991-92	90,000
1990-91	100,000
1989-90	75,000
1988-89	70,000

Note: Information for previous years is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what value has been placed by the district valuer on the civil defence facility at Anstruther currently being offered for sale.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The district valuer advised that the minimum open market value for sale purposes could be fairly stated at £25,000, but that given the right conditions at the date of sale a sum in excess of that figure might be realised.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations which he consulted before offering for sale the civil defence facility at Anstruther.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: No such organisations were consulted before the civil defence facility at Anstruther was offered for sale.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he made of the historical significance of the civil defence facility at Anstruther before offering it for sale.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The Scottish Office notified the Royal Commission for Ancient and Historic Monuments of Scotland, which made a photographic record of the property.

Population

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in Scotland, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures expressed in numbers and as a percentage of relevant population.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The latest estimates are those for mid-1991 set out in the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 26 October 1992, Official Report, columns 527-30. The Registrar General's mid-1992 population estimates will not be available until July 1993. Electoral registration figures for 1993 will be available in April 1993.

Motorways

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway in Scotland are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned either (i) as completely new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: In Scotland there are 154 miles of trunk road motorway and a further 15 miles of non-trunk motorway, responsibility for which lies with local authorities.

Twenty-one miles of new motorway is currently under construction with a further 63 miles of new motorway planned.

Much of the motorway network constructed in the 1960s and 1970s is reaching the end of its structural life and requires major maintenance or reconstruction. Some of this work may involve widening.

Council House Sales

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what calculations underlay his estimate of the amount to be gathered from council house sales receipts in 1993-94 in Edinburgh district.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer of 5 February 1993]: The provisional estimate of capital receipts on Edinburgh district council's housing revenue account block in 1993-94 is £17·860 million, including £15·061 million from the sale of council houses under the right to buy.

The estimate of RTB receipts has been compiled by multiplying the expected number of RTB sales—1,141—by the expected average RTB selling price of £13,200. The number of RTB sales has been derived by applying a take-up percentage—68 per cent.—to the number of RTB applications—1,678—expected to be made to the district council during the period from 1 October 1992 and 30 September 1993. The expected number of RTB applications to be made during this period is based on the of such applications—859—made between 1 April 1992 and 30 September 1992 which has been grossed up to an annual basis taking account of seasonal variations. The expected average RTB selling price and the take-up percentage are projections of the trends in such factors for the district council in recent years.

The provisional estimates for 1993-94 will be reviewed before the end of March in the light of representations received from local authorities and in the light of the latest available information on RTB trends.

ENVIRONMENT

Education and Personal Social Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing standard spending assessments for education and personal social services for each relevant authority for 1993-94 relative to 1992-93, disregarding in the case of personal social services the effect of community care changes, and showing in the case of education the effect of change in pupil numbers.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have today placed in the Library two tables containing the following information:

(i) The standard spending assessment (SSA) for 1992-93, that for 1993-94 and the difference between the two in £ million and as a percentage change;

(ii) The SSA element for education in 1992-93 adjusted for those functions which will no longer be the responsibility of local authorities in 1993-94, particularly further education, the education SSA for 1993-94 and the difference between the two in £ million and as a percentage.

For 1993-94 expenditure on community care will be funded by means of a special transitional grant. It is not possible to show the effects of changes in pupil numbers because of the changes in function between 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources he proposes to make available to local authorities to enable them to implement the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Any additional costs to local authorities arising from the provision of public information under the Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1993 will be de minimis. Local authorities are already required to maintain emergency planning procedures and adequate resources for this purpose are provided in the local authority finance settlement.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each regional water company the number of tests carried out by the drinking water inspectorate, for the last year for which figures are available, and the pass rate for each test for each company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Water companies are required by the Water Quality Regulations to take samples of the water they supply and to analyse them. The drinking water inspectorate checks the manner in which companies carry out this function but it does not carry out tests itself. Information on the quality of drinking water supplied by each company in England and Wales during 1990 and 1991, including that sought by my hon. Friend, is contained in the annual reports of the chief inspector, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 26 January, about correspondence from his Department on urban programme funding, how many circular letters to all eligible authorities were sent between 15 October and 13 November.

Mr. Robin Squire: I wrote to each local authority on 13 November 1992 explaining the new arrangements for the urban programme in 1993-94.

Housing

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of the extent of overcrowding in (a) owner-occupied property and (b) low-cost home ownership schemes.

Mr. Baldry: Current information is available from surveys relating measures of space to household size and composition, but this has no statutory force.

The most recent figures available come from the 1991 labour force survey housing trailer which uses a criterion, widely used in surveys, of one bedroom for:

- each married couple;
- any other person aged 21 or over;
- each adolescent aged 10 to 20 or pair of adolescents if of the same sex; and
- each pair of children under 10

The LFS housing trailer shows that in 1991 an estimated 3 per cent. of owner-occupier households in England had fewer bedrooms than indicated by this criterion.

No reliable information is available separately on overcrowding of households in low-cost home ownership schemes.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes there have been in the proposed allocation of moneys held back from the scheme to allow housing associations to purchase homes since his statement announcing the scheme.

Mr. Baldry: About £427 million of the £577 million allocated to the Housing Corporation in the autumn statement to enable housing associations in England to purchase new, empty, repossessed and second-hand homes was allocated in November to 27 selected "zoned" housing associations.

The remainder was held back in order to make further allocations reflecting the success of these housing associations in meeting the objectives of the package and to allow other associations to come forward with proposals offering exceptional value for money. Further allocations were made on 13 January; 28 "non-zoned" associations received allocations worth some £28 million.

About half the initial allocation was targeted on London and the south-east. In the second tranche this proportion was increased to three quarters, in recognition of the particular difficulties of the property market in this region.

Council House Sales

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 December 1992, Official Report, columns 296-300, what was the number and value of council house sales by region for the latest available quarters (a) at current prices and (b) at 1981 prices.

Mr. Baldry: The latest available information, which is for the period July to September 1992, is given in the table. The table also gives updates of the figures for the April to June quarter given previously. These figures exclude some 12,300 dwellings, valued at about £120 million, transferred from Bromley borough council to Broomleigh Housing Association in April 1992.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publicise the effects of the changes being made to the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill currently before Parliament amends the Transfer of Undertakings Regulations to bring them into line with the EC acquired rights directive, by removing the distinction between commercial and non-commercial undertakings. It is not the case that the amendment has the effect of extending the regulations to the public sector. My Department's view remains that the regulations will not normally apply where local authority services are contracted out, that is, where a private company contracts to provide a service in consideration of a fee. Such a transaction does not normally, in our opinion, involve the transfer of an undertaking within the meaning of the regulations.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recruitment of a chief executive designate for the proposed urban regeneration agency.

Mr. Redwood: The main aim of the urban regeneration agency will be to secure the reclamation and reuse of vacant, derelict and underused land and buildings in urban areas. It will also promote land reclamation nationally and encourage the provision of industrial and commercial premises in areas of need. We want the agency to begin this important work as soon as is practicable after the enactment of the Housing and Urban Development Bill which provides for its establishment. To this end, we intend shortly to advertise the post of chief executive. Subject to the enactment of the Bill, the successful candidate will be appointed as chief executive by the agency when established. Lord Walker of Worcester, who will be the agency's first chairman, will play a leading role in the selection process. Pending enactment of the Bill expenditure on the recruitment exercise, estimated at £60,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund. Repayment to the fund will be made from the Department of the Environment administration vote (class VIII vote 8).

Earth Summit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made in Britain in the past eight months in implementing the agreements of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is working towards ratification of the climate change convention and to establish the basis for ratification of the convention on biological diversity by the end of 1993. We intend to publish national action plans on biodiversity, the climate change convention and for the implementation of the forest principles and submit a report on sustainable development to the new UN Commission on Sustainable Development on the same time scale.

Local Authorities, Suffolk and Norfolk

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the timetable for the Local Government Commission's review of Suffolk and Norfolk local authority areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: We intend that the Local Government Commission should review Suffolk and Norfolk in separate reviews in the fourth tranche of its work programme. It is too early to give a firm estimate for the starting dates of the later reviews, but it is likely that those of Suffolk and Norfolk will be started in 1995.

Farm Houses (Council Tax)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to alter the council tax banding status of farmhouses from residential to business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

Waste Incinerator, Stockton

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the reasons for refusal of permission for Northumbrian Water to construct a waste incinerator at Portrack in Stockton-on-Tees, and the submission made to the inquiry inspector by Cleveland county council in respect of the same.

Mr Maclean: Yes. I am arranging for a copy of the decision letter issued on 2 November 1992 to be placed in the Library. While Cleveland county council made no submissions to the site-specific inquiry for the Portrack incinerator appeal, the council did submit evidence to the plenary session of the linked inquiries of which the Portrack inquiry was part. I will arrange for a copy of the council's submissions to the plenary session to be placed in the Library.

City Challenge

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he will apply to the 1991 census data in choosing candidates for the third round of city challenge; what are the current criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have yet to receive the results of research based on 1991 census data which will help to inform future decisions on urban policy, including setting the criteria for the choice of candidates for a possible third round of city challenge. The current city challenge areas are included in the list of urban priority areas which was drawn up following the 1981 census and amended in the light of subsequent information about urban needs.

Coventry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what concrete financial assistance he plans to offer the residents of areas in Coventry which experienced disturbances in 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The financial assistance available from my Department is not distrubuted on the basis of the location of disturbances. However, Coventry will continue to benefit from a range of housing and inner city programmes. Additionally, we are currently considering a bid from Coventry under the urban partnership fund.

New Earnings Survey

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown) of 27 January, Official Report, column 765, what were the sample sizes used in the new earnings survey for each county council and the Scilly Isles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 4 February 1993]: I have place in the Library a table showing, for each local authority, the total sample size in the New Earning Survey for those occupational groups used in the calculation of the area cost adjustment. The occupational groups included are those thought to be most relevant to the labour markets in which local authorities operate. Because of the need to standardise the results to avoid any distortions which might otherwise arise from differences in the mix of occupations between different local authorities, average wages are calculated for each of 16 occupational groups. The effective sample sizes used in the detailed calculations are, therefore, much smaller than those shown in the table. These samples are too small to allow reliable estimates to be made for individual counties.

Council Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision exists for registered disabled people living in adapted accommodation to receive a reduction in their valuation band in cases where the property is already in band A.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 4 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms. Anderson) on 5 November 1992, Official Report, column 370.

Council Tax

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage collection rate for the council tax the Government are assuming for the operation of transitional relief.

Mr. Robin Squire: The scheme assumes a collection rate of 98 per cent.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Draft letters are not submitted to Ministers, but for information purposes they receive a copy of the chief executive's reply once it has issued and prior to the parliamentary question being answered.

Fair Employment Tribunal

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the ruling of the president of the Fair Employment Tribunal, on the disclosure of documents to the Fair Employment Commission in the cases of McKernan v. DoE and McConnell v. Police Authority for Northern Ireland, will be appealed; and on what date the Commission will be given the relevant documents in the McConnell case.

Mr. Mates: There was no appeal in the case of McKernan v. DoE. In the case of McConnell v. Police Authority for Northern Ireland, a requisition to state a case to the Court of Appeal was lodged with the Fair Employment Tribunal on 14 January 1993.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Visas

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which member nations of the European Community have statutory appeal procedures comparable with those currently in force in the United Kingdom concerning appeals from persons refused visitor's visas to the respective states.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None of the other member states of the European Community has an independent, specialised immigration appeals system.

Prison Construction

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in favour of construction of more prison space to accommodate offenders for whom custodial sentences are appropriate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No formal representations have been made, but, from time to time, we are approached by companies interested in the construction of new prisons.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many warrants he has signed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 for each year since 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the annexes to the reports of the Interception of Communications Commissioner for 1990 and 1991—Cm. 1489 and Cm. 1942.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those who, other than himself, are empowered to sign warrants to intercept communications.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By virtue of section 4 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985, warrants may be issued only under the hand of the Secretary of State or, in an urgent case where the Secretary of State has expressly authorised its issue, under the hand of an official of his department of or above the rank of Assistant Under-Secretary of State. In practice, warrants are usually issued by the Home Secretary, the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland or the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Alcohol (Licensing)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were made in the last year for (i) new licences, (ii) the renewal of licences and (iii) for the transfer of licences to sell alcohol for consumption off the premises; and what proportion of these were (a) approved, (b) approved subject to conditions and (c) rejected.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Provisional figures show that in the year ending 30 June 1992 in England and Wales, there were 2,136 new applications for licences to sell intoxicating liquor for consumption off the premises, of which 1,712 —80 per cent.—were granted. Information about the number of applications for the renewal or transfer of off-licences is not collected centrally. Licensing justices have no power to attach conditions to the grant of an off-licence.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost to the public administration, including the cost of licensing justices and policing of operating the system of licensing for premises selling alcohol for consumption off the premises and of the compliance costs for businesses involved with the operation of this system.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As to compliance costs, a fee of £12·50 is payable on the initial grant and subsequent triennial renewal of an off-licence. The other information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what public appointments he has made since 1 November 1992; and what information he has on the political affiliations of those appointed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Details of all the appointments for which the Home Department has been responsible since 1 November 1992 could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. Information about the appointments for which the Home Department was responsible last year up to 30 September 1992 is given in "Public Bodies", a copy of which is in the Library. Information on the political affiliations of those appointed is not sought by my Department.

Naturalisation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 861, if he will place in the Library a comparative description of the processes and qualifications used in each member state of the European Community in respect of applications to them for naturalisation from citizens of non-member nations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Yes. I will place in the Library the information available to me about naturalisation procedures in the member states.

Ram-raiding

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to take to reduce the incidence of ram-raiding.

Mr. Jack: Encouraging owners and car manufacturers to make cars more secure—thus reducing the opportunities for vehicle related crime, including ram-raiding —is a central feature of the Government's car crime prevention strategy. At a local level, police crime prevention officers are always ready to provide retailers with specialist advice, drawn from their own experiences and that of the Home Office crime prevention centre at Stafford, on what measures they can take to protect their premises against this type of offence.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Chief executives of agencies within my responsibility reply direct on matters delegated to them, although it is, of course, open to them to seek my advice before replying.

I have the opportunity to see the replies when they are published in Hansard.

Prisoners

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what purpose category subsections A: high risk and A: exceptional risk were introduced; and how many prisoners there have been in each category to date;

(2) how many categories of security there are within category A; and for how long there has been no more than one subsection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are three levels of escape risk classification for category A prisoners: standard, high and exceptional. This arrangement was introduced in its present form in 1988 in order to assist operational management. On 31 December 1992, there were 558 category A prisoners in custody. Of these, 457 were classified as standard escape risk, 79 as high escape risk and 22 as exceptional escape risk. Information on the numbers of prisoners held in each escape risk classification since 1988 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time prisoners spend in each of the A categories.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the capacity of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority to cope with fire, emergency and other demands on their time in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The standard of service provided by the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority was examined in the course of an inspection of the service by Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services between 25 and 29 January 1993. My right hon. and learned Friend will want to examine carefully the report of that inspection, which will be published later this year. It is for the authority, in the light of its standard spending assessment and the intended criteria for designation for council tax capping, to set a budget for 1993-94 which will allow it to comply with its duties under the Fire Services Act 1974, and with the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover.

Betting Shops

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what means were used to gather comments from interested parties in response to his Department's consultation document of October 1991 on evening opening of betting shops; who responded; and how many submissions were received in responding to each of the issues highlighted in paragraph 28(i)—(vi) and paragraph 29(i)—(ii) (a)—(c).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A press release was issued on 14 October 1991 announcing the issuing of the consultation document. Copies of the document were made available to the press. Some 58 copies of the document were sent direct to various interest groups such as the police, local authority associations and bodies representing the horseracing, greyhound and bookmaking industries. In addition, copies were made available to inquirers on request. In those cases where organisations had not responded by the closing date, they were contacted and invited to consider responding.

The details of the representations received were as follows:

Period 14 October 1991 to 18 January 1993

Paragraph reference in consultation document	Subject	Number of responses
28(i)	Views on effects on excessive gambling	17
28(ii)	Views of local authorities on effect of planning controls	8
28(iii)	Views of police and licensing authorities as to whether evening opening would cause them any practical difficulties	9
28(iv)	Views of the horseracing industry	6
28(v)	Views of bookmakers	202 (plus 1 petition with 204 signatures and 1 survey with 439 respondents)
28(vi)	Views of the greyhound racing industry	369 (plus 3 petitions with over 2,000 signatures)
Others	Include employees, members of the public and letters where correspondents' interest not identified	381
29(i)	Whether opening hours should be entirely left to the discretion of each business	48
29(ii)(a)	Whether the latest permitted closing time should be specified	32
29(ii)(b)	Whether evening opening should be allowed on Monday to Friday only, or only on certain days	18
	Whether evening opening should be allowed all year or only for certain months	15

Fire Regulations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to implement new fire regulations as required under the EC framework and workplace minimum requirements; and what plans he has to amend the regulations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to issue revised proposals for Fire Precautions (Places of Work) Regulations and associated guidance for consultation in the summer. This will enable him to consider any comments which he has received and to make the regulations to take effect on or after 1 April 1994.

We have already decided to exclude from the regulations all premises which are occupied only by the self-employed because they are not subject to the directives, and we are considering what other changes should be made.

Police Restructuring

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had or proposes to have with the Merseyside police authority with regard to proposals to restructure police forces and police authorities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has not held discussions with individual police authorities. He is considering what reforms in police organisation and structure may be needed and will announce his proposals as soon as possible. The interested parties will be consulted before final decisions are reached.

Safer Cities Project, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the future of the safer cities project in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I have received written representations on the future funding of the Bradford safer cities project from the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer), from the chairman of the steering committee of the project and the chair of the community safety strategy group of Bradford city council.

As I explained in my statement of 7 January, Home Office grant funding to 16 of the existing 20 projects, including Bradford, will be reduced from £250,000 to £100,000 in 1993-94 and will end in March 1994. This will release funds for the new phase of safer cities. Some additional funding will be available in 1993-94 from a central budget of £500,000 to assist work aimed at leaving in place satisfactory continuing arrangements for the maintenance and development of local multi-agency crime prevention work.

Although safer cities funding is to come to an end after March 1994, there are other sources of Government funding for crime prevention. Bradford is one of the city challenge pacemaker authorities, and has formulated extensive community safety proposals in its action plan. I understand that more than £390,000 is being spent on a wide range of activity, which is beginning to have a real impact on crime prevention in the challenge area.

There is also a local drugs prevention team in Bradford, which has a budget of £75,000 per year for grant aid to local drugs prevention projects.

Drug Problems, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with organisations in the Liverpool area in respect of ways of combating drug problems; what proposals he has put forward for central Government assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: A drugs prevention team was set up in Liverpool in December 1990 under the Home Office drugs prevention initiative and continues to work with the local community in finding effective ways of preventing the spread of drug misuse.

In May 1992 I visited the team to launch the educational video which they have produced in conjunction with the "Brookside" television company. During European Drug Prevention Week in November I visited again, to talk to local business people about drugs prevention in the workplace, to open the drugs prevention fayre at the Everyman theatre, and to speak to local drugs prevention workers.

The Home Office provides £75,000 a year to the team to spend on grant aid to local agencies and groups engaged in drugs prevention work and £10,500 to spend on prevention publicity. These budgets have been supplemented considerably by private donations and sponsorship and some 60 projects have been undertaken to date. We also provided an extra £15,000 for specific drugs projects in the Liverpool area during European Drug Prevention Week.

A steering committee of representatives from organisations in the local community, including statutory and voluntary drugs services, the local authority, police and the chamber of commerce, supervise the work of the team. I announced recently that the life of the team, like the other teams set up under the drug prevention initiative, would be extended to March 1995.

Prison Populations

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the total prison population in each EC country, including the United Kingdom, and the United States of America in 1979 and 1992 respectively; what proportion that number formed of the total population; and how many of that number were young offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 2 February 1993]: Information for EC countries has been collated by the Council of Europe only since 1983; and the latest available information published by them relates to 1 September 1989. The data requested for these two years can be found in "Prison Information Bulletin" No. 2, table 1; and No. 14, table 2. A copy of both documents are in the Library.

Data on the total prison population in 1979 are given in an article in issue No. 15 of the above publication; and more recent information has been collected independently from some EC countries and from the USA. These data are given in the table.

An article on "International comparisons of prison populations" by Collier and Tarling—Home Office research bulletin No. 23, pages 48 to 54—showed that the figures for different countries are unlikely to be strictly comparable because the definitions of prisons and prisoners vary from one country to another, reflecting different legal and administrative systems. Examples of differences in the definitions are the inclusion or exclusion in a country's figures of juvenile offenders and mentally disordered offenders.

WALES

Certificate of Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated entrance number of pupils for the current certificate of education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: So far, 9,436 candidates have been entered for the certificate of education in 1993. Candidates may still be entered up to the date of the examination.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money will be allocated for extension and rebuilding work at each college of further and higher education in Wales during the next three years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: From 1 April 1993 the Further and Higher Education Funding Councils for Wales will assume responsibility for providing funds for extension and rebuilding work for institutions of further and higher education. The funding councils have yet to announce their allocations to institutions for 1993-94.

Wages

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average wage of employed persons in Wales for each of the last 14 years; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European average.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is given in the table. Comparable figures for Europe as a whole or the European Community are not available.

Average gross weekly earnings of full time employees in Wales whose pay was not affected by absence for the survey pay period.

Unfit Dwellings

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of unfit dwellings in (a) local authority and (b) private ownership for each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: The data requested are not available. Information about levels of unfitness is being obtained through the current Welsh house condition survey. The results will be published after the survey is complete at the end of the year.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has concerning the number of workers in Wales holding more than one paid occupation; and if he will make a statement on how these are counted in his calculation of the number of employed people in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The summer 1992 labour force survey shows an estimated 45,000 people in Wales with a second job, either as an employee or self-employed.

The Employment Department's employer-based surveys count jobs, not people. The labour force surveys provide estimates of the numbers of people employed in Wales.

Nitrogen Dioxide (Monitoring)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites for monitoring nitrogen dioxide there are in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is one site at Cardiff at which nitrogen dioxide is measured continuously. In addition, current Government surveys involve regular measurements at more than 100 sites throughout Wales.

"2002 Horizon"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the implications for Wales of the European Commission plan, "2002 Horizon", outline programme for a trans-European road network; and what discussions on the plan he has held with officials of national parks in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The proposals for a trans-European road network are indicative only, and are being considered by member states. Plans for developing the road network in Wales are set out in the 1992 supplement to "Roads in Wales". My right hon. Friend and I have made it clear that our plans will not include upgrading the A5 through Snowdonia to motorway or dual-carriageway standard, and we have not discussed these proposals with national park officials.

Smoke and Sulphur Dioxide Discharges

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the implementation in Wales of EC directives on smoke and sulphur dioxide discharges.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: EC directive 80/779/EEC, setting air quality standards for smoke and sulphur dioxide, is implemented in Wales and the rest of the United Kingdom by means of the Air Quality Standards Regulations—SI 1989 No. 317; copies are held in the Library of the House.

Government monitoring indicates that the limits set under the directive are not being exceeded in Wales.

Derelict Land

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much industrially derelict land has been reclaimed in Wales since 1990; and what methods have been used.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 1990 a total of 3,127 acres of industrially derelict land have been reclaimed in Wales through schemes funded by the Welsh Development Agency. Reclamation methods vary from site to site depending upon the nature of the dereliction and the site's proposed end use.

Construction

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of construction in Wales in each quarter of 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh index of construction is available for the first three quarters of 1992. Taking the average quarterly output in 1985 to be 100, the levels were 143·1, 141·3 and 136·1 in the first three quarters of 1992 respectively.

John Bennett and Keith Wilson

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 454, on what date the fraud squad arrested John Bennett and Keith Wilson.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the police.

Drug and Alcohol Misuse Centres

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on residential drug and alcohol misuse centres since April 1992; and how many such representations have expressed concern about future funding arrangements.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have received 25 such representations, all of which have expressed concern about future funding arrangements.

Opportunity 2000

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effects upon female employment in Wales of the Opportunity 2000 scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Opportunity 2000 is a Business in the Community initiative, which receives support from the Welsh Office. It was launched in Wales in May 1992. At the end of the first six months 13 Welsh employing organisations had taken up membership, but it is too early to assess the impact the initiative is having on female employment.

Voluntary Sector Organisations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings or communications he has had with the Wales Council for Voluntary Action in regard to the level of grant provision by his Department to voluntary sector organisations.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. However my officials maintain close links with the Wales Council for Voluntary Action on many issues relevant to the voluntary sector, including funding, and will continue to do so.

Women (Business Incentive Schemes)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what incentive schemes his Department sponsors in Wales to assist women to establish their own businesses.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Support for women who wish to establish their own business is provided by the training and enterprise councils and our strategic guidance to them stresses the importance of advancing equal opportunities to help people realise their potential. TECs tailor their provision to meet local needs. Local enterprise agencies also offer help to people setting up in business.

The department also supports initiatives such as the Chwarae Teg/Fair Play consortium and Opportunity 2000, both of which aim to expand the role of women in the work force.

Job Creation

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards), Official Report, 1 February, column 3, if he will provide a breakdown by company of the 12,690 jobs created.

Mr. David Hunt: Regional selective assistance is intended to aid companies carry out industrial projects which will create or safeguard jobs. Details of individual projects are however, a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from local authorities concerning the allocation of revenue support grant for the coming financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from 13 local authorities on settlement related issues. The Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1993-94 and The Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (Wales) 1993-94, which set out my settlement proposals for the coming year, were approved by the House on 8 February.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make changes to minerals planning policy guidance note 3 in relation to Wales, in the light of current reviews of opencast mining proposals.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, announced on 15 July 1992 the Government's proposal to bring forward for public consultation draft revised planning guidelines on coal extraction generally. The intention is to proceed to public consultation as soon as practicable once the results of the coal review have been announced.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish his White Paper on local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I propose to publish my White Paper shortly, but not until after a further meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government on 17 February.

Railway System

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail concerning the future of the railway system in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend regularly meets Sir Bob Reid to discuss a wide range of Welsh rail issues. The most recent of these meetings was held on 7 September.

NHS Staff (Redundancies)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of redundancies among NHS staff for each year since 1989-90, dividing the figures by region.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Capital Programme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer on 1 February, Official Report, columns 2-3, what proposals he has to use a global settlement framework for the construction of the Pen-y-Clip tunnels on the A55; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are no such proposals.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 2-3, to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards), if he will give the corresponding figure for the total value of capital expenditure projects starts in 1991-92, 1992-93 and his estimate for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: Information for all project starts is not available. Details of the planned major project starts for the central Government roads, transport grant, hospitals and arts programmes and for the Welsh Development Agency, in 1991-92 and 1992-93 are set out in the long-term projects tables appended to votes 2, 5 and 8 of the relevant supply estimates booklets for Wales—HC 236-XVI and HC 373-XVI—and in "Roads in Wales", 1992 supplement.

Equivalent information for 1993-94 will be available from the 1993-94 supply estimates and the 1993 supplement to "Roads in Wales."

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 2-3, if he will provide equivalent budget details derived prior to April 1992, for the capital programme for 1992-93 for (a) local authority gross capital expenditure, (b) his Department's roads and transport, (c) his Department's health and hospitals including NHS trusts, (d) Housing for Wales, (e) the Welsh Development Agency and (f) the European regional development fund.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Gross capital expenditure plans for 1992-93 within the responsibility of and allocated by the Welsh Office, for:

	£ million
(a) Local authority gross capital	[1]631
(b) Central Government roads and transport	178
(c) Health	137
(d) Housing for Wales	127
(e) Welsh Development Agency	122
(f) European Regional Development Fund	3

[1] The 1992-93 forecast for gross capital expenditure by local authorities (£631 million) is not comparable with that for 1993-94 (£620 million) because the 1993-94 figure excludes:

(i) the provision for further education (which has been transferred to the central Government programme) and
(ii) the separate provision made for ERDF grants.

PCB Contamination, Pontypool

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the results of the study by the university of East Anglia into polychlorinated biphenyl levels in the Panteg area of Pontypool.

Mr. David Hunt: In line with the contract with my Department, I expect the university of East Anglia to report to me shortly. I shall publish the university's findings as quickly as possible thereafter, as soon as I have had an opportunity to consider its conclusions and the advice of my special adviser for this project, Professor Lewis Roberts.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) number of properties, (b) their square footage and (c) the rental income in the ownership of the Welsh Development Agency in each of the last five years in (i) the Bridgend constituency, (ii) the Ogwr district, (iii) Mid Glamorgan and (iv) all other counties.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the Welsh Development Agency. I have arranged for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Operation Wizard

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 771, if he will give the total sum in consultancy fees paid by the Welsh Development Agency under Operation Wizard to each of (a) Barclays de Zoete Wedd, (b) Outram Cullinan and Co. and (c) Touche Ross;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 771, if he will place in the Library copies of the terms of reference agreed for the consultancy work done for Operation Wizard by (a) Barclays de Zoete Wedd, (b) Outram Cullinan and Co. and (c) Touche Ross.

Mr. David Hunt: I have asked the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Gentleman.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Dorrell: A provisional list of regulations which impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Cigarette Duty

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conclusion the October 1992 ECOFIN meeting reached on the cigarette duty structure; and how this is reflected in the Council and Commission minute statement on the target rates set out in the amended proposal for a Council directive (9776/89 fisc 167).

Sir John Cope: ECOFIN agreed that from 1 January 1993 the minimum excise duty incidence on cigarettes would be 57 per cent. of the retail selling price, inclusive of all taxes, of the price category most in demand. This agreement is reflected in the Council's adoption of directive 92/79/EEC.

The Commission's original proposal for cigarette taxation had envisaged a target rate towards which member states' rates would converge over time. In Council discussion of the proposal, it was agreed that the target rates would be retained for reference purposes only. In the joint statement for the Council minutes it was agreed that member states would take account of them each time they amend national rates of duty, but there is no obligation to move towards them.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he proposes to take to follow up the concerns expressed in the minutes of the October 1992 ECOFIN meeting that the agreed formula for cigarette tax harmonisation would perpetuate the wide tax differentials in the EC.

Sir John Cope: In the run-up to the first review of the structure and minimum rates of tobacco duties, which is due not later than 31 December 1994, we shall monitor any evidence of distortions of trade within the EC and will fully consult the tobacco industry. We have made it clear that we would prefer an EC cigarette duty structure incorporating a minimum cash duty and a greater reliance on the specific duty share.

We are also taking every opportunity to encourage low-tax member states to increase their tobacco taxes on health grounds. For example, during the United Kingdom presidency of the Community we held a seminar in London for health and tax officials which produced useful conclusions on the support that tax can give to health policy.

Football Pools

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer by the Secretary of State for National Heritage of 2 February Official Report, column 109, if he will make it his policy to reduce the regime for tax on football pools to the level of tax to be imposed on the national lottery, subject to agreement that the funds given back are dedicated to the Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

Sir John Cope: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's decision on the taxation of the national lottery.

Alcohol and Tobacco (Taxation)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has for the financial year 1993-94 of the losses to the revenue arising from the disparities in taxation on alcohol and tobacco in the other countries of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: We have no reason to change the estimate given in the 1992 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" that in 1993-94, there will be a total revenue loss to the United Kingdom Exchequer of around £250 million from increased cross-border shopping. This arises from the abolition of duty-paid allowances within the EC from 1 January 1993.

Offshore Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the loss of capital gains tax revenue by the use of offshore trusts; and what steps he is taking to investigate the extent of this loss and to correct it.

Mr. Dorrell: I remind the hon. Member that in 1991 the Government introduced a comprehensive system for the taxation of those setting up, and receiving benefits from, offshore trusts. In introducing these measures in his Budget Statement, the Chancellor indicated that this was designed to prevent a revenue loss of up to £100 million in a full year. These measures were welcomed by the Opposition. The Government will keep these provisions under review to ensure that the objective of a fair and comprehensive system of taxation in this complex area continues to be met.

Pensioners (Income Tax)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners pay income tax; how many pay at 40 per cent; and how much is raised in direct taxation from pensioners' incomes.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that, in 1992-93, 2·9 million individuals aged 65 or over will be liable to income tax. Of these 0·1 million will be liable at the higher rate. The total income tax liability of people aged 65 or over is estimated to be just over £5 billion.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his reponsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Portillo: Chief executives of the executives agencies for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor is responsible are authorised to reply directly on matters delegated to them.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to allow companies exporting to the EC 30 working days to submit their statistical declarations to the VAT offices.

Sir John Cope: The maximum time limit of 10 working days for submission of statistical declarations is set by EC regulation. The United Kingdom was successful in negotiating an improvement from the Commission's original proposal of five working days.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many cases serious misdeclaration penalties were levied in respect of claims of VAT relief on bad debts before the 12-month holding period was up; and what was the total size of those penalties in the last four financial years.

Sir John Cope: I regret that this type of information on the reasons alleged by traders for incurring serious misdeclaration penalty is not recorded.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Chief executives reply direct on matters of operational responsibility delegated to them. Their replies are, therefore, primarily a communication between the chief executive and the Member of Parliament who asks the question. Unless a chief executive chooses to ask me for advice on an operational matter, I never clear or check the detailed replies given by chief executives in answer to parliamentary questions.

The Lord Chancellor and I receive copies of chief executives' letters once the letters have been sent to Members of Parliament and we have the opportunity to see them when they are published in Hansard, unless their personal or confidential nature precludes their publication in this way.

Debt Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) of 18 November, Official Report, column 225, what improvements to court procedures for debt recovery are to be made; how they will be implemented; and by what date.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Both the Lord Chancellor and I are committed to a programme of reforms aimed at simplifying and streamlining debt recovery procedures. In my answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central on 25 January, I described many of the initiatives that have been introduced to date. These include the establishment of a computerised summons production centre in 1990 and of the county court bulk centre in March 1992. A package of more general measures was implemented in July 1991. This package included changes to the rules where cases may be commenced, provision for replies to summonses to be sent directly to plaintiffs and the devolution of some formerly judicial functions to experienced administrative staff. These and other reforms introduced in July 1991 are currently being evaluated and any improvements to procedures as a result of the evaluation will be implemented later this year. Most recently, in October 1992, reforms were made to the small claims procedure.

Further changes are planned. For example, it is recognised that the small claims limit, doubled to £1,000 in July 1991, is still relatively low. The limit will, therefore, remain under review with the intention to propose an increase as soon as practicable. Changes to the way in which administration orders are dealt with will be implemented in April 1993 and improvements to oral examination procedures are planned for later in the year. In addition to a forthcoming series of leaflets which explain the various methods of enforcement, it is intended to introduce a guidance leaflet which focuses specifically on the recovery of business debts through county courts.

Before the implementation of any significant changes to court procedures, there is always wide consultation. Courts, court user organisations, the judiciary, the legal profession and others are all given the opportunity to comment and their responses are carefully considered before any changes are introduced. Court staff are provided with training about the changes before they are introduced, and publicity material explaining the changes is produced for court staff and court users.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Correspondence

Mr. Austin Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the constituent of the hon. Member for Woolwich who has not been permitted to leave India and about whom the hon. Member for Woolwich wrote to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 21 January.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I replied on 8 February to the hon. Member's letter of 21 January about his constituent. Mrs. Kaur has been invited to call at the high commission in New Delhi to collect her entry clearance.

Israel

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States of America on the appropriateness of using sanctions against Israel to ensure compliance with United Nations Security Council resolution No. 799 regarding the Palestinian deportees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has discussed the deportations with the new United States Secretary of State. We do not believe that sanctions would be helpful at this stage. They would not help our main objective which is to secure the resumption of the peace negotiations.

Human Rights

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what applications by British citizens have been made to the European Commission on Human Rights regarding the imposition of customs fines and subsequent imprisonment for non-payment on those imprisoned in France.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No such applications have been communicated to the Government by the European Commission on Human Rights.

Council of Ministers (Filming)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to recommend that cameras be permitted access to all future Council of Ministers meetings and to ad hoc council meetings including those of the Trevi group.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government will support proposals by the presidency for further open sessions of the Foreign Affairs Council or of other specialist Councils. For example, the ECOFIN Council on 15 February will begin with an open session. But all Council members must agree before any such arrangements apply. These arrangements only apply to European Community institutions. Intergovernmental co-operation—such as Trevi—is a different matter.

Customs Fines, France

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases have been brought to his attention of British citizens being held in French prisons and refused parole due to imposition of customs fines.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Two since 1991. But there are 213 British citizens detained in France of whom 93 are serving sentences for drugs offences. Some three quarters of these are known to have customs fines. The exact number of those serving time in prison for non-payment of customs fines is not known, but we believe there are at least 13.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is given to British citizens who are detained in French prisons and to their families in regard to the imposition of customs fines and imprisonment for non-payment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Information on the French system of customs fines is included in the leaflet "Detainees in France" sent in advance of the first consular visit to each detainee. If a person is convicted and a customs fine imposed he or she is told of the possibility of negotiating a reduction of the fine and that the organisation Prisoners Abroad may be able to help in gathering together the necessary documents.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the French authorities about the imposition of customs fines on British citizens imprisoned in France.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. The imposition of customs fines is a matter for the French authorities alone. The fines are applicable to all nationalities including French.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has employed Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte and Capita Management Consultancy in support of its market testing programme. The total cost so far has been £27,000. The Overseas Development Administration and the Natural Resources Institute have employed Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte and KPMG management consultants at a cost so far of £23,000.

Immigration Section, Islamabad

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the new immigration section at the British post in Islamabad is due to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The new immigration section in Islamabad is due to be completed in September this year.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Croatia in respect of the attacks launched by Croatian forces in the Krajina in contravention of the cease fire agreement; and what response he has received.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Our ambassador in Zagreb delivered a démarche to the Croation Government on 25 January and the Croation ambassador was called to the Foreign Office on 26 January. We have also supported a condemnatory statement by the UN Security Council and the EC presidency message to President Tudjman. In response, the Government of Croatia claimed that the attacks were a limited action to secure specific strategic locations. President Tudjman has since made it clear that Croatia will withdraw her troops from the newly recaptured territory only if the Krajina Serbs return their heavy weapons to UNPROFOR control and disband their militias.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the precise measures required of the Serbian Government in order to end sanctions against them.

Mr. Garel-Jones: United Nations Security Council resolution 752 of 1992 calls on all parties to the conflict to meet various requirements. These include a number which Serbia has clearly not yet met, or exercised enough pressure on the Bosnian Serbs to meet—for example, disbanding of irregular forces in Bosnia; an end to forcible expulsions of populations; and ensuring that deliveries of humanitarian aid are not hindered. UN Security Council resolution 757 of 1992 requests the UN Secretary-General to keep the sanctions under continuous review, with a view to suspending or terminating them when Serbia and Montenegro had complied with UNSCR 752. The Edinburgh European Council made it clear that if there were a radical change of policy and genuine co-operation in the peace process, Serbia would be gradually readmitted to the international community.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 1 and 2 February.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council from 1 to 2 February.

The council began with a debate on the Danish presidency's work programme. For the first time a substantive item of Council business was taken in open session, with television cameras present. It thus put in practice an important part of the conclusions of the Edinburgh European Council on openness. In the debate I stressed the importance of making progress on enlargement and on strengthening the Community's relations with central and eastern Europe. I also reiterated the need for a peaceful solution in former Yugoslavia and for a rapid conclusion to the Uruguay round.

In the margins of the Council, EC and Austrian, Swedish and Finnish Foreign Ministers launched new accession negotiations. These, too, were held in open session. Much of the preparatory work was carried out during the United Kingdom presidency.

The rest of the Council was held in closed session. The Danish Foreign Minister briefed the Council on Denmark's plans to hold a conference in Copenhagen in April to discuss developments in central and eastern Europe, Albania and the Baltic states. The Council agreed a mandate for the Commission to negotiate amendments to the European Economic Area agreement following Switzerland's decision not to participate.

The presidency reported on its meeting with the Presidents of the European Parliament and of the Commission which marked the start of negotiations on inter-institutional agreements on subsidiarity and budget discipline. The Council discussed the appointment of Commission Vice-Presidents and remitted this for further examination by the Committee of Permanent Representatives. It continued its discussion of a Commission proposal to change the decision-making procedures for Community anti-dumping and other Commercial Defence measures. It also reviewed the Commission's mandate for the negotiation of a new international cocoa agreement. The Commission reported to the Council on the prospects of concluding the Uruguay round rapidly with the new US Administration and other GATT parties. The Council discussed the US decision to impose new duties on steel imports and invited the Commission to undertake consultations in Geneva on possible GATT action.

Ministers discussed latest developments in the former Yugoslavia and issued statements supporting the peace proposals put forward by Lord Owen and Mr. Vance and welcoming the report by Dame Anne Warburton on the treatment of Muslim women. Ministers deplored the recent outbreak of violence in Zaire and the death of the French ambassador in Kinshasa.

A Co-operation Council with Israel was held in the margins of the Council. Ministers reiterated their support for the peace process and their condemnation of Israel's deportation of more than 400 Palestinians. An EC association agreement with Romania was signed in the margins of the Council.

ENVIRONMENT

Light Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he is planning to the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 with respect to minimising light pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Light pollution ia a rather vague term for the indiscriminate use of lighting. The Government's general approach is to encourage economy in the use of light energy and to discourage the nuisance that can be caused to neighbours by over intensive lighting systems.

This issue is one of several included in a recent consultation paper "Temporary uses of Land, External Lighting and Miscellaneous Amendments to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988", responses to which are currently being considered.

Refrigeration Technology

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking to encourage British companies to develop ozone-friendly refrigeration technology following the German prototypes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government welcome any development of safe ozone-friendly refrigeration and is seeking to encourage chlorofluorocarbon users to switch to suitable alternatives as quickly as possible.

Council Tax

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the total cost of collecting and administering the council tax as a percentage of the expected yield.

Mr. Redwood: Although local authorities have yet to set their budgets, I would expect collection costs for the council tax to be under 5 per cent. of budgeted yield.

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of people likely to be employed in collecting, administering and valuing property, respectively, in order to implement the council tax.

Mr. Redwood: The administration and collection of the council tax will be carried out by local authorities and their agents. This Department does not have records of the numbers of staff employed on these tasks.

The banding of property has been carried out by the Valuation Office agency—VOA—and contracted private sector companies. The total cost of the banding exercise will be some £70 million. Some 512 private sector firms were contracted to carry out banding work under the supervision of the VOA but the Department holds no record of the number of private sector staff involved. To date, some 565 man years have been spent on the banding exercise by the VOA.

Opencast Mining

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now take steps to suspend the planning permission granted for the Bleak House opencast site in Staffordshire until his review of the coal industry is completed.

Mr. Baldry: Once the Secretary of State has given his decision on an appeal, he has no further jurisdiction in the matter. The coal review is, of course, being conducted by the Department of Trade and Industry.

Coalite Chemicals Plant

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the survey of dioxins in soils in the area around the Coalite chemicals plant near Bolsover in Derbyshire will be released.

Mr. Maclean: The report is nearing completion and will be released as soon as reasonably practicable.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the impact on the future standard spending assessments of local authorities of projections of future population structures.

Mr. Robin Squire: Standard spending assessments are calculated using the latest information available compiled on a consistent basis for all relevant authorities. For 1993-94 the assessments are based in part on estimates of population size and age structure relating to 30 June 1991 prepared by the Registrar General. Projections of population size and age structure for each local authority relating to a more recent period are not available on an equivalent basis and it is not possible, therefore, to assess their impact on future assessments. However, trends in population size and structure at the national level are taken into account with many other factors in determining the level of spending which the Government consider is appropriate for all authorities to incur in any one year.

Housing Repossessions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council homes sold under the right-to-buy legislation have been repossessed in each region in each year since 1989.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not hold the information requested.

National Sustainability Plan

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to include sectoral targets for environmental quality within the national sustainability plan.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom has promised to report on a sustainable development plan by the end of 1993 to the new United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development. The Department is currently consulting on the report and decisions on scope and content will be taken later.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Howard: Chief executives of agencies within my responsibility reply direct to parliamentary questions on matters for which they have delegated operational responsibility. Normally such replies are not seen in draft by me or my ministerial colleagues, but we see copies after they have been sent by the chief executives.

Housing and Urban Development Bill

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria will apply to authorities wishing to be included in the 1993-94 programme for housing disposals, as proposed in the Housing and Urban Development Bill; what will be the size of the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My Department is today writing to all housing authorities, other than those which have already disposed of their housing, inviting them to apply if they wish to be considered for a place in the 1993-94 disposals programme. Applications should be received by Friday 19 March.

The Department's expenditure estimates for the three years of the public expenditure survey make provision for the costs of housing disposals. A sum has been provisionally allocated within the overall totals for these years which would allow for the transfer of about 25,000 houses in the first year's programme under the new provisions, assuming that the average exchequer costs of disposals remain broadly similar to those which have taken place in recent years. Larger programmes may be possible in later years.

I set out below the policy guidelines we propose to adopt for the first programme. The benchmark size for disposal applications will be between 3,000 and 4,000 properties, with preference being given to transfers at and below the lower end of this range. In particular circumstances, for example when an authority with large stocks is making a split disposal, transfers exceeding this benchmark will be considered, subject to an overriding limit of 5,000 properties in any one disposal to a single landlord or linked associates. It will be for transferring authorities to determine the ways in which they split their stock.

For the first year, disposals will be accepted for the programme only if they are to be made to registered housing associations. In assessing whether the disposal contributes to diversity of ownership in an area, consideration will be given to whether the recipient organisations are existing registered housing associations, or associations newly formed for the purposes of the disposal.

Proposals for transfers to associations associated within a group structure will be considered on their merits and in the light of the overall housing strategy for the area. There will be an overriding proviso that members associated in a group structure may not together acquire more than 5,000 properties from any one local authority.

Authorities accepted for inclusion in the 1993-94 programme will not be expected, while they remain in the programme, to continue to prepare their housing management function for compulsory competitive tendering—CCT—in respect of the properties to be transferred. Should a transfer not take place as planned during 1993-94, the authority will be expected to comply with the statutory requirements for housing management CCT and to make the necessary preparations.

For disposals accepted for the 1993-94 programme, it is intended that the existing discounted cash-flow method will continue to be used to determine the transfer price of the stock. Rent guarantees will be a matter for local discretion, but should not exceed five years. As with past transfers, purchasing associations will be expected to fund the transfer wholly from private sector sources.

In considering the acceptability of a proposed disposal for inclusion in the programme, the Secretary of State will take into account the estimated Exchequer costs of that disposal, and whether a majority of the tenants who would be affected by the disposal are in his opinion likely to oppose it. In reaching an opinion on the second of these issues, he will take account of any relevant systems an authority may have for consulting its tenants, and any planned exercises for further tenant involvement. He will also take into account the criteria set out in section 34(4A) or section 43(4A), as appropriate, of the Housing Act 1985.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be making an announcement in due course on the arrangements that will apply to disposals in Wales.

Landfill Costs

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the report commissioned by his Department last year on landfill costs and pricing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have today published a report commissioned by my Department from Coopers and Lybrand on "Landfill Pricing: Correcting Possible Market Distortions".

We indicated in the 1992 environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance: the Second Year Report", Cm. 2068, that we would in future make a presumption in favour of using economic instruments rather than regulation to achieve environmental objectives. This report forms part of the Government's programme of work to explore the use of economic instruments in environmental policy. It also constitutes a preliminary response to a recommendation by the advisory committee on business and the environment that the price of landfill should be increased substantially.

The report examines current and projected waste disposal costs; assesses the impact of introducing a levy on waste going to landfill; and considers ways of implementing it. It predicts that landfill costs will rise substantially before the year 2000 even in the absence of a levy. It concludes that the introduction of a levy would be feasible. Its main effect, in the longer term, would be to increase the incentive to send waste to incinerators rather than landfill, but it would also make materials recycling more commercially attractive.

We are considering the findings of the report, along with those of a parallel study of "Economic Instruments and the Recovery of Resources from Waste", published by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry in December 1992. My Department is inviting comments on the landfill levy report by 26 March 1993.

I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Eastbourne

Q10. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to make another official visit to Eastbourne.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Railways (Capital Investment)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish an analysis of the economic and employment effects of £500 million extra capital investment in railways compared with the same sum spent on supporting deep coal mining.

The Prime Minister: The economic and employment effects of £500 million extra capital expenditure on the railways would depend on the nature of the investment and on its economic return. The effect of spending the same amount on supporting deep coal mining would depend on the industry's ability to exploit the opportunity for subsidised sales in the market circumstances it faced. In either case, account would of course need to be taken where the money would be found as well as how it would be spent.

Public Inquiries

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to ensure co-operation between the Department of Trade and Industry and Department of Transport in respect of public inquiries into harbour revision orders and on energy policy; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is normal practice for the Department of Transport to consult other Departments, where appropriate, in respect of proposals for the making of harbour revision orders.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Prime Minister what current discussions are taking place with the Government of the Republic of Ireland about the events of February 1970 involving the Government of the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions are taking place with the Government of the Republic of Ireland on state-sponsored terrorism.

The Prime Minister: The Government are fully committed to close co-operation with the Government of the Republic of Ireland against all forms of terrorism which threaten our two countries. Both countries are in regular contact on matters of mutual concern.

Departmental Library

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will obtain for his Office's library a book, the title of which has been supplied to him by the hon. Member for Linlithgow.

The Prime Minister: My office has a copy.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 9 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badgers

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current estimate of the badger population in the United Kingdom; and what is the source of this estimate.

Mr. Soames: It is currently estimated that there are about 250,000 adult badgers in mainland Britain. The source of this information is "The History, Distribution, Status and Habitat Requirements of the Badger in Britain" by Cresswell, Harris and Jefferies (1990), commissioned by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will suspend the culling of badgers pending completion of his Department's review of controlling bovine tuberculosis.

Mr. Soames: I have no plans to do so.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what public appointments he has made since 1 November 1992; and what information he has on the political affiliation of those appointed.

Mr. Curry: Since 1 November 1992, my right hon. Friend has made 56 appointments or re-appointments to the bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Appointments are generally made on the basis of suitability, merit and expertise; details of political affiliation are not held centrally.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what current scientific data his Department has on the transmission by badgers of bovine tuberculosis to cattle.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davis) on 19 January 1993, Official Report, column 209.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his Department is currently reviewing existing policy on the control of bovine tuberculosis in Britain; when he expects that review to be completed; and if he will place a copy of the review in the Library.

Mr. Soames: There is at present no call for a fundamental review of control measures for bovine tuberculosis because these depend largely on community requirements and because they have been outstandingly successful in reducing disease to its current very low level. The Department is considering the possible role in our control strategy of a test to detect disease in live badgers. It is not possible to say when this process will be complete because it depends on continuing scientific studies.

Disadvantaged Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the (a) percentage of the less-favoured areas flock in the severely disadvantaged areas, (b) percentage of the less-favoured areas flock in the disadvantaged areas and (c) the total less-favoured areas flock in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) England and (iv) Northern Ireland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Curry: The information in respect of the number of sheep on which hill livestock compensatory allowances payments were made is as follows:

Year	Scotland			Wales			England			Northern Ireland
	(a)	(b)	(c)	(a)	(b)	(c)	(a)	(b)	(c)	(a)	(b)	(c)
1979	36	—	2,943	34	—	2,805	26	—	2,158	4	—	358
1980	35	—	2,991	34	—	2,890	26	—	2,231	5	—	383
1981	35	—	2,993	34	—	2,946	27	—	2,292	5	—	407
1982	35	—	3,147	34	—	3,011	26	—	2,356	5	—	428
1983	35	—	3,205	34	—	3,058	27	—	2,425	5	—	427
1984	35	—	3,251	33	—	3,102	27	—	2,468	5	—	483

1990	29	1	3,676	27	6	4,141	23	5	3,462	6	2	986
1991	30	1	3,750	27	6	4,137	23	5	3,425	6	2	993
1992[1]	29	1	3,684	28	7	4,219	23	5	3,418	6	2	1,018

Notes:
(a) Percentage of sheep receiving HLCAs at rates applicable in the severely disadvantaged areas (or the corresponding area before the extension of the less favoured area in 1985).
(b) Percentage of sheep receiving HLCAs at rates applicable in the disadvantaged areas.
(c) Total number of sheep ('000) receiving HLCAs.
(x) Less than 0·5 per cent.
Percentage figures may not always total 100 per cent. due to roundings.
[1] Provisional.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received, and what discussions he has had, about continuing CAP reform compensatory payments after CAP reform has been phased in; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The CAP reform agreement reached in May 1992 agreed levels of compensatory payments over a three-year period up to and including the 1995-96 marketing year. In the longer term, I believe that compensation for support price reductions should be phased out over a fixed period.

Live Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what lairage facilities are available at each ferry port to cope with ferry delays caused by adverse weather;

(2) how many officials involved with the inspection of live exports he has at Dover; and what percentage of live animal transporters have been inspected along with the relevant animal health documents since 1 January;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that inspection procedures at each port are carried out by licensed veterinary inspectors according to consistent guidelines;

(4) what facilities his Department has for inspecting live animal exports that use night ferries; and how many staff are on duty.

Mr. Soames: The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 places a duty on the transporter to ensure that suitable arrangements for the care of animals are made in advance of any journey and that the arrangements include plans to deal with any disruptions. In respect of sailings from British ports to ports in other member states, facilities to rest, feed and water animals exist within a reasonable distance of each ferry port in Great Britain.

In the single market, Community law does not permit systematic checks on livestock at the Community's internal frontiers. However, it is entirely in accordance with EC law that checks take place to ensure that animals are healthy and being transported in conditions that protect their welfare. At Dover, state veterinary service (SVS) staff liaise closely with the Dover harbour board animal watch scheme staff who operate a continuous quayside cover. The SVS is also available on a 24-hour basis. For journeys to other member states local veterinary inspectors, appointed by the Government, are required to certify the health of the animals and their fitness to travel. These inspections take place either at the place of origin or where the journey commences.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many late applications for suckler cow premium in respect of 1992 he has received to date.

Mr. Curry: The number of late applications received to date under the 1992 suckler cow premium scheme is 1,181.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agiculture, Fisheries and Food how many late applications were received for suckler cow premium in respect of 1990 and 1991; and how many of these were (a) paid in full, (b) paid in part and (c) refused.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

	1990	1991
(a) Paid in full	0	3
(b) Paid in part	149	147
(c) Refused	16	22
Total	165	172

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many suckler cow premium application forms were processed during each month of 1992; and what was (a) the shortest period and (b) the longest period to elapse between receipt of the application and payment of the claim.

Mr. Curry: The number of applications processed in 1992 is as follows:

	Number
January	4,354
February	3,195
March	1,850
April	233
May	92
June	109
July	299
August	440
September	547
October	401
November	1,442
December	4,057

The information on the shortest period and the longest period to elapse between receipt of the application and payment of the claim could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Farmers and Farm Workers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (1) farm workers and (2) farmers in (a) less-favoured areas, (b) severely disadvantaged areas and (c) disadvantaged areas who (i) also did other jobs or (ii) claimed income support in each year since 1985.

Mr. Curry: The table shows, for 1985, 1987 and 1990 the number of farmers (occupiers) and other family workers on main holdings in less-favoured areas in England who also had other paid work. Data are only available for these years as the source is the EC farm structure survey which is held every two or three years. Separate figures for severely disadvantaged and disadvantaged areas are not available for 1985. There is no information on farmers or workers claiming income support.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Curry: The chief executives of agencies within the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food reply directly to questions on operational matters delegated to their agency in its framework document. Drafts of such letters are not shown to Ministers but Ministers do, of course, have the opportunity to see letters when they are published in Hansard.

Eggs

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further advice he has on salmonella in eggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government are today publishing the report of the advisory committee on the microbiological safety of food (ACMSF) on "Salmonella in Eggs". It provides a valuable assessment of the role of eggs as a source of human salmonella infection, taking account of knowledge gained in the past few years. I am grateful to Professor Heather Dick and her committee for their work.

The committee considers that while eggs must be regarded as an important source of human salmonella infection, the contribution they make to current levels of human salmonellosis cannot be quantified precisely. Only a small percentage of eggs are considered to be contaminated with salmonella enteritidis and studies have shown that the number of organisms they contain when laid is very low. The Committee therefore makes a number of recommendations for the storage and handling of eggs which it believes will help limit the chances of salmonellas multiplying and so further reduce any risk of salmonella infection from eggs. To this end, it recommends that eggs should be consumed within three weeks of lay and that use-by dates should be provided on egg packs and the eggs themselves; that industry and retailers should draw up codes of practice for the shortage and handling of eggs; and that once purchased, eggs should be stored in a refrigerator. The report also advocates the use of pasteurised egg in dishes containing egg which are eaten raw or lightly cooked, and endorses previous advice by the Chief Medical Officer that people should avoid eating raw eggs and vulnerable groups should eat only eggs that have been cooked until the yolk and white are solid.

The Committee noted the decline that had taken place in the number of large commercial egg laying flocks in which salmonella enteritidis infection had been confirmed since control measures were introduced in 1989. It recommends that the Government should review the continuing need for the compulsory slaughter of laying flocks infected with salmonella enteritidis and in consultation with industry, update existing codes of practice for control of salmonella in laying flocks. It also recommends the formation of a liaison team to monitor the industry's progress in reducing the incidence of salmonella in poultry. Finally, it considers that periodic surveys should be undertaken to monitor trends in salmonella infection in eggs and identifies topics for future research.

The publication of the ACMSF report is timely in relation to the recent adoption by the Council of Ministers of the EC Zoonoses Directive (92/117/EEC) laying down harmonised rules for the control of salmonella in poultry. This was an important achievement during the United Kingdom presidency and the Government intend bringing its existing measures for the control of salmonella in poultry into line with those required under the directive as soon as possible. Breeding flocks of domestic fowl comprising 250 or more birds will be required to be tested every two weeks by the owner with official samples being taken every eight weeks. Flocks found to be infected with salmonella enteritidis or salmonella typhimurium would continue to be compulsorily slaughtered. The directive does not include harmonised measures for the control of salmonella in commercial egg laying flocks. Having considered the findings of the ACMSF report the Government consider there is no longer a need to monitor laying flocks and to require the compulsory slaughter of those found to be infected with salmonella enteritidis.

The Government accept the committee's other recommendations and will now consult with industry, consumers and enforcement bodies on their implementation. Detailed proposals for implementing the recommendations of the ACMSF report and for implementing Directive 92/117/EEC are set out in a consultation document which is today being sent to all interested organisations for their comments. A copy of this document together with the ACMSF report, and the Government's response is being placed in the Library of the House. Egg industry and other organisations are already being consulted about possible changes to the EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations which cover date marking and recommendations about storage facilities.

The Government are committed to firm but proportionate action against salmonella. Our approach is based on co-operation of Government, the poultry industry, food manufacturers and retailers and consumers, taking account of the latest expert advice and of developments in the European Community. I believe that this package of proposals provides continued protection for the consumer of egg and egg products while avoiding disproportionate burdens on producers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Country Houses Association (Exhibition)

Mr. Lord: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Country Houses Association to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 8 to 12 March 1993.

Special Views of Newcastle (Exhibition)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Special Views of Newcastle" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 8 to 12 February 1993.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Waldegrave: The chief executives of the agencies for which I am responsible normally reply direct on matters delegated to them. Copies of their replies are brought to Ministers' attention where appropriate.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to reply to Mr. Eric Christopher-Walsh of Modbury, Devon, who wrote to him on 16 November.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter unit replied to Mr. Christopher-Walsh's letter on 7 December 1992. I have since replied to a follow-up letter from Mr. Christopher-Walsh, and written to my hon. Friend on the matters that it raised.

Charter Programme

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West, (Mr. Banks) Official Report, 25 January 1993 column 704, if he will provide a breakdown of the charter unit's spending in 1991-92.

Mr. Waldegrave: During 1991-92 the charter unit spent £1·6 million on the following:

The launch of the Citizen's Charter, including producing, publicising and distributing the Citizen's Charter White Paper (Cm 1599) and the Guide to the Citizen's Charter	916,000
The launch of 1992 Charter Mark scheme	320,000
Staff, general administrative expenses and capital expenditure	364,000

Science and Technology

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Government expect to publish their White Paper on the future of science and technology in the United Kingdom; what will be the consultation period for that White Paper; and what will be its remit.

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper will set out the Government's policy on science, technology and engineering. I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) on 7 December at column 466.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to extend the next steps programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: To date, 76 executive agencies have been launched. The 30 executive units of HM Customs and Excise and the 34 executive offices of the Inland Revenue are also operating fully on next steps lines. Over half the civil service is now working in organisations covered by the programme. A further 29 activities employing almost 70,000 civil servants have been identified as candidates for executive agency status. It is my aim that by the end of this year all the candidates for agency status will have been identified. These candidates will be announced to the House by the appropriate departmental Minister in due course. It is my expectation that by mid 1995 around 75 per cent. of the civil service will be working in organisations operating on next steps lines.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a charter setting the maximum period for Government Departments to reply to letters from (a) hon. Members and (b) constituents.

Mr. Waldegrave: Each Department has set its own target for replying to hon. Members' correspondence. A table showing performance against targets for 1991 was published on 3 August 1992, Official Report, column 711; a similar table showing ministerial correspondence in 1992 will be published shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Generation (Costs)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has received the study on the costs of nuclear generation commissioned from Ernst and Young as part of the coal review.

Mr. Eggar: A copy of this report was sent to the Chairman of the Trade and Industry Select Committee yesterday, and a copy of the accompanying letter together with copies of the report, but without its commercially confidential material, has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Civil Servants (Performance Payments)

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to make provision for civil servants to be eligible for bonus performance payments for their work in promoting successfully the programme of deregulation throughout Whitehall.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Civil servants promoting the programme of deregulation are eligible for payments under a departmental scheme which allows the award of special bonuses for exceptional performance.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek to ensure that in future a publicly announced compliance cost assessment will be obligatory when announcing new Government regulations.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since 1986 the Government have placed a general requirement on all departments to prepare and publish compliance cost assessments (CCAs) when developing proposals likely to affect business. Draft CCAs feature increasingly in consultation between Government and business. We are reinforcing our commitment to the CCA process. From now on, as agreed at the Prime Minister's seminar on 2 February 1993, there is a more stringent requirement that a CCA must be published alongside any Government legislative proposals having an impact on business.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement giving details of the progress being made in promoting deregulation throughout the Government.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Prime Minister on Thursday 4 February 1993, Official Report, column 470, in which he outlined the conclusions of his seminar on 2 February. My Department is pressing ahead with the arrangements for the review of the 7,000 regulations which impact on business. We have issued guidance throughout Whitehall on compliance cost assessment, and are instituting arrangements to ensure that these are published for all measures which impact on business. We are beginning to see evidence of success in decisions to review regulatory proposals to minimise the burden these impose on business.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for the Government's deregulation programme to include the requirement of a publicly announced risk assessment when announcing new Government regulations.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: We are encouraging the wider use of risk assessment techniques in determining the need for regulation. This is to ensure that problems are correctly defined and the measures proposed to deal with them are correctly targeted and in proportion. We shall consider my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Coal Industry (Report)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask he President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the report on the coal industry prepared by European public policy advisers for the European Parliament and given to him on 14 January.

Mr. Eggar: I understand the report is a factual summary of the Community coal industry. The report is, however, a matter for the European Parliament.

Owners Abroad (Takeover)

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the proposed take over bid by Airtours for Owners Abroad.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading is currently investigating this proposed merger and he will advise the President of the Board of Trade in due course. A decision on whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be taken once that advice is received.

Colliery Closures (Job Losses)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for Scotland, Wales and England the number of jobs lost through colliery closures since June 1987, the total number of registered unemployed in the constituencies concerned from June 1987 and December 1992 and the percentage changes.

Mr. Eggar: The information is given in the table:

	Registered unemployed in constituencies where collieries have closed		Change	Jobs lost through colliery closures since
	June 1987	December 1992	Per cent.	June 1987
England	158,405	136,791	−13·6	22,530
Wales	32,657	26,912	−17·6	5,072
Scotland	23,526	17,752	−25·4	2,180

Notes:
1. The constituencies listed are those where closures of coal mines have been identified. Colliery employees would not necessarily have resided in the same constituency.
2. The number of jobs lost through colliery closures may not reflect jobs lost in the run-down prior to closure.
3. The figures do not include reductions in employment at coal mines which remain open.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if staff can be transferred or seconded between central policy divisions and agencies without internal recharges.

Mr. Eggar: Yes.

CONVER Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the CONVER programme of the EC has been approved; whether the United Kingdom Government have given it approval; and what total sum in pound sterling and ecu has been recommended for the programme by the European Commission.

Mr. Sainsbury: At the instigation of the European Parliament 130 million ecu (about £100m) was entered into the European Community budget for 1993 for a programme to be called CONVER to assist regions affected by the decline in the armaments industry and the closure of military bases. The Government will give careful consideration to the Commission's proposals for the implementation of this programme when they are received.

Electricity

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Office of Fair Trading will review the retail activities of the regional electricity companies; and when the Office of Fair Trading last reported to him on this matter.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Office of Fair Trading is currently reviewing the retail activities of the regional electricity companies in conjunction with the Office of Electricity Regulation (OFFER) in response to a complaint from a major competitor. The Director General of Fair Trading made a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) in 1982 about the direction and management by the London Electricity Board of its business of retailing domestic electrical goods, spare parts and ancillary goods. The MMC reported to the President of the Board of Trade in March 1983.

Coal

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount of coal won by opencast means that was used for blending with deep mine coal to provide coal of an overall quality acceptable to customers for each of the years since 1983; and if he will express this in absolute terms and as a percentage of total United Kingdom coal production.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry routinely publishes figures for total production of deep-mined and opencast coal in "Energy Trends", but the amounts used for blending are an operational matter for coal producers including British Coal.

Engineering Employers Federation

165. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for a meeting with the Engineering Employers Federation to discuss industrial policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North East (Mr. Leighton) on 8 February 1993, Official Report, column 451.

Business Names Act

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those business names he has approved under the Business Names Act 1985 to include either of the words university or polytechnic.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The following business names including the words "University" or "Polytechnic" have been approved under the Business Names Act 1985:

University Holidays
Liverpool University China Business Consultancy
Somerset University
Eula Wesley University USA

ECGD

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much of the extra £700 million made available for the Export Credits Guarantee Department in 1992 has been allocated.

Mr. Needham: The additional £700 million announced in the autumn statement increased ECGD's capacity to give new commitments of cover. Of the £200 million allocated to the current financial year, nearly half has been used and ECGD anticipate that it will be fully utilised. As the cover relates to the provision of new commitments all of the £500 million allocated to 1993-94 remains available.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department's review of Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for Lithuania will be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: ECGD keeps its position on Lithuania under constant review. However, it is not yet considered appropriate to introduce medium-term export credit cover.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Eggar: The practice in my Department is for agency chief executives to send substantive replies direct by letter to written parliamentary questions on matters which have been delegated to them. A copy of the chief executive's letter is generally submitted to Ministers when they consider the written answer.

Wood Products

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been for each year since 1979, (a) the total volume of and (b) the proportion of total export income represented by export of wood products.

Mr. Needham: The available information is given in the following table. Volume information is not available.

Value of exports of wood products as a proportion of value of total exports

Offshore Oil and Gas

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the advice received by the Nature Conservancy Council and its successor bodies in respect of oil exploitation adjacent to the Bristol Channel, Cardigan Bay, Lyme Bay, Portland Bill, Moray Firth and the Wash; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Lady to the response that I gave to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 28 January 1993, Official Report, column 822.

Environmental Technology

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for how long his Department's environmental technology innovation scheme has been in existence; what is its budget for the current financial year; and what its budget will be in the next financial year.

Mr. Eggar: The environmental technology innovation scheme was launched by DTI and DoE in October 1990 for a three-year period.

Forecast expenditure on DTI's element of the scheme in the current financial year is £1·59 million. The budget allocation for the next financial year has not yet been finalised.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies and organisations which have applied for financial assistance from the environmental technology innovation scheme; how many applications were granted; what was the grant paid for each scheme; how many applications were rejected; and what was the reason for refusal of assistance, in each case.

Mr. Eggar: The environmental technology innovation scheme has attracted 503 initial first stage applications of which 101 have been rejected. To list the companies which have applied and the reasons for rejecting individual applicants would incur disproportionate costs and disclose information which is commercially confidential. However, all applications are considered carefully by my Department's technical consultants and appraised according to their ability to meet the scheme criteria.

One hundred and nineteen applicants have been invited by my Department to submit more detailed second stage proposals, and 141 by the Department of the Environment. Of those who have submitted proposals, the following have been awarded grant:

	Grant £
Companies awarded ETIS grant by DTI
Pollution Control and Measurement Ltd.	58,025
Steel Castings Research and Trade Association	295,500
British Glass Manufacturers Confederation	100,500

University of Leeds	202,789
John Ashworth and Partners	140,890
Autotype International Ltd.	136,337
UKAEA Industrial Technology	264,450
BHR Group Ltd.	289,450
Coates Lorilleux International	211,375
Ciba-Geigy Dyestuffs and Chemicals	206,570
Manchester Airport plc	56,085
PERA International	80,000
Pilkington Insulation Ltd.	42,725
Marston Bentley Ltd.	23,000
ICI Paints	77,550
Shipowners Refrigerated Cargo Research Association Ltd.	14,880
Total	1,770,287

The remaining applicants have either withdrawn, transferred to other schemes or been asked to provide more information.

Coal Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for the last year for which figures are available, how many collieries produced coal which sold for, on average (a) below £35 per tonne, (b) between £35–£40, (c) £41-£45 and (d) £45-£50; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 January 1993]: This is a matter for British Coal.

Furniture (Safety)

Ms. Lynne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the implications of the use of second-hand furniture by the Salvation Army and other charities following publication of his guidelines on fire safety.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 January 1993]: The fire resistance requirements of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988 (as amended in 1989) which will come into force for secondhand upholstered furniture on 1 March 1993, and apply only to transactions involving the "supply" of furniture which takes place "in the course of business" within the meaning of section 46 of that Act. In my Department's view, the simple distribution of secondhand furniture by a charity, in pursuance of its charitable objectives, either free of charge or at a nominal cost only would be unlikely to constitute a supply in the course of business. Shops selling furniture to raise funds for charitable purposes would constitute a business activity.

It is also my Department's view that the furniture regulations do not apply to furniture used, for example, in Salvation Army hostels. However, guidelines for the fire safety of multiple occupancy premises have been issued by the Department of the Environment. My Department has also published two guidance documents—one for suppliers of domestic upholstered furniture, and the other aimed at consumers—explaining the requirements of the furniture regulations and the level of fire protection they provide. These give useful information and the Department would expect that charities will be guided by the fire safety considerations in the interests of those whom they assist.

My Department strongly advises that any charity should discuss its particular position with its legal advisers in the light of all the circumstances of its operation.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account his Department has taken of the "Guide to Compliance Cost Assessment" published by the deregulation unit in relation to the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) (Amendment) Regulations 1992 concerning the letting of furnished accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The compliance cost assessment for the draft amendment regulations was prepared in accordance with the guide to compliance cost assessment published by the deregulation unit and was made available for comment by consultees.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many responses he has had from the self-catering industry on the cost to individual businesses of implementing the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) (Amendment) Regulations 1992; and when he expects to complete his consultations on the regulations.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 February 1993]: Some 30 consultees from the self-catering industry made comments about the costs to individual businesses. The period for consultation on the draft amendment regulations has been completed and the amendment regulations will be laid before Parliament in the near future.

Small Firms

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the measures taken since 1979 to support small firms.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 29 January 1993]: The measures of support for small firms operated by my Department, together with the original dates of commencement, are as follows:

- the Enterprise Initiative Consultancy Scheme (commenced January 1988);
- the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme (commenced June 1981);
- the Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology (commenced early 1988);
- Support for Products Under Research (commenced February 1991);
- Regional Enterprise Grants (commenced April 1988);
- the Export Marketing Research Scheme (commenced 1969);
- Your Business Success (commenced August 1987);
- Graduate Enterprise (commenced November 1985);

My Department also provides funding for development work which aims to benefit small firms and produces a wide range of publications aimed at small businesses.

In 1985 the Government launched the deregulation initiative which aims to reduce burdens on business, particularly small firms.

During 1993 my Department will start support for up to 15 pilot schemes which will provide businesses with a single point of access to information and advice.

From April 1993 my Department will take over responsibility from the Employment Department for funding training and enterprise councils (TECs) to provide a wide range of business support services to help small businesses.

In addition, small businesses can, of course, take advantage of other business support programmes provided for firms of all sizes and by other Departments.

For example, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food runs the farm and conservation grants scheme, which provides grants for renewal or replacement of certain capital items to eligible businesses.

Under the action for cities initiative, the Department of the Environment provides grants and loans to eligible small businesses for a variety of purposes.

The Defence Research Agency, an agency owned by the Ministry of Defence, recently launched "Pathfinder" which encourages industry to come forward with research proposals that meet both the Ministry's needs and firms' own research priorities.

The Rural Development Commission provides assistance to small businesses in certain geographical areas. For example, grants are available to eligible businesses in priority locations for converting disused and redundant buildings into premises for providing jobs, or for ensuring that the infrastructure is adequate for work space; and small amounts of grant are also available for marketing consultancy and for attending trade shows and exhibitions.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Garrett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the voluntary testing scheme for smoke detectors containing radioactive isotopes imported from third world countries.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 4 February 1993]: I have no plans for changing in the immediate future present arrangements for the National Radiological Protection Board's testing of smoke detectors containing radioactive isotopes.

Electricity Supply Industry

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, col. 58 relating to state aid to the electricity supply industry, if he will give details of the state aid to the energy sector within the United Kingdom as notified to the European Commission.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The energy sector in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, and the electricity sector in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. Within my right hon. Friend's responsibilities, a number of arrangements have been notified to the Commission under the provisions of EC competition law since 1973. Arrangements notified in the course of the electricity privatisation exercise specifically include the state aid inherent in the fossil fuel levy.

Directors (Conduct)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many reports and complaints of the unfit conduct of directors were submitted to the insolvency service in 1991 and 1992; and how many disqualification orders against directors were made in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The figures requested by the hon. Member are:

	1991	1992
Unfitted conduct reports	5,747	6,607
Disqualification orders made	317	409

The figures are not comparable on a year by year basis because of the interval between receipt of an unfitted report and the making, in appropriate cases, of a disqualification order.

Owners Abroad (Airtours Bid)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the possible referral of the bid by Airtours for Owners Abroad to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The Director General of Fair Trading is currently investigating this proposed merger and he will advise the President of the Board of Trade in due course. A decision on whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be taken once that advice is received.

Springram Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much grant assistance has been paid to Springram Ltd. for the construction of the new factory at the Euroway estate in Bradford.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 5 February 1993]: Details of grant assistance for investment projects are treated as commercial in confidence. However, grants of over £75,000 are normally published in the Employment Gazette, together with a brief description of the project, in the quarter following the first payment.

Hospital Radio

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what recent discussions he has had with the National Association of Hospital Broadcasting Organisations about the allocation of a freely radiating FM frequency for use by hospital radios; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish the findings of the hospital radio trial at Radio Redhill to evaluate the possibility of a freely radiating FM frequency for hospital radio use;

(3) if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's proposals to allow hospital radios future access to freely radiating FM frequencies to provide radio services to individual hospitals.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 2 November 1992, Official Report, columns 60-61. I hope to be able to see the National Association of Hospital Broadcasting Organisations in the near future to discuss my Department's involvement in the work of the Radio Authority to evaluate the technical feasibility of hospital radio.

The Redhill experiment showed that although it may be technically feasible to deliver an effective freely radiating FM service within a particular hospital, depending on the nature of the site to be served, signal overspill beyond the site could be significant.

The Radio Authority has the responsibility to determine the priority to give to hospital radio among other possible uses of the radio frequencies available for independent sound broadcasting.

Small Businesses

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the measures he is taking to assist small businesses and individual traders in the light of the current economic climate.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 February 1993]: My Department operates the following measures of support:

the Enterprise Initiative Consultancy Scheme;
the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme;
the Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology;
Support for Products under Research;
Regional Enterprise Grants;
the Export Marketing Research Scheme;
Your Business Success;
Graduate Enterprise;

My Department also provides funding for development work which aims to benefit small firms and individual traders and produces a wide range of publications.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has been charged by the Prime Minister with driving forward a new initiative to cut red tape across Whitehall. The aim of this work is to cut significantly the burdens on business of all sizes, but especially small businesses.

During 1993 my Department will start support for up to 15 pilot schemes which will provide businesses with a single point of access to information and advice.

From April 1993 my Department will take over responsibility from the Employment Department for funding training and enterprise councils (TECs) to provide a wide range of business support services to help small business.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The following consultants have been used at a total cost of £308,000.

Capita Management Consultancy
Coopers and Lybrand
SRU

These private sector consultancies have served to strengthen the Department's market testing capability.

Business Expansion Scheme (Shipping Companies)

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each grant awarded under the business expansion scheme to shipping companies which have subsequently flagged out and replaced British crews with non-British crews.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

The BES provides tax relief for investors and not grants for companies. Information about particular companies in respect of which BES relief has been given is not available.

DEFENCE

Contractors (West Midlands)

11. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the defence procurement budget for the last available year was spent on contractors based in the west midlands.

Mr. Aitken: We estimate that, in 1990-91, about £450 million was paid to contractors based in the west midlands for defence equipment.

Job Transfers

12. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to relocate some additional MoD civilian jobs to Imphal barracks, York, to make use of the office space occupied currently by Army manning and records staff prepared for relocation to Glasgow.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The proposal to establish a new Army personnel centre in Glasgow is the subject of consultation with the trade unions. In the event that we proceed with this proposal all personnel will be offered the possibility to tranfer to Glasgow at public expense. Every effort will be made to find employment for those unable or unwilling to transfer, at other Ministry of Defence establishments or with other Government Departments in the area. Other defence uses of the site will be considered once a final decision has been taken.

Yugoslavia

13. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of United Kingdom operations in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The additional cost of participation to date amounts to some £60 million. The cost of peacekeeping operations will be met by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

24. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the United Kingdom contribution to the UN relief operation in Bosnia.

Mr. Rifkind: As I said in the House on 14 January, we are committed to continuing our contribution to the United Nations humanitarian effort so long as conditions on the ground permit.

Dockyards

14. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Her Majesty's Government expect to make an announcement on the future of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not yet possible to make an announcement on where the refitting of Trident submarines will take place.

We have received offers from Devonport Management Limited and from Babcock Thorn Limited for developing facilities for nuclear refitting at Devonport dockyard and Rosyth dockyard respectively. We are at present concerned that the prices quoted in the offers may significantly understate the likely eventual cost of the work. Before we can decide between them we need to be absolutely sure that we can be confident of the prices quoted. We are not yet in this position.

We shall be scrutinising these offers, and studying other related matters further, before coming to a final decision, which we hope to do as soon as possible.

17. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Rosyth naval dockyard.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government's aim is to achieve a healthy competitive structure to ensure that the future interests of the taxpayer are safeguarded. The Royal Navy will have a continuing and substantial programme of refit work for its surface fleet of frigates, destroyers, carriers, mine counter measure vessels and other ships, as well as its submarine fleet. Although the private shipbuilders can and will continue to do some refit work, they of themselves cannot ensure effective competition. It is through competition that refit prices will provide the best value to the Royal Navy and protect the taxpayer.

As I indicated to the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), the prices quoted in the tenders for nuclear refitting at Rosyth and Devonport may significantly understate the likely eventual cost of the work. The scope and nature of nuclear refitting work are such that it must be allocated to one dockyard. However, for the reasons of competition in other work which I have described, we plan to continue with two royal dockyards.

Transport of Forces

15. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the armed services in transporting forces speedily to any area.

Mr. Aitken: Recent operations have confirmed that our armed forces have the ability to move speedily to any area.

Royal Irish Regiment

16. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current complement for the part-time element of the Royal Irish Regiment; and what were the corresponding figures for the previous three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For security reasons it is not our practice to disclose the complement of any regiment in the British Army however, as at 1 December 1992 the strength for the part-time element of the Royal Irish Regiment (home service) was 136 officers and 2,618 soldiers.

Corresponding figures for 1 December 1991 were 147 officers and 2,855 soldiers, for 1 December 1990, 148 officers and 2,939 soldiers, and for 1 December 1989, 154 officers and 3,283 soldiers.

Defence Lands

18. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he intends to take to improve the management of defence lands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The general arrangements for managing the Defence Estate are working well, but we are always looking for improvements. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence has set in hand a management review.

United Nations Operations

19. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service personnel are currently involved in United Nations operations worldwide.

Mr. Rifkind: As at 1 February there were 3,570 British service men participating in United Nations operations world wide, making us the second largest troop contributor to the United Nations. This figure excludes those operating in association with United Nations operations, such as the Royal Naval presence in the Adriatic and the Royal Air Force contribution to Operation Restore Hope in Somalia.

"Options for Change"

20. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the implication of implementing "Options for Change" for service establishments in Wiltshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some measures have already been announced for establishments in Wiltshire; any further changes will be announced as soon as decisions have been taken.

North Atlantic Treaty Alliance

21. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the future role of NATO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The basis of the alliance's future security policy was set out in the strategic concept issued by the NATO heads of state at a summit in Rome in November 1991. The principles it contains will shape the further development of the alliance's defence policy, operational concepts and force posture.

Trident

22. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of defence expenditure is taken up by the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Trident programme is expected to absorb, on average, less than 2·5 per cent. of the defence budget over its procurement period. The Government consider that Trident represents a highly cost-effective contribution to deterrence.

Nuclear Test Veterans

23. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet a delegation of hon. Members to discuss compensation for nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes, but I see no advantage in doing so until the National Radiological Protection Board has published its updated study. The evidence available to date shows that the total incidence of death and malignant disease among nuclear test veterans has been no worse than among the population in general.

Royal Navy (Amphibious Capability)

25. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the current state of plans to maintain the Royal Navy's amphibious capability.

27. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve the capability of the Royal Navy to conduct amphibious operations.

Mr. Aitken: Evaluation of tenders for the new landing platform helicopter vessel, received in October, will be complete this summer. An order would be dependent upon the outcome of our evaluation of tenders and the competing demands within the defence programme at the time. On completion of project definition studies, invitations to tender are planned to be issued for the first of the replacement assault ships. Design studies are under way for the refurbishment and re-equipment of the three older landing ships logistic.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

26. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Queen Elizabeth military hospital will become available to the national health service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital is being considered as part of a wider review of service hospital requirements, and I am not yet in a position to announce the outcome of the review.

Defence Exports

28. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed by his Department in matters relating to defence exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: In 1993-94 the following staff funded by my Department will be employed on matters relating to defence exports:

	Staff
Export assistance to industry	271
Export policy and control	45

In addition, a further 254 staff will be employed on project management activities financed by overseas customers.

European Fighter Aircraft

29. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the European fighter aircraft project.

Mr. Aitken: The agreement reached by the Defence Ministers of the four partner nations on 10 December means the development of a new fighter, to be known as Eurofighter 2000, will go ahead, though with some changes to adapt the design to the new international situation and to make it affordable to all four partner nations. Deliveries to the RAF are planned to commence in 2000. Officials of the four nations are now discussing with the contractors the precise programme and specification changes necessary to give effect to the ministerial decision.

"Options for Change"

30. Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many compulsory and voluntary redundancies have so far occurred in the armed forces as a result of "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 December 1993, 5,969 service personnel have been selected for redundancy so far, as a result of our restructuring plans for the armed forces. Apart from 227 officers and 127 non-commissioned personnel, all of these redundancies are voluntary.

RAF Greenham Common

Mrs. Chaplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of RAF Greenham Common; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following the withdrawal of the United States forces from RAF Greenham Common last year, and after careful consideration of potential alternative defence uses, we have decided that we have no long-term requirement for the bulk of the site. With the exception of a few small enclaves, which we shall have to retain for the time being due to inspection obligations under the terms of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty, the site will be disposed of.

Discussions have started with the local authorities to establish a strategy for the sale of the site in accordance with the normal planning process. As part of this process we will seek to agree the nature of any development of the site although we envisage that existing open space will be preserved for public amenity.

In addition, we shall seek to return specific assets for the benefit of the local community as quickly as possible. In this connection, we anticipate selling the school complex and Greenham Lodge, with its associated outbuildings, after consultations with the appropriate local authorities. Although we will retain the housing stock associated with the airfield, the surplus barrack block accommodation at Greenham Close is available for sale to meet local housing needs.

Some minor defence activities will occasionally take place at the site until it is sold and the security of the airfield will be maintained for the time being although we hope to introduce arrangements to allow public access as soon as possible.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Aitken: When agency chief executives write to a Member in response to a parliamentary question, which falls within their area of responsibility, they are authorised to do so direct and do not submit drafts to Ministers. A copy of the letter will be passed to the Minister's private office as it goes out.

Departmental Library

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a book, the title of which has been supplied to him by the hon. Member for Linlithgow.

Mr. Aitken: A copy of the book was obtained on 25 January 1993 and is held in the Ministry of Defence library.

HMS Valiant

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on refitting HMS Valiant.

Mr. Aitken: The total estimated cost of refitting work on HMS Valiant (including the current docking and essential defects period) since the introduction of commercial management into the dockyards, in April 1987, is £90 million.

Refitting expenditure prior to April 1987 could be identified accurately only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the deployment of HMS Valiant.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Valiant is currently undergoing routine repairs at Rosyth. It is not our practice to disclose details of the operational deployment of Royal Navy submarines.

Lynx Helicopter

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many attack helicopter aircraft he plans to procure to replace the Lynx.

Mr. Aitken: We recently announced that the invitation to tender for the attack helicopter competition had been issued to potential bidders. The number of aircraft eventually purchased will depend upon the capabilities and effectiveness of the system offered by the successful bidder as well as its affordability.

TRANSPORT

Car Crash, M40

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were in the two cars involved in the crash on the road from Bicester to the M40 at 6 pm on Sunday 10 January; how many wore seat belts; and how many survived.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The accident is being investigated by Thames Valley police. Preliminary reports indicate that there were four people in one car and three people in the other; that six people were wearing seat belts; and that six people survived the accident.

A49-465 Bypass

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the relationship between his Department's current assessment of the comparative construction costs of the A49-465 Hereford bypass (a) published route and (b) western alternative route 1C and the cost assessment stated by his Department in public inquiry document 11/3 on route 1C; if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the components of the cost assessments in each case; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what number of farms would suffer from severance under (a) the published route for the A49-A465 bypass and (b) the western alternative route 1C; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he received from English Nature and its predecessor organisations concerning the relative merits of the A49-465 Hereford bypass eastern or western routes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on Friday 5 February 1993, Vol. 218, column 390.

Bridges (Grouted Duct Tendons)

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy in respect of the use of grouted duct tendons as part of box-girder bridges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department announced on 25 September 1992 that until new standards are available no new bridges using grouted duct post-tensioned prestressed concrete will be commissioned. The announcement covered all types of this form of bridge construction including concrete box-girder bridges.

Bridges which are already being designed are being reviewed on a case-by-case basis and decisions taken whether to continue with the design of the bridge as a post-tensioned structure. Those bridges at an advanced stage of design or under construction when the announcement was made are continuing, although where necessary additional quality control is being adopted during their construction.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to introduce an MOT compliance standard on vehicle emissions based on manufacturers' own conformity of production standards.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: An amendment to the EC roadworthiness directive made last year means that emissions standards may be based either on vehicle manufactures' stated maximum limits or on fixed common limits. This directive will take effect on 1 January next year for vehicles with conventional petrol engines, 1 January 1996 for vehicles with diesel engines and 1 January 1997 for petrol-engined vehicles with catalytic converters. I will consider the hon. Member's suggestion and the Department will consult interested parties with draft regulations implementing the directive.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to bring forward proposals for additional powers to his Department's vehicle inspectorate to enable them (a) to make a visual assessment of smoking vehicles in use on roads and (b) to impose a legal requirement on vehicle owners of a detected smoking vehicle to have the vehicle checked at an MOT testing station following detection.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The vehicle inspectorate's examiners already have the power to assess smoke from a vehicle stopped at a roadside check and to prohibit the use of that vehicle if the smoke is excessive. Such a prohibition can be cleared only when an examiner is satisfied that the emission of smoke has been reduced to an acceptable level and this may require that the vehicle is first inspected at a testing station.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many instances of vehicles emitting excess smoke were reported to each of his Department's area offices during each of the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This information is available for the period from 1 April 1991:

Traffic area	1991-92	[1]1992-93
South Eastern and Metropolitan	636	468
North Western	154	178
Scottish	36	41
North Eastern	86	114
West Midland and South Wales	114	156
Eastern	159	172
Western	298	949
TOTAL	1,483	2,078

[1] April to December.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action has been taken to date (a) to publicise his Department's area offices to whom complaints on vehicles emitting excessive smoke should be made, including contact names and telephone numbers and (b) to publicise the courses of action open to his Department to deal with such complaints.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department of the Environment's leaflet "Wake up to what you can do for the environment", issued in 1990, gave advice on how members of the public could help to tackle environmental nuisance, including reporting excessively smoking vehicles to traffic area offices. We hope that a separate leaflet dealing specifically with smoky vehicles will be issued shortly. This will include the addresses and telephone numbers of the relevant offices and it will also outline what follow-up action is taken in response to complaints.

Incident Detection and Signalling Technology

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to date to secure that (a) the motorway network and (b) the trunk road network in the United Kingdom are equipped with automatic incident detection and signalling technology.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: With only minor exceptions the motorway network in England is equipped with signals. The provision of signalling technology on all purpose trunk roads is governed by safety-related needs.

The installation of automatic incident detection and signalling on sections of motorway where traffic flows are heavy has been approved in principle and a programme for installation is being identified. I have no plans to provide automatic incident detection and signalling technology on all-purpose trunk roads.

A21 (Report)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report from East Sussex county council on the A21.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: East Sussex county council has submitted its report on the study into possible need for further improvements to the A21 trunk road within the county and we are now considering it.

"Good Roads Guide"

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he issued the press release announcing the publication of the "Good Roads Guide"; and on what dates a complete copy of the "Good Roads Guide" was (a) placed in the Library and (b) placed on sale to the general public.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A press release to announce the launch of the "Good Roads Guide" in England was issued on 6 January 1993.

The "Good Roads Guide" is the name given to a collection of nine United Kingdom advice notes for inclusion in the new United Kingdom design manual for roads and bridges. This is a technical publication and copies are not normally deposited in the Library. A limited number of specially bound editions were produced for the press release. These are no longer available.

The nine United Kingdom advice notes will be available for sale to the general public at the end of the month.

London Transport (Capital Investment)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the capital investment at constant prices by (a) London Transport and (b) London Underground, excluding the Jubilee line extension in 1991-92, 1992-93 and planned for 1993-94 and 1994-95 in the 1991 autumn statement and now proposed for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Norris: The table sets out LT's investment plans following the 1991 autumn statement. The investment budgets for London Transport and London Underground Ltd. in the light of the 1992 autumn statement have not yet been decided.

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
LT total excluding Jubilee line extension	370	650[1]	870	830
LUL total excluding Jubilee line extension	310	580[1]	820	765

[1] Latest outturn forecasts.
All figures at 1992-93 prices.

Goods Vehicles

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining his Department's position on proposals for a common EC motorway usage charge for goods vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No such proposals have been made. The Transport Council has, however, been considering a draft directive which among other things sets out the conditions on which individual member states may, if they wish, levy tolls or other user charges on heavy goods vehicles for the use of their motorways. At its last meeting on 21 December the Council was unable to reach any agreement on this draft.

Car Crashes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 February Official Report, column 117, on injury crashes, if he will express the estimates as incidence rates.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Comparable injury accident rates for drivers aged 17, 18 and 19 in relation to the number of full and provisional car driving licence holders in 1991 within these age groups, are available only for Northern Ireland and Great Britain and are shown in the table:

Accident Rates
(Per 100 driving licence holders within each age group)
Accident Rates: Full and Provisional Licence Holders

Age	Northern Ireland	Great Britain
17	1·3	2·7
18	1·9	2·8
19	1·9	2·3
Total (17 to 19)	1·8	2·6

It would have been preferable to calculate rates in relation to mileage, which is a better measure of exposure to risk than numbers of licence holders, but this information is not available.

Variable Message Signs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are currently undertaken by his Department to enhance the usage of variable message signs on the motorway network and non-motorway road network in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The use of variable message signs on English motorways and all-purpose trunk roads has increased in recent years, most notably around the Manchester and Birmingham conurbations. A new design of motorway signal incorporating a variable message capability has been trialled on the M25 and approved for installation on all English motorways that are to be widened to dual four lanes.

My Department is preparing to install a traffic management VMS scheme on roads in Kent comprising the M20 and M26 from the M25 to Folkestone and the A2/M2/A2 route from Dartford—M25—to Dover. Further applications for use of VMS are being considered.

Motorways (Productivity Targets)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to (a) establish clear productivity targets for each United Kingdom motorway and (b) appoint network managers for individual motorways or groups of motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Motorway performance depends on a wide range of factors, including particularly the traffic volumes at the time, maintenance requirements and accidents. Investment is carefully targeted to produce maximum return in reducing delay and accidents, subject to full environmental appraisal. The economic assessment of English motorway schemes continues to produce an overall benefit-to-cost ratio of 2·6:1.

The growing pressures of managing the network of motorways and other trunk roads in England were recognised in the reorganisation of responsibility within my Department in 1990 when regional network management divisions were established.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to establish a target date for all motorways in the United Kingdom to be wholly lit.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not planned to light the whole of the motorway network in England. Lighting is provided, subject to environmental appraisal, where it can be justified on safety grounds, taking account of the savings in night-time accidents.

Concessionary Rail Travel

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 869, if he will list the number of dependants in each of the categories of people listed in his answer who receive (a) free unrestricted travel and (b) restricted concessionary travel.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that no recipients of British Rail staff travel facilities have unrestricted free travel on BR train services. All concessionary arrangements exclude specific services which are subject to heavy public demand.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those categories of people entitled to concessionary (a) unlimited first-class travel, (b) restricted first-class and second-class travel and (c) second-class travel on British Rail services, stating the number in each category and the annual total cost.

Mr. Freeman: The figures requested are not readily available. However, it is estimated that approximately 5 per cent. of British Rail staff are granted first-class travel facilities, excluding use only for specific services subject to heavy public demand.

Garage Equipment

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to require garage proprietors to maintain air lines and pressure gauges in good working order.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. Although it is important that correct tyre pressures are maintained, a new regulatory or other requirement on garage proprietors could not be justified.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Two consultancy advisory commissions have been awarded at a total cost of £26,650 plus VAT.

Mr. R. C. D. Walker, ICI Specialties, was appointed as a consultant to advise on the Department's proposed market testing and contracting-out programme. The appointment commenced on 31 January 1992 and was completed by 31 March 1992.

CSL Group Ltd. was appointed to provide advice for certain customers of the Driver, Vehicles and Operators Information Technology Agency in preparation for changed contractual arrangements resulting from the privatisation of DVOIT. The appointment commenced on 22 January 1993.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to publish the details of the access and charging regime that will apply under his proposals for the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: We have today published a document entitled "Gaining Access to the Railway". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much expenditure he intends to incur under the provisions of the British Coal and British Rail (Transfer Proposals) Act 1993 in preparation for rail privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: None.

British Rail Timetable

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who will be responsible for maintaining services covered by table 51 in the current BR timetable under his proposals for the railways; whether a national railway timetable will be published twice a year as at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Following privatisation it will be for the franchising director to specify the passenger services to be provided by franchisees. His specification will be based on the timetable being operated by British Rail prior to franchising. BR will continue to run passenger services until they have been franchised. Railtrack will be required to ensure the publication of a national timetable. We expect that the frequency of publication will coincide with major timetable changes.

Paddington-Fishguard Rail Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with (a) his opposite number in the Irish Republic and (b) the EC Transport Commissioner in relation to the timing of rail passenger services from Paddington to Fishguard.

Mr. Freeman: I have discussed transport links between the island of Ireland and Great Britain with Ministers of the Irish Republic and the EC Transport Commissioner on a number of occasions. These discussions have not, however, included such detailed matters as the timing of individual rail passenger services.

MV Braer (Oil Spillage)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received arising out of the MV Braer oil incident on the desirability of establishing a tanker exclusion zone.

Mr. Norris: A number of representations have been received calling for tanker exclusion zones in certain areas. This will be covered by Lord Donaldson in his inquiry which in its terms of reference will give due consideration to the international implications of any measures.

Night Flights

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the total number of night flights permitted at Heathrow and Gatwick in the past winter and summer; and what number would be permitted in 1993-94 under the proposals in the recent consultation paper (a) on the assumption that airlines use the same mix of aircraft as in the past year and (b) on the assumption that airlines choose to use quieter aircraft one quota lower than in the past year and assuming also that in the unlimited zero-rated category there are an additional 25 landings plus 25 take-offs per night; and if he will indicate in each case whether the average volume of noise per year will be greater or less than in the past year.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not specify the total number of aircraft that may operate at night at Heathrow and Gatwick. Under the present night restrictions, the noisiest aircraft are not allowed to operate at night except for a small number of delayed departures. The less noisy aircraft may operate subject to quotas, but some aircraft are exempt. At Gatwick, the quotas were 2,250 movements for winter 1991-92 and 5,190 for summer 1992. At Heathrow, the quotas were 3,000 for winter 1991-92 and 2,750 for summer 1992.

The new quota levels proposed for the next five years in the consultation paper are designed to keep the overall noise levels below those in 1988. If the proposed new quotas were used by aircraft counting 1 or more under the new system, in the same mix as flew in summer 1992, the proposed summer quota of 9,000 for Gatwick would translate into 4,900 movements and 7,000 for Heathrow would translate into 2,550 movements. In addition to aircraft currently exempt, there would have been about 1,200 movements at Gatwick during the summer season by zero-rated aircraft—about six a night—and about 400 at Heathrow—about two a night. Even though the mix of aircraft using the new quotas may change, overall noise levels should not get worse.

M62

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the widening of the M62, junctions 14 to 17, included in the national roads investment plans for 1993-94 is intended to form part of the proposed greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. This widening will bring early, but short-term, relief to this busy motorway. Long-term relief would be provided by the proposed greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his assessment of the environmental hazards involved in the transport of radioactive materials by air, assuming a worst-case scenario of an aircraft carrying the highest permitted level of radioactive materials crashing on a main population centre; and what contingency plans are in place to deal with such an emergency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 5 February 1993]: In its report to the Secretary of State in 1988, the Advisory Committee for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material estimated that the consequence of a super-severe accident resulting from a plane crash in a suburban area—1,400 people/km^2—would result in a mean value of very much less than one fatal cancer in 50 years, assuming that no counter-measures were taken.

Following such an accident, the police will activate the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity. Resources available to the police include experts from British Nuclear Fuels plc who are skilled in the handling of plutonium.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many air movements took place in 1992 conveying radioactive materials in or out of (a) Manchester, (b) Liverpool and (c) other north west or northern airfields; what is the highest permissible level of radioactivity in respect of such flights; what was the actual highest level so transported; and what percentage change he expects to the number of such flights over the coming five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The Department does not keep a database of individual movements.

The quantity of radioactive material which may be transported is limited by permitted radiation levels from the type of package and by criticality safety considerations if the material is fissile.

The percentage change in the number of flights in future will depend on commercial considerations.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many movements of radioactive material have been notified to his Department in each of the past five years; and if he will place a list of such movements in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The Department does not keep a database of individual movements.

M4

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the widening of the M4 between London and Swindon to begin.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 February 1993]: A contract for widening to four lanes of the short length of M4 between junctions 4B, M25, and 5, A4, has just been let and work will start shortly. Four other commissions to study the need and options for increasing capacity on the M4 between the M25 and junction 15 are proceeding satisfactorily and we expect to be in a position to start public consultation about further sections in the course of this year. Subsequent progress will depend on the outcome of public consultation and of any statutory procedures necessary and the availability of funding.

M1

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when major repairs between junctions 9 and 10 on the M1 were last completed; why further repairs are now necessary; why such repairs will last from March to December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The last substantial repairs on this section were completed in March 1991 and involved extensive patching to maintain the safety of the carriageway until the proposed widening of the motorway.

The works planned for this year are improvement works to widen the motorway to four lanes. At the same time major maintenance works will be carried out to extend the residual life of the existing carriageway. The extensive nature of these works is reflected in the contract period.

Shipping Routes

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's policy on each of the recommendations of the European Parliament relating to tanker movements made in response to the MV Braer oil incident in Shetland.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The recommendations of the European Parliament relating to tanker movements raise a number of complex issues which can be effectively resolved only through international agreement at the International Maritime Organisation and elsewhere. Matters relating to radar coverage and pilotage will fall within the terms of reference of the inquiry that Lord Donaldson will hold.

Rail Staff (Deaths)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the numbers and circumstances of deaths at work of rail staff over the past five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers of fatal accidents to railway and contractors staff for each year since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Number
1987	16
1988	16
1989	18

Year	Number
1990	22
[1]1991-92	17

[1] This report covers a 15-month period 1 January 1991 to 31 March 1992.

Details of the circumstances of the deaths are given in the annual reports on railway safety in Great Britain for each year. Copies are available in the House Library.

SCOTLAND

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to prohibit Caledonian MacBrayne from running a vehicle-carrying ferry between Kyle of Lochalsh and Kyleakin following the completion of the Skye bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will not permit Caledonian MacBrayne to provide such a service. At the time when it became necessary to introduce new vessels on the Kyle of Lochalsh-Kyleakin service in 1991, approval was given by the Department on the basis that, when the bridge was completed, the ferry service would be withdrawn and Caledonian MacBrayne would redeploy the vessels elsewhere in the network.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his policy will be, following construction of the Skye bridge, towards the existing piers at Kyle of Lochalsh and Kyleakin (a) in respect of allowing vehicular access to the piers for the purposes of (i) enabling regular vehicle-carrying ferry service to operate in competition with the bridge and (ii) providing an emergency vehicle-carrying ferry service at times of emergency closure of the bridge and (b) in other respects; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no authority over the existing Kyleakin pier which is owned by the Highland regional council.

(a) (i) should a private vehicle ferry service wish to operate between Kyle and Kyleakin, an operator could do so providing the necessary approvals and licences were obtained and the appropriate facilities were available.

(ii) as the bridge will be open at all times, except on occasions to high sided vehicles, there will be no need for an emergency vehicle ferry service.

(b) The Scottish Office are co-operating with Highland regional council to develop a package of measures aimed at improving the environment and amenity in Kyle to make the maximum use of the opportunity offered by the Skye bridge.

European Year of Older People

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the events organised by, or with the co-operation of, his Department for the European Year of Older People; what arrangements he has made for informing and involving hon. Members of events for the year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My Department is participating fully with other Government Departments and voluntary organisations to plan and promote a wide-ranging programme of events for the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations. The programme of events for the Year is relevant to all parts of the United Kingdom. Events being developed as part of the Scottish contribution to the year include a three year project to support volunteering by older people and a project to examine the experiences of ethnic minority older people in selected European Community countries. I will write to the hon. Member with a full list of events which have been organised so far.

Officials of the Department of Health, the lead organising Department for the Year, recently met with the all party parliamentary group for pensions. In addition honourable Members will be able to learn more about the European Year of Older People from an exhibition to be mounted in the Upper Waiting Hall from 22 to 28 February. Madam Speaker has graciously agreed at the request of the all party group to host a reception on 30 June at the Speaker's House to mark the Year.

Age Concern Scotland has written to all Scottish hon. Members to inform them of the exhibition and to encourage them to support the year. A similar letter will be issued to all other hon. Members shortly.

Caledonian MacBrayne's

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to respond to Caledonian MacBrayne's corporate plan for 1992 to 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has already responded to Caledonian MacBrayne's corporate plan for 1992 to 1996 in approving the company's capital expenditure proposals for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96, increasing the company's external financing limit over the three years by a total of £10.5 million and fixing the level of deficit subsidy for 1993-94 at £7.165 million.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Lang: The chief executives of my four agencies reply direct to parliamentary questions on matters delegated to them. It is not normal practice for chief executives' letters to be submitted to my office prior to reply. I do, of course, see chief executives' replies when they are published in the Official Report.

Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 5 November 1992, Official Report, column 351; and if he will state the political affiliation of the appointees where known.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The central data on appointments is updated once a year, at 1 September, and the information given in the answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 6 November 1992 is the latest available. Information not held centrally could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. On the question of political affiliation I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) on 26 November 1992, Official Report, column 711.

Mr. Muir Russell

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to ensure that the appointment of Mr. Muir Russell as a non-executive director of Stage Coach plc is compatible with his position as a civil servant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Mr. Russell's appointment is one of many made nationally to build bridges between the civil service and the business community. There is now within the Scottish Office a substantial bank of experience of such appointments, which must comply with the normal principles of conduct for civil servants. In addition new guidance has been published by the Office of Public Service and Science to supplement departmental rules and procedures on such appointments. Mr. Russell's appointment is entirely compatible with the guidance.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage change in (a) real terms and (b) cash terms in his Department's budget from 1992-93 to 1993-94.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 February 1993]: The planned 1993-94 expenditure budget for the Departments within my responsibility but excluding the Forestry Commission is 5·0 per cent. in real terms and 7·9 per cent. in cash terms more than planned 1992-93 expenditure as amended by classification changes. After allowing for additional responsibilities of my Departments in care in the community and higher education, the increases are 2·7 per cent. in real terms and 5·6 per cent. in cash terms.

Departmental Press Releases

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to distribute his Department's press releases by electronic mail.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 5 February 1993]: I intend to continue my practice of distributing news releases from my Department by electronic mail to principal media outlets which have the facilities to receive them. Development of the service is kept under review.

MV Braer (Oil Spillage)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial provision has been made, and by whom, for the long-term monitoring of the impact on both land and the marine environment of the oil spillage from the tanker Braer.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Various Government Departments and public bodies are already engaged in monitoring the impact of the oil spill. Their programmes and priorities will be reviewed by the ecological steering group which was announced by my right hon. Friend on 26 January 1993. Since the long-term monitoring requirements have still to be assessed, it is too early to take a view on the financial arrangements for them.

Severely Disadvantaged Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978, how many farmers within the less-favoured areas designated severely disadvantaged, receive a level of farm income at or below the level at which a family of two adults and two children of school ages 13 and 17 could expect to be entitled to family credit at the current rate.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The information requested is not available.

Scottish Bus Group Companies

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the purchasers of former Scottish Bus Group companies under the terms of the Transport (Scotland) Act 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir Hector Monro) on 2 December 1991, Official Report, columns 45-46.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Applicants (Drug Tests)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates her Department has made of the number of companies requiring drug testing for job applicants; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not produce estimates of the number of companies requiring drug testing for job applicants and has no plans to do so.

Ship Building

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies have been declared in the United Kingdom shipbuilding industry each year since 1979; and what has been the average redundancy payment in constant prices.

Mr. McLoughlin: The specific information requested is not available and no information is held on payments made by employers to redundant employees.

Black Workers

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has made of the average pay of black workers as a percentage of the average pay of white workers.

Mr. McLoughlin: These estimates are not made.

Check-off Deductions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate the cost per thousand to employers of meeting requirements for renewed check-off deductions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost to those employers who choose to operate check-off arrangements of the new requirements in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill will depend on their particular circumstances. Employers may agree, as part of the arrangements, to recoup some or all of the cost from the trade unions on whose behalf they operate the check-off.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who proposed to Government the requirement that employers would be required to seek renewed consent to check-off deductions from their employees every three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This proposal is based on a recommendation in the response of the Institute of Personnel Management to the Green Paper, "Industrial Relations in the 1990s".

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if employers are presently prohibited from checking at any time and at any interval whether any employee maintains consent previously given for deductions of union subscriptions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Existing law on the operation of the check-off offers little protection to employees who pay their union subscriptions through the check-off.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which bodies have supported the proposed requirement for renewed consent to check-off deductions.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responses to legislative proposals are automatically treated as confidential. Bodies that have publicly supported the principle of periodic renewal of consent include the Confederation of British Industry and the Institute of Directors.

Employment Training

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people graduating from employment training courses in Blyth Valley have gone on to full-time work in each year since 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available. Information on employment training is not held centrally below training and enterprise council level.

Job Shops (Vetting)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what vetting is carried out when potential employers place advertisements for vacancies in job shops.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Bill Michie, dated 9 February 1993.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the vetting carried out when potential employers place advertisements in job shops. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The vast majority of vacancies notified to Jobcentres are from employers who are well known to my local people and give no cause for concern. Where an employer is not known we take extra care to ensure the vacancy is from a genuine employer. If we have any doubts we will normally make local enquiries or arrange to visit the employer.

Any complaints from jobseekers are always followed up and my managers have discretion to refuse to handle recruitment business if they have concerns about the potential vacancy.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make an assessment of the health and safety of those who work in opencast coal mining.

Mr. McLoughlin: Prime responsibility for health and safety at work including assessment rests with employers and self employed persons, where appropriate. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) encourages and promotes health, safety and welfare at work at those places for which it is the enforcing authority, which includes opencast coal sites. HSE inspectors seek to ensure that employers and others comply with health and safety legislation and if necessary take appropriate action to ensure legal requirements are met.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many constituencies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland have higher registered unemployment at the present time than in June 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest estimates of unemployment rates (a) by ethnic origin, broken down into (i) white, (ii) West Indian, (iii) Indian, (iv) Pakistani and (v) Bangladeshi, (b) separately by sex and ethnic origin and (c) by 16 to 24 year age group, sex and ethnic origin.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available estimates for Great Britain of unemployment rates on the internationally standard ILO definition are given in the following table:

ILO unemployment rates by ethnic origin, Sex and age: Great Britain, summer (June-August) 1992 (not seasonally adjusted)

Percentage

	all persons		Males		Females

Following established practice, estimates where the numerator is less than 10,000 are now shown in the table, but the estimates for other small groups, for example some of those within the 16-24 age-bands, should be treated with caution.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes Falkirk East constituency.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Michael Connarty, dated 9 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the Falkirk East area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Information about the length of disqualification periods imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Construction Sites (Accidents)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of (a) deaths and (b) serious accidents at construction sites in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of deaths and major injuries occurring in the construction industry in Wales over the past five years are provided in the table:

Occupational injuries occurring in the construction industry[1] in Wales as reported to HSE's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates and Local Authorities, 1987-88 to 1991-92[6]

Training

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those referred by the employment service to employment training actually started in the valleys initiative area between April 1991 and March 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Ron Davies, dated 9 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the percentage of those referred by the Employment Service to Employment Training, in the Valleys Initiative area, who actually started between April 1991 and March 1992. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Although we do not collect information in the format you asked for we have found a way to provide a close alternative, which is based on returns from our local offices located in the Valleys Initiative area. This gives a figure of 39% which is almost exactly equivalent to 1 person starting for every 2·5 who are referred.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current numbers of employment trainees by ethnic origin.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following table gives the latest percentage breakdown of entrants to employment training in Great Britain by ethnic origin.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest statistics for 1992 on numbers of (a) employment trainees, (b) youth trainees and (c) job club leavers, by ethnic origin and sex for (i) England and Wales, (ii) Yorkshire and Humberside and (iii) Sheffield.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available in the exact format asked for. Information is only available about the percentage of entrants or leavers by characteristics. The following tables give the latest data.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which her Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As part of the Government's deregulation initiative, the Department has compiled a provisional list of regulations for which it is responsible, which impact on business. It is currently being fully checked for accuracy and will be placed in the Library by early March.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many black adults in England and Wales are on training schemes operated by training and enterprise councils in the current year; what was the figure for 1992; and what percentage this is of the total number of trainees on schemes operated by the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: During April to September 1992, the latest period for which information is available, 5 per cent. of adults on employment training in England and Wales were of Black/African/Caribbean descent, the same as in the full financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the members of each training and enterprise council in the Northern region, together with their remunerations, for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: The current board members of TECs in Northern region are listed in the table. Directors of TEC boards do not receive any remunerations other than incurred expenses unless they hold the office of TEC chief executive.

Chief executives who are seconded civil servants are paid the appropriate civil service salary; those who are direct employees of the TEC are paid a salary which is determined by the TEC.

Redundancy Payments and Unemployment Benefit

139. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average (a) statutory minimum redundancy payment and (b) monthly unemployment benefit paid by her Department in the most recent available year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average payment made under the direct payment provisions of the statutory redundancy payments scheme in the 1991-92 financial year was £1,375·00.

I understand from the Department of Social Security that no figure is available for the average amount of monthly unemployment benefit paid. The average weekly amount of unemployment benefit (excluding income support) paid to each recipient based on 5 per cent. samples taken in May 1991 was £44·64 a week, and in November 1991 was £44·49 a week.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within her responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The chief executive of the Employment Service Agency replies direct on matters delegated to him. I have an opportunity to see the replies when they are published in the Official Report.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many compliance cost assessments were sent to her Department in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were none.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reduce the sum of £4 assumed income per week per £1,000 savings which is applied in determining benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: In all the income-related benefits, savings up to £3,000 is ignored. Deductions from benefit for capital in excess of this amount are designed to ensure that help is targeted on those who need it most, while not denying benefit to those with only a moderate amount of capital. The rules are kept under review, but we have no plans for change.

Pensions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis he has calculated the 25p rise in pensions paid to those over 80 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The 25p age addition paid to people who are over 80 was introduced in 1971. No Government have ever increased the age addition since its introduction and there are no plans to do so. Instead, we have chosen to target extra resources towards pensioners on income-related benefits.

Artificial Insemination by Donor

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of children conceived by AID who will be entitled to maintenance from their biological father.

Mr. Burt: Where a donation of sperm is made to a licensed treatment centre, the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 safeguards the donor's identity. Consequently, where a child is born as a result of artificial insemination by donor, the question of seeking maintenance from the biological father will arise only where the donation is made by private arrangement without the services of a licensed treatment centre. There is no centrally available information on the numbers that might be involved.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of additional claimants and the cost if disability living allowance was extended to children under the age of five years; and if he will estimate these numbers and costs for the northern region.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that for Great Britain the number is 25,000 at a cost of £35 million a year. It is not possible to estimate these numbers and costs for the northern region.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the medical report from Mrs. Elizabeth Pinnock of 45 South Furzeham road, Brixham, mentioned by Michael Bichard in his letter of 11 January to the hon. Member for South Hams, was obtained by the disability living allowance unit from Dr. Sheena, Mrs. Pinnock's general practitioner.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write shortly to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 8 February 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the date on which the Disability Living Allowance Unit obtained the medical report from Dr. Sheena, Mrs. Pinnock's General Practitioner.

The medical report to which you refer was requested on 27 November 1991 and completed by Dr. Sheena on 30 November 1991. It was received in the Mobility Allowance Unit on 4 December 1991.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Carers

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what evidence it was decided that carers of people in receipt of the lower rate care component of disability living allowance should not be entitled to invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: Disability living allowance was introduced following surveys of the disabled carried out in 1985-1988 by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. We introduced the new lower rates of disability living allowance to help people with less severe disabilities who were unable to qualify for benefit previously.

The purpose of invalid care allowance is to provide a measure of financial assistance to those who forgo the opportunity of full-time work in order to provide regular and substantial care to a severely disabled person. It is doubtful that a person receiving the lower rate of the disability living allowance care component would require such substantial care.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider allowing the record of contributions made by carers in any tax year to count towards unemployment benefit.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to change the current contribution conditions.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend entitlement to the carer premium to carers over the age of 65 years who can establish underlying entitlement to invalid care allowance on the same basis as their younger counterparts.

Mr. Scott: Since it is not possible for people who become carers over age of 65 to establish entitlement to invalid care allowance there can be no question therefore of extending carer premium to this group.

Carer Premium

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of people in receipt of the carer premium as a percentage of those who are eligible.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 25 January 1993, Official Report, columns 585-86.

Income Support

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what evidence he has on the number of income support claimants in residential and nursing homes who use their personal expenses allowance to pay the fees;

(2) what steps he proposes to take to ensure that under the new community care arrangements from April 1993 the personal expenses allowance for people on income support in residential and nursing homes is not taken to pay home fees.

Mr. Burt: Personal allowances are intended to be used by residents for their needs as they see best. The fees charged for residential and nursing homes are a matter for agreement between the parties involved. Some residents contract for charges higher than the Income Support limits and may use the personal expenses allowance to meet the shortfall. The numbers using their allowance in this way is not known.

From April 1993 all residents placed in residential care or nursing homes by local authorities will retain an amount for personal expenses.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current number of people in receipt of income support in the smallest available area which includes Consett.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Ms. Hilary Armstrong, dated 8 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what is the current number of people in receipt of Income Support in the smallest available area which includes Consett.

The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, from latest information available, the Agency's Stanley office, which covers the area of Consett, had approximately 11,000 customers who were in receipt of Income Support at 30 November 1992.

This information has been supplied by the Income Support Management Information Statistics.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on the number of unemployment benefit claimants of the abatement at 55 years introduced on 1 January 1989 for occupational pensioners, and 9 October 1989 for personal pensioners (a) at the point of introduction and (b) currently.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, the numbers of persons aged 55 years and over whose unemployment benefit is abated in full due to their receipt of an occupational and/or personal pension is shown in the table.

Unemployment Claimants whose Entitlement to Unemployment Benefit is Abated in Full by an Occupational and/or Personal Pension

November 1989	5·0
May 1992	9·2

Notes:

1. Source: Half-yearly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants, 5 per cent. sample.
2. Figures shown are for all claimants whose entitlement to UB is abated in full due to receipt of an occupational and/or personal pension. No separate figures are maintained of persons affected solely by the legislation introduced on 1 January 1989 and 9th October 1989.
3. Figures are not available for the points of introduction or present date. Those shown for May and November 1989 are for the first half yearly analysis following introduction. Those for May 1992 are the latest available.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Names of firms of consultants used by the Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 are as follows:

Coopers and Lybrand
Kodak
KPMG
Hemsley Miller and Co.
PA Consultancy
PMMS Consulting
Price Waterhouse
SEMA Consultants
Symonds Facilities Management
Touche Ross

The total cost of consultancy support to the end of December 1992 has been some £610,000.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within his responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Miss Widdecombe: The chief executives of our agencies reply direct on the operational matters which have been delegated to them. Ministers receive a courtesy copy of replies on the day before they are answered.

War Pensioners

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to establish an executive agency for war pensioners.

Mr. Lilley: A new War Pensions Agency will be established on 1 April 1994. The agency will be responsible for the assessment and payment of war pensions, the war pensioners welfare service, and the Ilford Park Polish Home in Devon. I am pleased to be able to announce this fulfilment of the Government's election manifesto pledge.

The establishment of a separate agency for war pensions will lead to greater efficiency in the administration of these benefits and provide a higher quality service for war pensioners and war widows, in keeping with the citizens charter.

Recruitment of a chief executive is beginning immediately.

Benefits Agency

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters addressed to the Benefits Agency by hon. Members, on the subject of attendance allowance and disability living allowance, have taken longer than seven months to secure a reply; when he first assessed the time taken to reply to hon. Members' correspondence; and what action he has taken to reduce delays.

Mr. Scott: The arrangements for replying to correspondence from hon. Members to the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Nicholson, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the time taken to reply to honourable Members' correspondence about Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA).

You ask how many letters addressed to the Benefits Agency on these subjects have taken longer than seven months to secure a reply. I am aware of 13 cases, where letters about DLA have been sent direct to me or have been referred to me by Ministers and a reply has not been sent within seven months. I very much regret that such long delays have occurred. As I explained in my letter to you of 19 January on an individual case you had raised, the delays are due to the backlog of correspondence that has built up in the DLA Unit following the greater than expected workload faced by Unit in the early months of the DLA scheme. In 1992 I replied to 4,461 letters on all subjects from Members.

The delay in replying to Members' letters about DLA does not, of course, mean that action is not proceeding on a customer's claim. In fact in most cases where there is a long outstanding reply the claim will have been resolved much earlier. You will recall that in the case discussed in my letter of 19 January, benefit was awarded in August 1992. Clearly you should have been notified of this very much sooner than you were and I apologise for this.

The Benefits Agency monitors the amount of correspondence received and the time taken to reply on a regular basis. Since December 1992 this has been monitored on a weekly basis; prior to that the position was monitored monthly. The substantial increase in correspondence (80 per cent. up on 1991) and the consequent delays in response time began to become clear from mid 1992 onwards.

As you will understand, the initial impetus was to clear the backlog of claims thus ensuring that decisions were given and payments made to customers as quickly as possible. I wrote to all Members explaining the steps I had taken to tackle this on 19 October 1992.

Since November 1992 additional staff have been taken on in the correspondence sections both centrally and in the DLA Unit and substantial overtime is also being worked. A recovery plan for clearing the backlog of correspondence is now in operation at the DLA Unit with a view to substantially reducing the number of letters awaiting reply by the end of this month. Once the backlog is cleared it will be our aim to respond to all future correspondence within the Agency's target of twenty working days.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Nurses, Merseyside

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide increased funds for skilled nurses on Merseyside, in respect of the community care, hospital in the home, health of the nation, and the patients charter initiatives.

Mr. Sackville: The allocation of national health service funding in Merseyside is the responsibility of Mersey regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Professor A. M. Breckenridge, for details.

Nurse Prescribing

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the (a) implementation costs, (b) annual running costs and (c) potential time saved per year for general practitioners, nurses, carers and patients in hours, associated with nurse prescribing.

Mr. Sackville: The cost benefit study on nurse prescribing carried out for the Department by Touche Ross estimated that the costs of implementation would be approximately £11 million in 1991-92 prices. Running costs would depend substantially on the extent to which nurse prescribing resulted in an increase in the total drugs prescribed. The report made a central estimate of £15 million per year. It estimated possible theoretical savings of 170,000 hours of GP time per year, 650,000 hours of district nurse, health visitor and practice nurse time per year and 590,000 hours of patients' and carers' time. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

Hospitals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in each region are on (a) yellow alert and (b) red alert.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities and trusts all have arrangements for managing their resources to cope with particularly high and unexpected levels of admissions. The action which is needed will vary according to local circumstances and there is not therefore a nationally agreed definition of "red" and "yellow" alerts.

Nurses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of qualified nursing staff by specialty for each region in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The information requested is shown in the tables. The source of the data is the Department's non-medical manpower census. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten. The England totals include figures for family health service authorities and other statutory authorities. The special health authorities figures in 1991 include staff from the special hospitals services authority.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to include a question on the number of Welsh speakers residing in the United Kingdom as a whole within the next census.

Mr. Sackville: Full consideration will be given to the case for including a language question in the next census which would count people living outside Wales who speak Welsh.

The topic content of the censuses of population in the United Kingdom, planned for 2001, will need to be approved by Parliament, around the end of 1999.

Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to introduce ring-fenced funding for residential drug and alcohol rehabilitation services.

Mr. Yeo: On 2 October 1992 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced her decision that a ring-fenced community care special transitional grant would be made available to local authorities in England in 1993-94 for the implementation for community care, including for the purchase of residential care for people who misuse alcohol and/or drugs.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the financial terms of the appointment of the temporary chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority; what provisions there are for extending his contract; and what financial provisions cover the termination of his contract.

Dr. Mawhinney: All regional health authority chairmen receive annual remuneration of £20,925. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made no decision to extend the appointment of Sir Donald Wilson beyond 30 April 1993 nor are there contractual provisions which cover the termination of such an appointment.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the auditors and legal advisers of each trust in the Gateshead and Newcastle, Northumberland and North Tyneside health authority areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: The appointment of legal advisers is a matter for each National Health Service trust, and this information is not held centrally. The external auditors of health bodies are appointed by the Audit Commission. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Audit Commission for details of auditors of the relevant trusts.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the membership, remuneration and place of residence of hospital trust board non-executive members in the northern region; and whether she proposes to increase the remuneration scales in the next financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: A list of all trust non-executive appointees in the Northern region, together with their place of residence, is as follows.

National health service trust non-executive directors are entitled to remuneration of £5,000 per annum. No decision has been made to increase the remuneration of chairmen or non-executive directors.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been removed from their general practitioner's lists in each month from January 1992 to January 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what stage (a) drafts and (b) copies of letters from chief executives of agencies within her responsibility, in response to parliamentary questions, are submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Sackville: Chief executives reply directly to hon. Members on matters delegated to them. Ministers have the opportunity to see replies when they are published in Hansard.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had in regard to compensating people with haemophilia who have contracted hepatitis in the course of treatment under the NHS; what reply she is sending; what action she will be taking; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I shall be writing to the right hon. Member in response to his representations soon.

The Government recognised the special case for making payments to haemophiliacs and recipients of blood or tissue infected with HIV through medical treatment within the United Kingdom. There are no plans to extend these special payments.

Drugs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on drug costs in each member state of the European Community.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health does not formally monitor the levels or movement of prices for individual drugs in the other member states.

The consensus which emerges from various independent studies carried out in this field is that prices in the United Kingdom are slightly above the average for the EC. The most recent information available is for 1990 and is taken from a study by Dr. Diener of the German Pharmacists Association, ABDA. He in turn based his work on a 1988 study by BEUC, an umbrella grouping for European consumer organisations.

If the price of a basket of commonly-used pharmaceuticals is adjusted for local factors, such as varying rates of VAT, prices were higher in Germany, Netherlands, Denmark and Ireland. The adjusted price, for the same basket of drugs, was lower in all the other member states.

Many member states are currently taking steps to reduce central government expenditure on drugs, by a variety of means such as across-the-board price reductions, limiting the availability of certain products, increasing patient co-payments and encouraging more rational prescribing.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the composition of the advisory committee on NHS drugs; for how long appointees have served on the committee; and what was the level of remuneration, where appropriate.

Dr. Mawhinney: The names of the members and the dates they were appointed are as follows:

	First appointed
Chairman
Dr. Jeremy Metters	1989
Members
Professor Alasdair Breckenridge	1985
Professor Mark Castleden	1990
Mr. David Coleman	1985
Professor Hugh Edmondson	1987
Professor David Ganderton	1985
Dr. Iona Heath	1990
Dr. Derwyn Jones	1992
Professor Ronald Jones	1990
Mr. Alan Kerr	1990
Dr. Elizabeth Poskitt	1989
Dr. Jane Richards	1989
Dr. Charles Swan	1991
Professor Peter Tyrer	1989
Dr. Dorothy Ward	1991

Members other than the Chairman receive a fee of £100 for attending each meeting.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list what is the procedure for (a) pharmaceutical companies and (b) those who prescribe drugs to (i) ask for a particular drug to be included in the selected list and (ii) overturn a decision to blacklist a drug from the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: Manufacturers are notified before their products are reviewed by the advisory committee on national health service drugs and given a further opportunity to make representations against any decision to add a product to the list of drugs which cannot be prescribed under the NHS before it is finalised. Prescribers can also make their views known to the committee.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the representations she has received from (a) the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry, (b) those who prescribe drugs and (c) others, to extend the number of drugs on the current selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received no such representations.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with (a) representatives of the pharmaceutical industry and (b) the advisory committee on NHS drugs, about research and development into new products and medicines that may be affected by the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry on 19 November and discussed the implications of extending the selected list scheme. The advisory committee on national health service drugs is able to take into account any matters brought to its attention by the manufacturers of individual products, in the light of its remit to ensure that drugs to meet all clinical need in the specified categories can be provided as economically as possible under the NHS.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what procedures are in place to ensure the effectiveness of the advisory committee on NHS drugs;

(2) what consultations there have been on the effectiveness of the advisory committee on NHS drugs since its introduction.

Dr. Mawhinney: The committee has demonstrated its effectiveness by enabling downward pressure to be applied to the growth of the drugs bill without patient care being prejudiced. We expect it to continue to do so.

Drug Prescription

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list those drugs which have been deleted from the current selected list and their manufacturers;

(2) if she will list the drugs that have been included on the selected list since 1985; and if she will list them and their manufacturers.

Dr. Mawhinney: The selected list scheme specifies those categories of drugs which are to be reviewed by the advisory committee on national health service drugs, with a view to advising the Health Departments which particular products within those categories should not be available for NHS prescription. The list of drugs which currently cannot be prescribed by general practitioners under the NHS is published in the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulation 1992. Names of the relevant manufacturers could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Over-the-Counter Medicines

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend the availability of over-the-counter medicines.

Dr. Mawhinney: We intend to extend the range of medicines which may be supplied over the counter without prescription where this can be done safely. We have recently revised our procedures to facilitate and speed up reclassification of medicines from prescription only to over the counter status.

Wessex Regional Health Authority

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has held with the Wessex regional health authority on the confidential district auditor's report on the Wessex RHA RISP—regional information systems plan—project; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service Management Executive have held a number of discussions with the Wessex regional health authority about the RISP project and the findings of the district auditor.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role her Department played in the decision of the Wessex regional health authority not to take legal action against IBM and Andersen regarding the RISP project.

Mr. Sackville: This was and remains a matter for the regional health authority.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role her Department played in the settlement obtained by the Wessex regional health authority with AT and T Istel, in connection with the RISP project; and what sums were paid to the Wessex regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The settlement reached between AT and T Istel in connection with the RISP computer project was entirely a matter for the Wessex regional health authority and AT and T Istel.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date she received the district auditor's confidential report on the Wessex regional health authority RISP project; what action she took; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Wessex regional health authority supplied the Department with a copy of certain confidential material provided by the district auditor in July 1992. The RHA is taking action to follow up that material and the Department is closely monitoring the position.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken on the report of the district auditor into losses on computer contracts by Wessex regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: Remedial action has been taken by the Wessex regional health authority to address many of the problems associated with RISP. These have included:

(i) bringing the IBM 3090 computer into use on the basis of independent advice, and the disposal of surplus computing equipment;

(ii) an investigation of payments made to some contractors;

(iii) an investigation of allegations of fraud;
(iv) a review of IT contracts and the procedures used to negotiate them;
(v) the creation of an IT directorate and the provision of effective contract management;
(vi) a comprehensive review and overhaul of all financial systems. Standing Orders have been revised;
(vii) legal action to recover amounts overpaid to contractors;
(viii) seeking competitive tenders and letting contracts for the provision of computing services on the basis of independent advice;
(ix) a move away from central control of IT towards a more client orientated/partnership approach;
(x) the commissioning and implementation of new procedures for the control and letting of contracts together with improved monitoring procedures;
(xi) rationalisation of future computer usage; and
(xii) improvements in the standard and style of reporting on all major issues to all members of the WRHA.

This action is reported and commended in the district auditor's report.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will publish the confidential district auditor's report on the Wessex regional health authority RISP project;

(2) what plans she has to publish the district auditor's report on Wessex regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The district auditor undertook an investigation of the RISP computer project at the invitation of the Wessex RHA's regional general manager. A report in the public interest was published on 24 July 1992.

The publication of any additional confidential material is entirely a matter for the RHA. As the district auditor made clear in his statement of 4 February 1993. the information he provided, outside the report in the public interest, if published, may prejudice police inquiries and civil proceedings.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 46, to whom in the Wessex regional health authority advice was given regarding the inclusion of penalty and performance targets in the contract between the RHA and Wessex Integrated Systems; what reply was received; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Advice on contractual matters was given to the then regional general manager, who indicated that the regional health authority would consider the Department's advice when reviewing the contract between the RHA and WIS.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 46, to what extent action taken by Wessex regional health authority officials regarding the inclusion of penalty and performance contracts in the regional health authority's contract with WIS was in accordance with her Department's advice.

Mr. Sackville: Detailed information about the contract entered into by the Wessex regional health authority with WIS is entirely a matter for the RHA.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to improve the management of Wessex regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service in Wessex delivers a good service to patients in the region and I am confident that management in the regional health authority is discharging its role properly.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions have been given to senior staff at Wessex regional health authority about discussing losses on computer contracts with the press and hon. Members.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Drugs Advisory Committee

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the representations there have been from pharmaceutical manufacturers regarding the new posts on the advisory committee on NHS drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Director of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 11 December on this matter. A reply was sent on 25 January.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria appointees to the advisory committee on NHS drugs have to meet.

Dr. Mawhinney: Members are appointed to the advisory committee on national health service drugs on the basis of their professional expertise and experience in relevant areas, following consultation with appropriate professional bodies.

Chemical Entity Products

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those new chemical entity products that were made available to the NHS since 1985 that would have been covered by the areas on the original selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: The United Kingdom licensing authority has no information as to whether products have been made available to the national health service. Product licences for the following new chemical entities have been granted by the United Kingdom licensing authority since 1985 in the therapeutic categories originally covered by the selected list scheme.

Therapeutic category	Product name	Drug name
Indigestion remedy	Prepulsid	Cisapride
Laxative	Importal	Lactitol Monohydrate
Vitamin	Elcarn	L-carnitine

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those new chemical entity products covered by the areas on the new selected list that have been made available to the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: The United Kingdom licensing authority has no information as to whether products have been made available to the national health service. Product licences for the following new chemical entities have been granted by the United Kingdom licensing authority in the therapeutic categories to which the selected list scheme has recently been extended.

Community Care Support Force

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his reply of 2 February, if he will list those local health authorities that have invited the assistance of the community care support force.

Mr. Yeo: The community care support force has visited 27 local authorities. It is not appropriate to list these authorities by name.

Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the level of capital expenditure on the new ward block at the Royal Victoria infirmary, Newcastle after the completion of the initial contract in July 1991;

(2) when she expects the obstetrics and gynaecology wards to open at the Newcastle Royal Victoria Infirmary Trust new ward block; and what further additional capital cost will be involved;

(3) pursuant to her answer of 2 February, col. 155, if she will list the value and purpose of the additional contracts, capital spending or post-contract variations at the Newcastle Royal Victoria infirmary's new ward block.

Mr. Sackville: The post-contract modifications to implement the decision to amalgamate obstetrics and gynaecology at the new ward block, are expected to cost £6·2 million. The gynaecological ward will open on schedule on 29 March 1993, and the obstetric ward is planned to open on 8 November 1993. Additionally, the antenatal clinic on the site is expected to cost £2·1 million and is also planned to open on 8 November 1993. No additional capital costs are anticipated.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the original estimated capital cost for the unified ophthalmology service at the Royal Victoria infirmary, Newcastle when selected by her for special funding; when this estimated cost was submitted; and what the cost is now.

Dr. Mawhinney: The estimated capital cost of unifying ophthalmology services at the Royal Victoria Infirmary when the scheme was submitted to the Secretary of State on 2 May 1992 was £7·6 million. The final cost should be contained within this sum.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the ward and other facilities for kidney treatment in-patients to open at the Newcastle Royal Victoria Infirmary Trust new ward block; and what further additional capital cost will be involved.

Mr. Sackville: Ward 36 for renal medicine and transplant services was opened as planned on 5 January 1993. Ward 37, for dialysis of both in-patients and out-patients is open and in partial use. No further capital costs will be incurred in commissioning these facilities.

Hepatitis B Vaccination

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review her Department's guidelines on the screening and vaccination of health care workers in relation to the hepatitis B virus.

Mr. Sackville: The 1992 edition of "Immunisation against Infectious Disease", issued to all doctors and to other health professionals with immunisation responsibilities, contains advice on immunisation against hepatitis B for risk groups, including health care personnel.

The advisory group on hepatitis, which advises United Kingdom health departments, has produced revised guidelines designed to prevent transmission of hepatitis B from health care workers. These have gone out to consultation with professional bodies and the national health service, and they should be available for distribution later this year.

Dental Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family health service authorities have used their capital reserves to maintain dental services since July 1992; and how much they are spending from the reserves.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have no reason to believe that any family health service authority is using capital reserve funds for this purpose.

Computerisation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to review the computerisation of each region of the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: There is no specific plan to review computerisation of each region of the national health service. There is a national strategic framework for the development of information management and technology which contains major computing elements.

Individual regions will make plans within that strategy and the NHS management executive will monitor the approach of each region against nationally defined standards.

Juveniles (Secure Accommodation)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date she asked local authorities to bid for the available capital funds to provide secure accommodation for juvenile offenders; and if she will place a copy of the invitation in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: Following the national steering group's assessment of demand for an additional 60-65 places nationally, last summer, local authorities were approached collectively and individually to consider how they would respond to meet the national steering group's assessment.

Regional Health Authority Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to review the contracting out of services undertaken by each regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The White Paper "Competing for Quality" published in November 1991 set out the case for the use of market testing procedures to test the quality and cost effectiveness of services in central Government and the national health service.

Revised guidance on market testing will be published shortly. Regional health authorities will be asked to follow the guidance where they undertake market testing of their own headquarters and other services.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities have used their reserves in the last quarter of the financial year 1992-93 or have plans to use their reserves, and by what amount; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Oral Contraceptives

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the effects of high doses of hormones on women taking oral contraceptives.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Oral contraceptives containing high doses of hormones are more likely than low-dose preparations to cause side-effects. The most serious side-effects include high blood pressure, thrombosis and thromboembolism involving the heart and lungs, but occur rarely in women without predisposing factors. To minimise side-effects doctors are advised to use the lowest effective dose and the use of oral contraceptives in those with significant predisposing factors for cardiovascular disease is discouraged.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 10 February 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Privity of Contract and Estate

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when it is intended to introduce legislation to implement the Law Commission's report on "Privity of Contract and Estate"—Law Commission No. 95; and what representations the Lord Chancellor has received from the business community about legislation on this subject.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is actively considering the recommendations of the Law Commission on this subject and hopes to be able to make an announcement in the near future. He has received representations from both tenants and landlords and is well aware of their respective interests.

Parking Fines (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the revenue from on-street parking fines in Liverpool for the past three financial years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The fines, fees and fixed penalties collected by the magistrates courts are remitted to the Exchequer as an aggregate amount and the proportion relating to parking penalties cannot therefore be separately identified.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the adult population in England is currently eligible for legal aid; and what is his estimate of the proportion of the adult population which after 1 April will be eligible for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Estimates of eligibility that have been made are based on family expenditure survey data and relate to households. The proportion of households currently eligible for civil legal aid is estimated to be between 50 and 55 per cent. in England and Wales. I estimate that after the changes are introduced in April about 48 per cent. of households in England and Wales will be eligible for civil legal aid. There is no upper financial limit for criminal legal aid: all those whose financial resources are such that they require assistance in meeting their costs are eligible and will continue to be eligible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Martial Arts Weapons

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ban the importation of martial arts knives and similar weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The importation of 14 types of offensive weapon, including certain martial arts knives, is already prohibited by virtue of an order made under section 141 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

My right hon. and learned Friend will consider, in the light of all the evidence, whether further restrictions on the importation of any offensive weapon that is brought to his attention are necessary.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A provisional list of regulations that impact on business has recently been put together by my Department. I shall place the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Prison, Fazakerley

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a decision has yet been made on the proposal to build a prison at Fazakerley in Liverpool.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government believe that there is a clear need for more secure prison places in the north-west. A new prison at Fazakerley would enable us to locate many prisoners from Merseyside much closer to home than is now possible. I have looked into the concerns expressed against building a prison at Fazakerley, but have concluded that the site is suitable for such a use. In view of the planning authority's reservations the matter will now be referred to the Secretary of State for the Environment who will consider its request that the matter should be the subject of a public inquiry.

Police Restructuring

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation he has had, or proposes to have, with the Greater Manchester police authority about the restructuring of police forces and police authorities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has not held discussions with individual police authorities. He is considering what reforms in police organisation and structure may be needed. He will announce his proposals as soon as possible. Interested parties will be consulted before final decisions are reached.

Drugs, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new strategies he intends to promote to tackle drug problems in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Jack: The Government's overall strategy for tackling drug misuse is aimed at reducing both the supply of and the demand for drugs throughout the United Kingdom.

Local drugs prevention teams have been set up in both Manchester and Salford under the Home Office drugs prevention initiative, and they will continue to work with the local community in finding effective ways of preventing the spread of drug misuse.

Greater Manchester, like other areas, will also benefit from other aspects of the Government's drug strategy such as the assistance we are providing to other countries to help reduce the supply of drugs into this country and the tougher controls which we are introducing on precursor and essential chemicals.

At the national level, we are committed to bringing forward proposals to ensure that the control of drug misuse is co-ordinated effectively, and the Criminal Justice Bill which we hope to bring before the House shortly, further tightens the law on drug trafficking and money laundering.

Youth Crime, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to deal with car crimes committed by young people in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Jack: The Government has encouraged the police and other agencies in the development of effective crime prevention programmes aimed at tackling youth crime and has funded a number of initiatives. The Home Office safer cities projects in the Greater Manchester area, Salford and Rochdale, have committed £120,000 and £18,000 respectively in 1992-93 to schemes aimed at diverting young people from crime, including car crime. We also established local drug prevention teams in Manchester and Salford in February 1992 with the aim of tackling the spread of drug misuse, particularly among the young. In addition the Home Office currently funds four projects which, in the main, are aimed at providing programmes of supervision or support for young offenders and defendants, in the Greater Manchester probation area through its probation supervision grant scheme. An application in respect of a go-kart project is in the early stages of consideration. The Department of Education announced recently that Manchester is to receive £147,000 in 1992-1993 under its grants for education support and training programme for youth crime prevention schemes. Five estates are targeted and the schemes will focus on car crime and burglary.

As part of its programme of action on youth crime for 1993, Crime Concern is planning a series of regional seminars, one of which is to be held in the north-west, on best practice in diverting young people from crime.

The Government are also considering what means might be needed to reduce offending by the very small group of persistent juvenile offenders.

Wolds Prison

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what grade of staff member has been appointed race relations liaison officer at the Wolds prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The post of race relations liaison officer at HM prison Wolds is held by the training manager. Staff at Wolds are not ascribed grades as such.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults on staff there were at the Wolds prison between 1 July and 31 December 1992; and what was the average population of prisoners at the Wolds during this period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the period in question there were 16 assaults on staff by prisoners. The average prisoner population was 195.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disciplinary adjudications were carried out at the Wolds prison in the most recent convenient month; in how many cases prisoners were found guilty; in how many cases prospective loss of remission was ordered; and what was the average number of days' remission forfeited.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In December 1992, 71 adjudications were carried out at HM prison Wolds. Prisoners were found guilty in 62 cases and punishment of prospective added days was used in 22 cases. The average number of days forfeited was 3·8.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults by prisoners on other prisoners took place at the Wolds prison between 1 July and 31 December 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Twelve incidents of assault by prisoners on other prisoners took place at HM prison Wolds during the period in question.

Prison Staff (Ethnic Origins)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) black and (b) female prison officers, there were in 1963, 1970, 1980, 1990 and at the latest available date; and what proportion these figures form of the total prison staff establishment;

(2) how many (a) black and (b) female prison governors, there were in 1963, 1970, 1980, 1990 and at the latest available date; and what proportion these figures form of the total number of prison governors.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Prison Service is currently in the process of conducting a voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of its staff, and until that survey is complete we shall not have comprehensive data. However, the tables set out the information currently available on staff who have recorded their ethnic origin as other than white.

Prison officer grades

	Total number in officer grades	Number of non-white officers		Number of women officers per cent.		per cent.
1 February 1993	24,135	173	0·7	2,106	8·7
1 January 1990	20,710	26	0·1	1,711	8·3
1 January 1980	15,548	[1]	—	629	4·0

[1] Figures not available.

Governor grades

	Total number in governor grades	Number of non-white staff in governor grades	Number of women officers in governor grades
				per cent.
1 February 1993	1,024	0	92	9·0
1 January 1990	884	0	86·5	9·8
1 January 1980	565	[1]	40	7·1

[1] Figures not available.

Figures for 1963 and 1970 are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, if at all. Figures for prison officers relate to unified grades from prison officer to principal officer.

Prison Officers

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers are working in prisons where the prisoners are of the opposite sex.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 1,124 female prison officers work in establishments with male prisoners and 110 male prison officers work in establishments with female prisoners. One hundred and sixty-one female prison officers and 649 male prison officers work in establishments with prisoners of both sexes.

Prisoners (Cardphones)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons prisoners now have access to cardphones; and when inmates of all prisons will have access to cardphones.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Cardphones for prisoners' use are available in all establishments in England and Wales, except Durham prison and Wormwood Scrubs, where installation is due to take place by the end of February.

Prisoners' Clothing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons sentenced prisoners are allowed to wear their own clothes; and what plans he has to extend this to all prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prisoners other than convicted male prisoners are allowed to wear their own clothes, and the Government aim progressively to allow convicted male prisoners to wear their own clothes.

Prisoners at Belmarsh, High Down and Woodhill prisons have been allowed to wear their own clothes since they opened in 1991 and 1992. Formal trials are being held at Her Majesty's prison Wellingborough and in Huntercombe and Finnamore Wood young offender institutions to assess the implications of a more general move towards prisoners wearing their own clothes. In addition, some other establishments allow male convicted prisoners to wear certain items of their own clothing.

Prisoners in category C and D establishments, including open young offender institutions, are allowed to wear their own socks and underwear if adequate laundering or exchange arrangements are available and they may also be allowed to wear their own shoes.

The scope for further relaxations will be considered later this year in the light of the trials.

Prison Service Agency

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the framework agreement for the Prison Service Agency to be finalised.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I plan to publish the agency's framework document on 1 April, when the agency is launched.

Remand Prisoners

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if all area criminal justice consultative committees have discussed the Criminal Justice Consultative Council paper on prisoners awaiting trial and reported back to the council.

Mr. Jack: All area committees are to discuss this paper which was published on 1 December 1992. Those that have not already dealt with this matter are scheduled to do so at their next meeting.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults by prisoners on other prisoners took place in male prisons holding remand prisoners in the most recent six-month period for which figures are available; and what was the average population of those prisons during that period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provisional figure for assaults by prisoners on other prisoners in male prisons holding remand prisoners during July to December 1992 is 460 and the average population was 17,162.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults on staff there were in male prisons holding remand prisoners in the most recent six months period for which figures are available; and what was the average population of those prisons during that period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provisional figure for assaults on staff, including attempted assaults, in male prisons holding remand prisoners during July to December 1992 is 535 and the average population was 17,162.

Criminal Justice Consultative Council

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how often the Criminal Justice Consultative Council has met; and what topics it has discussed;

(2) what plans there are for the Criminal Justice Consultative Council to produce an annual report of its work; and when it will be published.

Mr. Jack: The Criminal Justice Consultative Council has met on five occasions. It has discussed the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; the establishment of area criminal justice liaison committees; projections for the criminal justice system; prisoners awaiting trial; race issues within the criminal justice system; the mode of trial decisions and sentencing; notification of guilty pleas at an early stage; the public expenditure survey 1992 as it relates to the criminal justice system; the criminal justice special conferences programme 1993-94 and its own programme of work.

The council will produce a report of its first year's work which will be published after its next meeting on 22 April.

Prisoners (Televisions)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons prisoners are allowed television in their cells; and what plans he has to extend this to all prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following the announcement in the White Paper, "Custody, Care and Justice", a trial of battery-operated televisions began at HMP The Mount in December 1991 and of mains-powered sets at HMP Stocken in October 1992. Television in cells has also been allowed in some other establishments, including HMP Garth and HM young offenders institution, Feltham, and we are considering allowing televisions in cells in some other prisons.

The trials are addressing a number of issues including safety, security, licensing, cost and effects on prisoners' behaviour and participation in regime activities. The trials are being evaluated and decisions on whether to extend the availability of in-cell television further will be taken as soon as possible.

Prison Meals

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to serve meals in prisons at times of day which correspond more closely to mealtimes outside prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A model regime for local prisons and remand centres was published in November 1992 which governors are expected to work towards. This sets out reasonable times at which meals should be served. A code of standards for the Prison Service is also being developed, for publication by the end of the year, and is expected to include provisions about mealtimes. At contracted prisons, there is a contractual obligation to provide meals at normal times.

Prison Staff (Name Badges)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons staff now wear name badges; and when staff in all prisons will be required to wear name badges.

Mr. Jack: It is a commitment by Her Majesty's Prison Service that all staff in both headquarters and establishments will be required to wear name badges from 1 April 1993 when they come in contact with the general public and prisoners. Many staff have already been issued with their name badges and are being encouraged to begin wearing them, but as the manufacture and issue of these name badges is a rolling programme aimed for completion by 19 March 1993, it is not possible at this point in the programme to indicate how many prison establishments have received their badges.

Police Officers (Plumstead)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed number of police officers in the Plumstead division of the Metropolitan police for 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 5 February 1993]: There are currently 257 officers in the Plumstead division.

Allocation of officers in the Metropolitan police district is a matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan police. I understand that at present there are no plans to alter the number of officers stationed at Plumstead.

Prison Education

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many potential contractors have bid to provide prison education services in 1993-94; how many bids are from local education authorities; and how many are from colleges of further education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 11 January 1993, c. 597.]: A total of 154 bids have been received to provide future education services in one or a number of prison establishments. Of these, 113 are from colleges and institutions of further education, 28 from private sector organisations and 13 from local education authorities.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Science Budget

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the distribution of the science budget in 1993-94.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have considered the Advisory Board for the Research Councils' recommendations on the distribution of the science budget, and have decided to accept the advice that the £1,164·56 million for 1993-94 should, subject to approval by Parliament of the estimates in due course, be allocated as follows:

Allocations for 1993-94	£ million
Agricultural and Food Research Council	109·8
Economic and Social Research Council	53·5
Medical Research Council	256·9
Natural Environment Research Council	140·0
Science and Engineering Research Council	582·1
The Royal Society	18·5
The Royal Academy of Engineering	1·7
Other, including OST initiatives, ABRC Science Policy Studies and CEST subscription	2·0
	1,164·6

I am publishing the board's advice today. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

European Bioinformatics Institute

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps the Government are taking to secure the establishment of the European Bioinformatics Institute in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am delighted to announce that the United Kingdom has today submitted a bid to host the European Bioinformatics Institute at Cambridge. This presents an exciting and important opportunity for the United Kingdom to secure an international research facility at the forefront of modern science and in an area of great and increasing importance for health care and for industry.

The EBI will be an out-station of the European molecular biology laboratory in Heidelberg. Its task will be to provide a database of biological information to researchers throughout Europe. The bid is being underwritten by the Medical Research Council, with support from the Wellcome Trust. Copies of the full text have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Scientists

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he is considering to provide incentives for scientists to continue to work within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government provide substantial funding to maintain a healthy science base in this country and to ensure continuing opportunities for our scientists. The question of career structures for scientists is one which is being examined in the context of the forthcoming White Paper on science and technology.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Investment Bank

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the new projects that are to be submitted for financing by the European investment bank and their approximate cost.

Mr. Nelson: The European investment bank—EIB—is required by its statute to seek the opinion of EC member states in whose territory a project is situated before considering it for approval. The Government are, and will remain, in close contact with the EIB, to discuss proposals submitted by United Kingdom organisations for new investment projects. However, projects under consideration are classified by the EIB as commercially confidential and it would therefore be inappropriate for the Government to list those in the United Kingdom, before the loans had been approved by the bank's board of directors.

Household Debt

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of debt per household for every £100 of disposable income for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for the level of household debt outstanding are not available. The levels of debt of the personal sector, which includes apart from households, all unincorporated private businesses, sole traders, partnerships, non-profit-making bodies, serving persons and private trusts, per £100 of disposable income for the years 1979-91 were as follows:

1979	57
1980	57
1981	62
1982	67
1983	74
1984	79
1985	85
1986	90
1987	98
1988	106
1989	111
1990	116
1991	116

Charities (VAT Rebates)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received to date calling for the introduction of a VAT rebate scheme for charities within the next Budget.

Sir John Cope: A considerable number.

Debt Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) of 18 November, Official Report, column 225, when the new contracting terms for Government contractors to be paid within 30 days came into effect.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 9 February 1993]: Guidance was issued on 14 April 1992 to all Government Departments and executive agencies. For all contract award procedures initiated after that date, all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay subcontractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract, or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the subcontractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

SCOTLAND

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Since November 1991 two firms of consultants have been used by my Department in connection with my market testing programme. Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte helped to undertake the initial scoping exercise to identify possible activities for market testing in my Department. Capita Management Consultancy is being used to assist my Department in undertaking the 1992-93 market testing programme. The total cost of these consultants up to the end of December 1992 has been £207,625 excluding VAT and expenses.

Drinking Water

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the report on drinking water quality in Scotland in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: A report has been published today by the Scottish Office Environment Department which gives an overview of drinking water quality in Scotland in 1991, under the Water (Scotland) Act 1980 and associated regulations. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The report shows that drinking water quality in 1991 has improved since 1990 as a result of the action taken by authorities to deal with water quality problems. In 1991, 98 per cent. of all regulatory determinands met the prescribed standards compared with 97 per cent. in 1990. Reported data also showed that for 48 out of 55 numerical standards, 99.8 per cent. of analytical results complied compared with 99.6 per cent. in 1990.

The failures to meet quality standards fully did not represent a risk to public health.

Ministers' Health

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice is given to Ministers in his Department (a) concerning their own personal fitness and (b) their role in promoting good health by example.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer of 21 January 1993]: Having published the policy statement "Scotland's Health: A Challenge To Us All", my right hon. Friend and his ministerial colleagues are fully aware of the life style factors which contribute to personal fitness and good health. We are also firmly committed to the undertaking in the statement that the Scottish Office will develop health promotion policies as exemplars for other employers, and this process has already begun.

Shetlands (Oil Pollution)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice his Department took before authorising the use of chemical dispersants on the Braer oil slick off the Shetland Islands.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 January 1993]: My Department's marine scientists have extensive knowledge of dispersants because of their long involvement with the North sea offshore oil industry. The limits on the sea area in which spraying could take place followed discussions which local fisheries and environmental interests.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what permission he has given for the use of Dispolene 34S and Enersperse dispersants to break up the oil slick from the Braer tanker accident off Shetland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 January 1993]: My Department authorised the use of type 2 and type 3 dispersants, of which Dispolene and Enersperse are two varieties.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will make a statement on the preparedness of further education colleges to transfer from local authority control on 1 April 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 January 1993]: Colleges are in a good state of readiness. New management structures are in place and the necessary management systems are being set up. Those working in colleges are to be congratulated on the good progress which has been made.

Tree Planting

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of (a) Forestry Commission planting, (b) private planting and (c) new trees have been planted in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales and (iii) England each year since 1981; and what were the Government targets for these years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Information on the planting undertaken by the Forestry Commission and the private sector since 1981 is given in the tables.

My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Scotland, Mr. Younger, stated on 10 December 1980, Official Report, column 927:

"there should be scope for new planting to continue in the immediate future at broadly the rate of the past 25 years" that is about 30,000 hectares a year. In his statement on the rural economy made on 9 February 1987, Official Report, columns 38-39, my right hon. Friend the then Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Mr. Jopling, announced that the Government's new planting aim would be changed to 33,000 hectares a year. This remains the indicative level.

WALES

Wayne Darvell

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reasons underlay his decision on the provision of community support for Wayne Darvell following his release after the quashing last year of his conviction for murder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The assessment of need for, and provision of, services in the community for any individual is a matter for the relevant statutory authorities—including the social services authority and/or health authority—acting in consultation with one another. I am advised that West Glamorgan social services department had already sought to give help to Mr. Darvell when he was in their area. Most recently, I understand Mr. Darvell is now living in South Glamorgan where he has been seen by health and social services staff who are discussing his needs with him.

Travellers and Displaced Persons

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the date on which his Department invited local authorities to bid for the specific grants for the education of travellers and displaced persons in the financial year 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No new bids have been invited for 1993-94. The programme for 1993-94 will support expenditure of £100,000 relating to ongoing projects in Gwynedd, Dyfed and South Glamorgan.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 2-3, if he will give further details of the capital programme for the year 1993-94 and the percentage rate of increase thereof since the year 1987-88.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish figures for (a) the gross budget for capital expenditure and (b) [illegible] budget for capital expenditure in respect of his Department's programmes (i) for each year from 1987-88 to 1992-93 and (ii) planned for 1993-94;

(2) if he will publish figures for (a) gross capital expenditure and (b) net capital expenditure in respect of his Department's programmes for each year from 1987-88 to 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Capital expenditure within the responsibility of and allocated by the Welsh Office[1]

[4] 1993-94—Plans. Planned gross expenditure in 1993-94—£1,497 million—represents an increase of 52·6 per cent. over the outturn for 1987-88; an increase of 8 per cent. in real terms.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish the right of employees of statutory bodies in Wales to make claims for a specified number of work days each year for attending courses to assist with the reading, writing and speaking of Welsh.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The provision of opportunities for employees to learn Welsh is a matter for individual employers and organisations to consider.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much financial assistance has been provided by his Department to establish Welsh language learning centres in Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will list the amount granted to each centre.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office awards grant aid to a number of organisations which support Welsh language learning, for example the Urdd, local authorities and the learners' organisation CYD. Figures for grants awarded in respect of learning centres run by these organisations are not kept separately. However, direct support for the Welsh language centres at Nant Gwrtheyrn and Canolfan Iaith Clwyd over the last five years has been as follows:

Year	Total
1988-89	49,000
1989-90	76,000
1990-91	105,000
1991-92	93,500
[1]1992-93	103,000

[1] Provision.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated by his Department in each of the last five years to assist directly the marketing of Welsh learners' courses for adults.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Direct Welsh Office support for teaching Welsh to adults over the financial years 1990-91 to 1992-93 is as follows. Figures for previous years were not kept separately.

Year	£
1990-91	538,000
1991-92	645,000
1992-93	[1]697,000

[1] Provision.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hired consultants have been employed by (a) central and (b) local government and by the public sector excluding local government in Wales to advise on the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering to (i) professional and specialist services, (ii) executive and clerical operations, (iii) office services and (iv) estate and construction services since the publication of the "Competing for Quality" White Paper; and what was the total cost of hiring consultants according to (1) the type of work to be tendered and (2) the organisation conducting or partaking in the tendering process.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available in the form requested. Three firms of consultants have been employed by the Welsh Office to advise on the Department's own current market testing programme. The cost to date of employing these consultants is £25,000. Information on the employment of consultants by other parts of the public sector is not collected centrally.

Air Quality

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on recent air quality audits conducted in Wales by the Warren Spring Laboratory on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Warren Spring Laboratory conducted a survey of nitrogen dioxide levels in the United Kingdom in 1991-92. All the readings for Wales were well below EC guideline limits.

The laboratory is also currently taking measurements in Wales as part of a survey of toxic organic micropollutants in urban air and an interim report was published in September 1992. Monitoring is continuing and trends in readings are being analysed.

Copies of the published reports of both surveys are held in the Library of the House.

Contracting Out

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific processes have been established by his Department to monitor the effectiveness of contracted-out services in comparison to services undertaken prior to contractorisation in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Monitoring of contracted-out service delivery in the local authority and health service sectors is the responsibility of those sectors. Specifications for contracts let in respect of the Department's own current market testing programme will be performance-based and will form the basis for the monitoring of the service deliverer's performance.

Credit Approvals

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 10, what is the estimated amount in the reduction of basic credit approvals (a) to Mid-Glamorgan and (b) to Welsh counties arising from the transfer of further education institutions.

Mr. David Hunt: Local authority credit approvals have been reduced in total by £8·915 million in 1993-94 compared with the level which would otherwise have been set to take account of the transfer of further education institutions. A deduction was not made as such for each individual county. Basic credit approvals are allocated according to a formula agreed with the local authority associations.

Inward Investment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment is made of environmental factors in encouraging inward investment into Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The excellent environmental attractions of Wales continue to be a factor in encouraging high levels of inward investment.

Astra Skillcentre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the south Glamorgan training and enterprise council concerning the future of the Astra skillcentre at Gabalfa, Cardiff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Recycling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress made by local authorities in introducing recycling schemes in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information relating to increases in the number of bottle banks will be published in the 1992 series of the "Environmental Digest for Wales". Definitive information on other aspects of recycling will not be available until district councils complete their recycling plans under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in the coal industry in (a) Wales and (b) Clwyd in (i) deep mining and (ii) opencast mining in 1980, 1990 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: The available information is presented in the following table:

Number employed in coal mining

	1980	1990	1992
Wales
Deep-mined	30,842	4,669	1,293
Opencast	2,265	1,221	1,311
Clwyd
Deep-mined	1,322	587	437
North Wales[1]
Opencast[1]	165	21	11

[1] Separate figures for Clwyd are not available.
Source: British Coal.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in the steel industry in (a) Wales and (b) Clwyd in 1980, 1989 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of people employed in the steel industry in Wales in 1980, 1989 and 1992 were 32,200, 19,400 and 16,500 respectively. Comparable figures for Clwyd cannot be given, as to do so would breach rules of company confidentiality.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in the aerospace industry in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales in 1980, 1990 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: According to the census of employment, in September 1981 there were 6,500 people employed in the aerospace industry in Wales. In the latest available census, in September 1989, this figure had risen to 9,300.

Figures at county level cannot be given, as to do so would breach rules of company confidentiality.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many construction workers are currently unemployed in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The sample size for the labour force survey is not sufficiently large to allow a reliable estimate of unemployment by region and by previous industrial sector.

Road Congestion and Accidents

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost to industry of road congestion and road accidents in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the cost to industry of road congestion and road accidents is not available. The total cost of road accidents in Wales in 1991 is estimated to be £230 million.

Upland Areas

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning hill livestock compensatory allowances in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from Welsh Members of Parliament, the Welsh farming organisations and individual farmers in respect of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in Wales. I have also recently had meetings with two Welsh Members of Parliament, some farmers and representatives from the Welsh farming unions to discuss this matter.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy for upland areas in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 19 June 1992, at column 711.

Liverpool Bay Gas Reserves

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the development in Clwyd of the Liverpool Bay gas reserves; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have received many representations in relation to the application by Hamilton Oil for planning permission for a gas and oil terminal at Point of Ayr, Clwyd. A public local inquiry has been held and a decision will be issued as soon as possible.

Hospital Incinerators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospital incinerators in Wales that (a) burn less than 25 kg of clinical waste per hour and (b) burn less than 1 tonne of clinical waste per hour.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no hospital incinerators in Wales that burn less than 25 kg of clinical waste per hour. The hospital incinerators that burn less than 1 tonne of clinical waste per hour are as follows.

PRIME MINISTER

Fisheries Decommissioning Scheme

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will administer the fishing decommissioning scheme for the entire United Kingdom fishing fleet; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will administer the decommissioning scheme on behalf of all four fisheries departments. The scheme is part of a package, including effort control measures, designed to conserve fish stocks and help to meet targets the United Kingdom as a whole under the European Community's multi-annual guidance programme.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to co-ordinate the activities of Departments on the transportation of radioactive materials from and to Thorp; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Transport arrangments are the responsibility of the consignor, subject to meeting the requirements of the Department of Transport on safety issues and the Department of Trade and Industry on export control and security issues. The two Departments co-ordinate as necessary.

Youth Policy

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to the establishment of a ministerial group to co-ordinate youth policy across Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The interests of young people can best be served through action which addresses specific issues. Where action involves more than one Department, co-ordination between Ministers takes place. These arrangements work satisfactorily and there is currently no need to establish a formal ministerial group.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Financial Management

Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 551, if he will outline the initiatives planned by the Director of Finance and Administration to improve financial management systems in House Departments.

Mr. Beith: In addition to the further development of measures already taken, the Director of Finance and Administration is planning to introduce an integrated payroll and personnel system for staff of the House early in the next financial year. A new computer system for the Fees Office is also under consideration.

EDUCATION

Sanctuary Buildings, London

Mr Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his estimate of the amount to be spent in 1993-94 in rent and other costs associated with the offices of his Department in Sanctuary buildings, Great Smith street, London.

Mr. Boswell: The estimated rent for Sanctuary buildings for the financial year 1993-94 is £10,368,823. This figure includes the service charge and VAT. The estimated contribution in lieu of rates to be made for Sanctuary buildings is £2,350,400.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing for each education authority the percentage cash increase between education standard spending assessments for 1992-93 and 1993-94; how much of this increase is due to changes in student numbers; how much this increase is in standard 1992-93 price terms, using the inflation estimate in the autumn statement; and what is the percentage relationship of the 1993-94 standard spending assessment with the 1992-93 budget.

Mr. Boswell: Local education authorities' standard spending assessments—SSAs—for 1993-94 are not directly comparable with those for 1992-93: they will be lower in cash terms, mainly because local authorities will from this April hand over responsibility for most further education to the Further Education Funding Council, and will begin to relinquish responsibility for school inspections. When these changes of functions are taken into account, there is an underlying percentage cash increase in the national total of education SSAs of 2·9 per cent. This reflects falling inflation and the Government's policy that in the coming year public sector pay increases should be held to between nil and 1·5 per cent. It also acknowledges differing spending pressures on LEAs including demographic changes, and their general scope for obtaining further improvements in value for money.

The table sets out for each local education authority the education component of the SSA for 1992-93, adjusted on an estimated basis, to remove the element relating to functions that the LEA will relinquish from next year; and compares this with the education component of the SSA for 1993-94.

Local authorities' education SSAs for 1993-94 were not calculated by reference to further education student numbers because of the transfer of responsibility for most of further education to the new funding council. The differences in the percentage change in individual LEAs' education SSAs reflect differences between LEAs in the relative rate of growth or decrease of school pupil or client group numbers and changes in LEAs' relative positions on the indices for additional educational needs, sparsity of population, free school meals and area costs.

The aggregate total of authorities' education budgets for 1992-93 is £19,013 million. The aggregate total of authorities' education SSAs for 1993-94 is £16,530·7 million, which is 13 per cent. less than this total budget figure. However the two figures are not comparable. LEAs' 1992-93 education budgets take account of expenditure on further education, for which local authorities will not be responsible in 1993-94, and expenditure supported by specific grant, which is excluded from the 1993-94 aggregate total of education SSAs.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the per capita standard spending assessment for 1993-94 for (a) Wiltshire and (b) English education authorities on average.

Mr. Forth: For the purpose of determining standard spending assessments, the education component of standard spending, net of specific grants, is divided into five sub-blocks—under-fives, primary, secondary, 16 plus, and other education. Within each sub-block, the money available is distributed on the basis of the relevant pupil or other client group numbers. The per capita figures for each sub-block for 1993-94 are set out in the table.

Some care must be taken in drawing conclusions from the figures. First, the figures are only notional allocations. The standard spending assessment system is a mechanism for distributing grant between authorities. Because authorities have discretion to decide their own spending priorities, the sub-blocks and the per capita figures in them have no meaning outside the framework of the distribution mechanism.

Second, the per capita figures for primary, secondary and 16 plus pupils include provision for children in special schools, related central services and related functions such as home-to-school transport. Therefore they are not comparable with age weighted pupil units in LEAs' schemes of local management.

Third, the control total for the 16 plus sub-block notionally reflects LEAs' residual responsibilities for 16 plus students in sixth form colleges, such as home to college transport, as well as their continuing responsibilities for pupils in school sixth forms. The main client group for this sub-block is the number of pupils aged 16 and over but part of the control total is distributed by reference to the number of pupils aged 11 to 15.

The Other Education block is based on the population aged over 11 years, with an additional weighting for those aged 16 to 24 years to reflect LEAs' continuing responsibilities for some further education students after the transfer of responsibility for most further education to the Further Education Funding Council this April.

Subject to these qualifications the figures in pounds are:

	Wiltshire	England
Under 5	224	279	per head of under 5 population
Primary	1,787	1,921	per pupil aged 5 to 10
Secondary	2,590	2,775	per pupil aged 11 to 15
16+	3,644	3,864	per pupil aged 16+
Other
(a) 11+	13	15	per head of 11+ population
(b) 16-24	39	43	per head of 16-24 population

English Teaching

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations he has received about key stage 3 English.

Mr. Forth: Since the beginning of the year my right hon. Friend has received about 1,500 letters on the subject of key stage 3 English assessment tests.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the Government's expenditure plans for the Higher Education Funding Council for such years as figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: Provision for recurrent grant for the Higher Education Funding Council for England is £2,465 million in 1993-94, £2,606 million in 1994-95 and £2,598 million in 1995-96. Provision for capital grant is £319 million, £322 million and £329 million.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has completed two market tests since November 1991. Its publications dispatch service has been contracted out to Westex Ltd.; the Department's library service has remained in-house.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Department's market testing programme is co-ordinated by six staff—1·5 full-time equivalent posts—who undertake this work within their normal duties. Line management staff in the areas being market tested also contribute. The estimated cost of the programme, in direct staff costs and consultancy costs, since November 1991 is some £203,000.

Research Course Degrees

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if, further to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 281, he will list those institutions which have applied to him for authority to award (a) taught and (b) research course degrees and have not yet been awarded it.

Mr. Boswell: Applications for degree-awarding powers are made to the Privy Council. The Privy Council receives advice on such applications from the Secretary of State who is advised by the Higher Education Quality Council —HEQC. The following institutions have made applications which are presently under consideration:

Guildhall School of Music and Drama
Royal Agricultural College
Royal Northern College of Music
Luton College of Higher Education

The applications from the first three institutions did not specifically distinguish between taught course or research degree powers, and the HEQC is discussing with these institutions the appropriate scope of the applications. The application from Luton college is for research degree powers only, as the college already has taught course degree-awarding powers.

Further and Higher Education Colleges

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 282, he will list those institutions who have applied to him to be incorporated under sections 15 and 16 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and which wish to designate themselves colleges of further and higher education.

Mr. Boswell: In addition to those institutions listed in my reply to the hon. Member on 20 January, the following colleges, which have been incorporated under section 15 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, have applied to my right hon. Friend to adopt the title college of further and higher education:

Grimsby College of Technology and Arts
Guildford College of Technology
Northbrook College of Design and Technology, Worthing.

Medical School Applicants

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has on the percentage of United Kingdom resident medical school applicants accepted, broken down by sex and by ethnic origin, distinguishing (a) Asian-Bangladeshi, (b) Asian-Chinese, (c) Asian-Indian, (d) Asian-Pakistani, (e) Asian—other, (f) total Asian, (g) black, (h) white and (i) total; and what are the percentages for each medical school.

Mr. Boswell: Universities Central Council on Admissions statistics show that 51 per cent. of all accepted home applicants for undergraduate medical courses in autumn 1991 were women. The UCCA does not publish information on the ethnic origin of applicants by subject category, nor for individual universities.

ENVIRONMENT

Structure Plan, Hampshire

Mr. Malone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to approve the structure plan submitted by Hampshire county council.

Mr. Baldry: As soon as possible.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many cases he has overruled a Boundary Commission's recommendations in London since 1989; and if he will identify changes proposed by the commission in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table gives details of the decisions made so far on Local Government Boundary Commission reviews of London. None of the rejected proposals was referred back to the commission for a fresh review.

EC Environmental Directives

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources his Department will commit to providing the European Commission with data in regard to the annual report on implementation and enforcement of EC environmental directives and regulations.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission's plan to present to the Environment Council the findings of their annual report on environmental legislation arises from an initiative we took as presidency to encourage other member states and the Commission to take implementation and reporting as seriously as we do. The United Kingdom need commit no new resources.

PM_{10} Particulates

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the major sources of PM_{10} particulates in the local atmosphere; what are the principal health effects; and whether he will set an air quality standard for PM_{10}.

Mr. Maclean: The major sources of PM_{10} particulates in the local atmosphere are fuel conbustion—in towns and cities, principally diesel and petrol—wind-blown dusts both natural and man-made and aerosol particles formed by chemical reactions of primary pollution emissions. At high concentrations particulate material in conjunction with sulphur dioxide can exacerbate respiratory illnesses such as bronchitis, and can lead to reductions in lung function. Trace amounts of carcinogens can also occur in association with airborne particulates.

My Department, in close collaboration with the Department of Health, has established the expert panel on air quality standards to develop recommendations for possible new standards and guidelines for air quality in the United Kingdom. The panel is considering several air pollutants, one of which is PM_{10}, and will report on these in due course.

Air Pollution

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many enhanced urban network air pollution monitoring stations he plans to establish in urban areas by 2000; which sites are already committed; what criteria will be used to prioritise commitments to future sites; and what resources he will make available to local authorities without enhanced urban network stations who wish to undertake quality-assured air quality monitoring.

Mr. Maclean: In the second year report on the environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", we announced our intention to continue the expansion of the urban network to cover all major cities by 1997. The precise number of stations will depend on the availability of resources. Stations are already operating or expected to come into operation this year in London, Cardiff, Belfast, Edinburgh, Birmingham, Newcastle, Leeds, Bristol, Liverpool, Hull, Leicester and Southampton.

In determining priorities for future sites my Department will take account of factors such as population and associated traffic activity, other significant local sources of pollution and any other local features, such as topography, that may be of relevance.

My Department will issue a discussion paper later this year on how central and local monitoring efforts can best be integrated and supported, taking account of the need for adequate quality assurance and control. Meanwhile, my Department is pleased to help local authorities with documentation and advise on these matters so far as resources permit.

Local Authority Debts

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the methodology for the future treatment of accumulated local authority debt, in circumstances where an authority ceases to exist as a result of local government reorganisation.

Mr. Robin Squire: I would expect the assets and liabilities of such local authorities to be transferred to successor authorities, as in previous reorganisations of local government. But the detailed financial implications of reorganisation are still under consideration.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to publish the proceedings of the seminar on sustainable development policies for Britain which his Department is holding in Oxford in March.

Mr. Maclean: My Department will hold a seminar at Green college, Oxford, from 18 to 20 March with a range of people from other Departments and outside government to inform our thinking about the report which the United Kingdom must submit to the UN Commission on Sustainable Development this year. Green college will produce a summary of highlights from the discussion which will be distributed to many people with whom we are discussing the preparation of the report. I shall place a copy in the Library of the House. The seminar itself is just one part of a wide public consultation exercise.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from among the United Kingdom research community and environmentalists on the level of Government funding for research on international environmental policy issues; and what assessment he has made of the performance of Economic and Social Research Council and other Government-funded research programmes in this area.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is in frequent contact with the United Kingdom research community and environmentalists on the levels and direction of research on international environmental policy issues. Responsibility for assessing the performance of ESRC and other Government-funded research programmes rests with the funding bodies concerned.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set up a consultation process with academic specialists, environmental groups and other expert parties in order to establish national and international environmental research programmes, along the lines of that operated in the Netherlands.

Mr. Maclean: My Department already operates a well-established, comprehensive system of consultation on its research programmes.

East Thames Corridor

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the proposed development of the east Thames corridor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The report by the consultants commissioned by my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) in 1991 into the potential of the east Thames corridor for development and environmental enhancement was received in November 1992. Consideration is being given to the findings of that study in the context of the wider planning guidance for the south-east, which is under review. It is hoped to publish consultation papers on the regional guidance and the east Thames corridor in the near future.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about air quality and air pollution along the east Thames corridor.

Mr. Maclean: The Department has received three representations in the last three months.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the proposed east Thames corridor development.

Mr. Baldry: Frequent representations are received from local authorities, business interests, the development industry, organisations concerned with the conservation of the natural and built environment and others about the studies which are being undertaken of the east Thames corridor and about future planning policy for the area.

Parliament Square (Air Quality)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what records his Department has of the results of monitoring air quality at Parliament square, Westminster.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has no records of air quality at Parliament square, Westminster.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an announcement about his Department's spending plans for the years 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Mr. Howard: Yes. I have today published my Department's annual report for 1993, Cm 2207. This sets out in detail the outcome of the public expenditure survey announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement on 12 November 1992. It also provides the policy background to each of the spending programmes and policies and information on performance targets, output measures and value for money.

The report sets out what we are doing to improve the quality of life internationally, nationally and locally. This is the central thread which ties all our policies together.

This is true whether the policies and programmes are aimed at protecting the environment; enhancing, and improving access to, the countryside; regenerating the inner cities; helping every family to have a decent home or improving the framework for the delivery of local government services.

The environment is at the forefront of the agenda for each of these areas, and details of how environmental objectives are integrated into the Department's work are provided throughout the report.

The report plays a key part in the Department's accountability to Parliament and to the public—a significant theme of the citizens charter—with its performance and plans laid out for all to see.

Rural Petrol Stations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications of the EC directive on vapour recovery for the operation of rural petrol stations.

Mr. Maclean: A draft EC directive is under consideration which would require the recovery of vapour from the storage and distribution of petrol in order to minimise emissions of volatile organic compounds. We welcome this in principle. However, our consultations with industry, including the operators of petrol stations, suggest that the costs of compliance with the proposed directive in its present form could represent an unreasonable burden on small stations in rural areas for very little environmental benefits. We are therefore seeking an exemption for such stations from the requirement to fit vapour recovery equipment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rubber Bullets

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which date rubber bullets were first issued to security forces in Northern Ireland; and whether rubber bullets were available to soldiers in Northern Ireland in January 1972.

Mr. Mates: Rubber bullets were first made available to members of the security forces in Northern Ireland in 1970 and remained in use until 1975, when they were replaced by plastic baton rounds.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The following firms of consultants have been used to advise on the Northern Ireland market testing programme since November 1991:

BET FM Ltd.
CAPITA
Coopers & Lybrand Deloitte
Helm Corporation
Leopold Joseph & Sons
Logicom
Michael Willacy Associates
MVM Consultants Plc
SERCO
Symonds Facilities Management Plc
Witt Thornton (Management Services)

The total cost was £348,549.

In line with the White Paper "Competing for Quality", private sector consultancies have helped to determine the most promising new areas for market testing and contracting out and have also been used to strengthen Northern Ireland Departments' market testing capability.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many late applications were received for suckler cow premium in respect of 1990 and 1991; and how many of these were (a) paid in full, (b) paid in part and (c) refused.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

		1990	1991
Number of late applications received		124	74
(a)	Number paid in full	—	—
(b)	Number paid in part	85	51
(c)	Number refused	39	23

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many late applications for suckler cow premium in respect of 1992 he has received to date.

Mr. Hanley: Two hundred and thirty-three to date.

TRANSPORT

Airports (Credit Approvals)

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the 1993-94 supplementary credit approvals for public airport companies and local authority airports.

Mr. Norris: Supplementary credit approvals totalling £12 million will be available for public airport companies and local authority airports for 1993-94. These credit approvals, together with other resources which public airport companies expect at this stage to invest, will assist the airports concerned to provide facilities which they estimate could cost some £83 million in 1993-94.

We have today agreed to supplementary credit approvals totalling £4 million at this stage. The projects concerned include the continuation of work on the south apron and taxiway and on the new control tower and fire station at Coventry airport, runway resurfacing at Exeter airport and lighting schemes at Biggin Hill airport. Formal supplementary credit approvals for these and other projects will be issued to the local authorities shortly.

The £12 million supplementary credit approval provision for local authority airports, used in conjunction with airports' internal resources, will ensure that safety and security schemes can proceed. We look to the private sector to play the major role in financing significant airport expansion.

Tanker Routes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that tankers and owners use a shipping route west of St. Kilda.

Mr. Norris: Tanker routeing around the United Kingdom coast, including St. Kilda, will be considered by Lord Donaldson in his inquiry. Pending the outcome of that inquiry, a voluntary code is being developed which will place restrictions on tankers navigating through sensitive areas.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has submitted proposals for the attention of the EC Council of Transport and Environmental Ministers in respect of tanker exclusion zones on environmental and safety grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: As my noble friend the Minister for Shipping announced on 4 February, agreement in principle has been reached with organisations representing oil companies, tanker operators and shipping interests on voluntary measures in the form of a code to be promulgated by mid-March, which it is intended will include restrictions on tankers operating in sensitive areas. The code will be transmitted by the Government to the International Maritime Organisation for consideration and endorsement by the maritime safety committee in May with a view to publication internationally as an addition to the "Ship Routeing" document issued by the IMO. I will draw these developments to the attention of the European Commission.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the outcome of the EC Council of Transport and Environment Ministers on 25 January concerning tanker exclusion zones; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what timetables have been agreed by (a) the EC Council of Ministers and (b) the United Nations International Maritime Organisation for the consideration of submissions for tanker exclusion zones; and what is the relationship between the two timetables.

Mr. Norris: The EC Council of Transport and Environment Ministers urged the Commission to bring forward its communication on maritime safety so that a first discussion of it can take place at the March meeting of the Transport Council. Among other matters to be examined in the communication is identification of areas of ecological interest for which restrictions, such as routeing measures or areas to be avoided, might be appropriate. No timetable has been agreed either in the EC or in the IMO for consideration of any proposals that may emerge.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which sensitive areas around the coast of Northern Ireland are included in the areas to be avoided by tankers; and which fishermen's organisations were consulted in preparation of the voluntary agreement between his Department and the oil companies.

Mr. Norris: It is too early to anticipate the detailed provisions of the voluntary agreement, including the designated sensitive areas, that is being developed by industry. The following fishermen's organisations attended the meeting on 4 February that led to the concept of the code:

National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations.
Scottish Fishermen's Federation.

Marine Safety

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the new areas which he will propose to the May meeting of the International Maritime Organisation marine safety committee as recommendations for the status of areas to be avoided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No decision has yet been taken to propose any new "areas to be avoided" to the IMO. The routeing of tankers, among other issues, is within the terms of reference of the inquiry to be conducted by Lord Donaldson. Pending the outcome of that inquiry, officials met with organisations representing oil companies, tanker operators and shipping interests on 4 February and agreed in principle voluntary measures in the form of a code to be promulgated by mid-March, which it is intended will include restrictions on tankers operating in sensitive areas. The code will be transmitted by the Government to the IMO for consideration and endorsement by the maritime safety committee in May with a view to publication internationally as an addition to the "Ship Routeing" document issued by the IMO.

Model Aircraft (Air-misses)

Mr. Malone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the air-miss incidents involving model aircraft flying (a) within and (b) outwith controlled air space which have been reported to the Civil Aviation Authoirity since reporting of such incidents was made mandatory.

Mr. Norris: The records of the Civil Aviation Authority's safety data and analysis unit show that between April 1977 and December 1992 there have been 12 reports of air misses between model aircraft and real aircraft. Of these six took place in controlled air space. The other six took place outside controlled air space, but of these three were in aerodrome traffic zones.

In addition, between June 1979 and May 1992, there have been four collisions between full size aircraft and other airborne objects which are believed to have been model aircraft. Also since 1987 there have been three fatal accidents involving model aircraft; in one case a hang glider pilot was killed and the other two each resulted in the death of a person on the ground.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to privatise the Vehicle Inspectorate agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend has consulted publicly on the future of the Vehicle Inspectorate's heavy goods and passenger-carrying vehicle testing functions, including the scope for private sector involvement; the consultation document made clear that he does not consider the inspectorate's enforcement functions appropriate for privatisation. He is considering a decision in the light of the consultees' responses and will make an announcement in due course.

Maritime Emergency Oganisation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable of his proposals in respect of the privatisation of the Marine Emergency Organisation.

Mr. Norris: We have no plans to privatise the MEO. We are currently considering the possibility of executive agency status.

DVOIT

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the timetable for the privatisation of the Driver, Vehicles and Operators Information Technology agency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend announced proposals for the privatisation of DVOIT on 19 October 1992, Official Report, column 209. I expect that DVOIT will move into the private sector by about the end of 1993.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable of his proposals in respect of the privatisation of the DVLA.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 20 November 1992, Official Report, columns 406-7.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable of his proposals in respect of the privatisation of the Driving Standards Agency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 20 November 1992, Official Report, columns 406-7.

Surveyors General Organisation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable of his proposals in respect of the privatisation of the Surveyors General Organisation.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 10 November 1992, Official Report, column 675. The Surveyors General Organisation is not being privatised. A consultation document on the scope for increased private sector participation in respect of that part of its work relating to survey and certification was issued on 14 December 1992; the deadline for responses is 12 March 1993.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable of his proposals in respect of the privatisation of the Transport Research Laboratory.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Transport Research Laboratory became an executive agency in April 1992. At the same time the control of research budgets passed to departmental customers; TRL now must compete for an increasing proportion of the Department's research business. I keep the future of the agency, as with all parts of my Department, under constant review and any plans for privatisation would, of course, be notified to Parliament and be the subject of consultation with staff.

London-Portsmouth Railway Line

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy on the future of the railway line between Portsmouth and London Victoria via the south coast, Barham and Gatwick airport.

Mr. Freeman: It is our intention to franchise, in due course, the operation of all passenger services currently run by British Rail. The franchising director will base the initial franchises on the timetable operated by British Rail prior to franchising. Subsidy will be available for all socially necessary services.

West London Rail Links

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of the privatisation of British Rail on the residents of Northolt, Perivale, Greenford, Hanwell and Ealing.

Mr. Norris: We expect that the privatisation of BR will lead to an improvement in the quality of all rail services.

Bristol Harbour Revision Order

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will postpone his Department's public inquiry into the Port of Bristol Harbour Revision Order until the House has debated and reached a decision on the recommendations in the First report of the Trade and Industry Committee on energy policy and the market for coal.

Mr. Norris: I refer to my written reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) on 14 January 1993, at column 816.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments he has made of the arrangements for preventing a casualty such as the Braer, or mitigating the effects of such a casualty, off the south coast of England.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Secretary of State for Transport announced in his statement to the House of 11 January, Official Report, columns 609-10, an inquiry under the chairmanship of Lord Donaldson to advise on whether any further measures are appropriate and feasible to protect the United Kingdom coastline from pollution from merchant shipping.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of "Tourism in the UK: Realising the Potential", as it applies to his Department's responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Most of the action points in "Tourism in the UK: Realising the Potential" which come under the remit of my Department have been taken forward, in most cases via the statutory tourist board.

The British Tourist Authority held a successful conference in October last year to encourage foreign language training in the tourism industry; the British Tourist Authority, the English tourist board—ETB—and the regional tourist boards are working to promote training opportunities within the industry; my Department's proposal for an initiative to disseminate information on facilities for tourists with disabilities was incorporated in the European Community tourism action plan; in November last year we hosted, with the English tourist board, an international Tourism and the Environment conference with speakers and delegates from the United Kingdom and other EC member states; together with the Department of the Environment—DoE—we have commissioned research into the feasibility of obtaining better information on the numbers of day visitors, to assist the calculation of standard spending assessments; we collaborated with the Department of the Environment on the production of the planning policy guidance note on tourism development; the English tourist board will launch Industrial Heritage Year in February; industry leaders have had the chance to comment on the JICTOURS working group's report, and a more permanent user forum is being established.

My Department continues to work with other Departments to take forward issues under their control which were mentioned in "Tourism in the UK" and which affect the tourism industry.

Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he intends to meet the chairman of the British Tourist Authority to discuss the future of tourism in Great Britain.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of the British Tourist Authority. I expect to discuss the authority's corporate plan with the chairman when it is submitted in the spring.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the cost per visitor for each museum and gallery in receipt of funding deriving from his Department.

Mr. Key: The estimated cost per visitor is as follows, taken to one decimal place for figures for the grant-in-aid and number of visitors:

	Grant-in-aid (financial year 1992-93) £ million	No. of visitors (1992) million	Cost per visitor £
British Museum	32·4	6·7	4·84
Natural History Museum	28·9	1·6	18·1
Imperial War Museum	11·0	1·1	10·0
National Gallery	17·9	4·3	4·20
National Maritime Museum	11·6	0·5	23·20
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	13·4	1·2	11·20
National Portrait Gallery	5·6	0·8	7·00
Science Museum	22·4	2·6	8·62
Tate Gallery	16·6	2·2	7·55
Victoria and Albert Museum	30·1	1·5	20·07

Manchester Museum of Science and Industry	2·2	0·3	7·33
Museum of London	4·1	0·3	13·70
Sir John Soane's Museum	0·6	0·04	15·00
Geffrye Museum	0·9	0·05	18·00
Horniman Museum	2·6	0·2	13·00

Royal Palaces (Entrance Fees)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total amount of the entrance fees collected at those royal palaces open to the public for the latest year for which figures are available; and to what purposes the revenues are applied.

Mr. Key: This is an operational matter for the Historic Royal Palaces agency which is responsible for managing those royal palaces open to the public. I have therefore asked the chief executive of the agency to reply to the hon. Member and will arrange for his reply to be published in the Official Report.

Letter from David Beeton to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 5 February 1993:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about entrance fees collected at the Royal Palaces. My Agency is responsible for the management of the Historic Royal Palaces.
The Agency's income and expenditure for 1991-92 was:-

	£ million	£ million
Total Expenditure (net of VAT refunds)	—	23.5
Entrance Charge income	10·1	—
Other Business income	5·7	15·8
Borne by the taxpayer	—	7.7

You may be interested in the enclosed copy of our latest Annual Report and Accounts, which includes full details of our income and expenditure in 1991-92. Copies of this report may also be found in the House of Commons Library.
The Government has no funding or supervisory responsibility for entrance charges at the occupied Royal Palaces.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My Department is currently in the process of contracting out a range of central services, including mailroom services, minor maintenance, office cleaning, porterage, reprographics, security, central typing and secretarial cover. No contracts have yet been awarded for these. The Department has awarded a contract to Sema Group Limited for the supply of computer equipment and associated services.

Royal parks division contracted out grounds maintenance work in February 1992. The successful contractors were: Brophy plc, Glendale Industries Limited, Serco plc, Turfsoil Limited and Tyler Environmental Services Limited. The division is currently market testing building agent services and estates management.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: A small number of staff in my Department have been assigned to work on the market testing programme amongst their other duties. The total cost of the programme since November 1991 would include staff costs and associated overheads, plus consultancy fees of £541,198. It is not readily possible to separate the cost of the relatively minor staff involvement and overheads to give an overall total.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Five firms of consultants have been used to advise on areas which are now the responsibility of my Department since November 1991: PE International have advised on the provision of central services in the Department; Cluttons, Watts and Partners and Gillhespies have advised my Department's Royal Parks Division; and Land Use Consultants have advised the Historic Royal Palaces agency. The total cost of consultancies is £541,198. A proportion of this cost would have been met by the Department of the Environment, which was responsible for the royal parks and the Historic Royal Palaces agency until April 1992.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Africa

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the conclusions of the World Bank report "Sub-Saharan Africa: from Crisis to Sustainable Growth" about the amount by which real levels of official aid to Africa need to increase per year through the 1990s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The World Bank report concludes, on certain assumptions, that to achieve 5 per cent. per annum GDP growth, additional development assistance to Africa needs to grow at 4 per cent. per annum in real terms.

We agree that Africa will require a sustained high level of concessionary external assistance. However, the provision of such assistance will only have lasting impact if it is accompanied by the successful implementation of economic and political reform in individual African countries, enabling domestic resources to be used efficiently and encouraging the private sector.

We aim to maintain a significant level of development assistance for sub-Saharan Africa in the years ahead both bilaterally and through multilateral and EC channels. We have also been prominent among those calling for more generous relief of official debt and we are pleased that 11 African countries have now benefited from Trinidad terms.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the bilateral and multilateral aid programme spent in Africa has been (a) project aid and (b) programme aid for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The figures requested are as follows:

Project and programme aid to Africa 1979 to 1991[1]

Year	Gross British bilateral aid to Africa
	£ millions	Project aid[2] Per cent.	Programme aid Per cent.
1979	231	42·1	16·8
1980	257	35·7	13·6
1981	300	38·6	10·5
1982	247	43·1	13·4
1983	237	42·4	8·9
1984	268	46·9	6·1
1985	315	32·1	9·2
1986	285	31·4	15·2
1987	308	26·6	17·2
1988	427	22·7	26·2
1989	514	27·3	30·9
1990	389	32·3	13·2
1991	521	29·2	21·2

[1] Data are not readily available on multilateral disbursements by project and programme aid.

[2] Project aid also includes disbursement from the Aid and Trade Provision and CDC project expenditure; it does not include Technical Co-operation projects.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the bilateral aid programme was spent in Africa for each year since 1979; and what the amount was in cash terms and in constant terms since 1979.

Mr. Lennox Boyd [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The figures requested are as follows:

Gross bilateral aid to Africa 1979-91

Year	Cash terms	Constant terms (1991 prices)	Percentage of total bilateral aid allocable by continent Per cent.
1979	231	551	38·3
1980	257	513	42·3
1981	300	538	40·7
1982	247	411	43·2
1983	237	375	40·6
1984	268	405	40·0
1985	315	451	45·3
1986	285	394	40·5
1987	308	406	49·5
1988	427	528	50·3
1989	514	593	53·8
1990	389	417	46·0
1991	521	521	49·4

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase bilateral and multilateral aid to Africa in the next financial year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Africa remains a priority for the overseas aid programme. Almost half of our bilateral aid is directed to Africa. The precise level of spending varies from year to year and depends upon the progress of individual projects and programmes. We will aim to make available substantial support to poorer countries in Africa with which we have close connections and which are pursuing sound development policies. We take the same view in the multilateral agencies to which we contribute.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the multilateral aid programme was spent in Africa for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The information requested is in the table.

United Kingdom share of multilateral aid to Africa 1979 to 1990

Year	United Kingdom share of multilateral aid to Africa £ million	Total allocable multilateral aid £ million	Allocable multilateral aid spent in Africa Per cent.
1979	N/a	N/a	N/a
1980	116	242	48
1981	147	316	46
1982	173	371	47
1983	189	429	44
1984	227	479	47
1985	232	432	54
1986	233	462	50
1987	239	478	50
1988	301	587	51
1989	334	615	54
1990	366	626	58

Notes:

1. The figures given are estimated by the Overseas Development Administration Statistics Department using data provided by the Development Assistance Committee of the OECD on the spending patterns of multilateral agencies, and United Kingdom contributions to multilateral organisations.
2. Estimates were first calculated for 1980 and are not available for 1979.
3. The 1990 figure is a provisional estimate.

Multilateral Aid (Contracts)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the value of contracts won by United Kingdom companies in competition for contracts financed through multilateral aid and how many jobs are created or secured; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Aggregate figures for the value of contracts awarded through multilateral aid agencies, including multilateral development banks, are difficult to estimate because not all agencies compile statistics on contracts awarded by nationality; and for those which do, there are significant differences in the way data are reported. Because of these limitations, it is not possible to estimate the total value of business secured by United Kingdom firms through multilateral aid agencies. As I told the hon. Member on 26 January, at column 636, our best estimate is that for every £1 we contribute to multilateral agencies, they spend on average £1·40 on British goods and services. This is based on incomplete data averaged over several years. No estimate has been made of the employment impact of such business.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been provided by Her Majesty's Government to provide for displaced persons in Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 8 February 1993]: We have committed over £70·5 million in humanitarian relief to displaced people and other victims of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia. £41 million has been committed through the EC. The remaining £29·5 million is in direct bilateral assistance, nearly all of which is focused on Bosnia-Hercegovina where the needs are greatest. This bilateral assistance has been spent on such things as the rehabilitation of buildings to provide accommodation for 20,000 displaced people in the Zenica area, the provision of 43 trucks and support staff to deliver relief goods, and the restoration of electricity supplies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Agencies (Performance Measures)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the current primary and secondary performance measures for (a) the Warren Springs Laboratory Agency, (b) the National Engineering Laboratory Agency, (c) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist Agency and (d) the National Physical Laboratory Agency; and what steps are taken to keep the measures under review.

Mr. Leigh: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 13 January 1993, Official Report, column 739 in respect of the Warren Spring Laboratory agency; the answer given on 15 December 1992, Official Report, columns 144-45 in respect of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist agency; the answer given on 16 July 1992, Official Report, column 992 in respect of the National Engineering Laboratory agency; and the answer given on 3 July 1990 Official Report, columns 499-500 in respect of the National Physical Laboratory agency. All the agencies' targets are reviewed annually, including the National Physical Laboratory agency's longer-term targets, as part of their corporate planning processes.

SMART and SPUR Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications and acceptances for SMART and SPUR grants were made in each region in the first six months of the current financial year; and what was the value of (a) grants awarded and (b) grants paid.

Mr. Leigh: The number of applications and acceptances, and the grants awarded and paid under the small firms merit award for research and technology—SMART—and support for products under research—SPUR—schemes from 1 April 1992 to 30 September 1992 are as follows:

SMART

Premium Rate Phone Calls

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what protection parents have from the excessive use of premium rate phone calls by children responding to magazine competitions.

Mr. Leigh: The Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services—ICSTIS—recognises that children are a vulnerable audience for premium rate telephone services and are not responsible for paying for them. The ICSTIS code of practice therefore contains a number of measures which help to protect children and their parents. No children's service may exceed seven and half minutes in length and all children's services must terminate automatically. Promotional material must feature a clear and prominent statement giving the maximum cost of the call and stressing that the service should only be used with the permission of the bill payer. In addition, any children's service which exceeds one minute in length must begin with a statement which urges the caller to seek the permission of the bill payer before using the telephone. There are a number of other conditions in the ICSTIS code relating to games and competition services, including rules on the clarity of the promotional material and the requirement not to exaggerate the chances of winning.

In addition to these controls, BT customers served by digital exchanges can request that access to all premium rate services from their line is barred. This "call-barring" is available free of charge and is now available to some 60 per cent. of BT's customers.

Intellectual Property Rights

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures will be taken by his Department in order to implement the European directive on rental right and lending right.

Mr. Leigh: This directive will be implemented by means of a statutory instrument amending the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988. Member states have until 1 July 1994 to comply with the directive. In view of the complexity of the directive and the options which it makes available to member states, my Department intends to consult widely before finalising the amending legislation. I expect consultations to begin in the next few months.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what actions and consultation his Department is undertaking with regard to a possible instrument on the protection of the rights of performers and producers of phonograms by the World Intellectual Property Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The United Kingdom has been at the forefront in urging the World Intellectual Property Organisation—WIPO—to draw up a new international agreement on the protection of performers' and record producers' rights. WIPO has now begun preparatory work on such an agreement. This is a development of an earlier WIPO initiative on a possible protocol to the Berne convention on authors' rights, on which work is continuing. More than 50 organisations representative of United Kingdom copyright interests have already been consulted on the protocol, and there will be similar consultation on the new instrument when WIPO makes this available in draft form. United Kingdom officials also take part in regular informal discussions on these matters involving the European Commission, the United States, Japan and other major countries.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those EC directives related to copyright and intellectual property presently under consideration by his Department; and if he will list those individuals and organisations who have been consulted with regard to them.

Mr. Leigh: Four draft directives in the intellectual property field are currently under consideration: a proposal for a Council directive on the co-ordination of certain rules concerning copyright and neighbouring rights applicable to satellite broadcasting and cable retransmission; a proposal for a Council directive harmonising the term of protection of copyright and certain related rights; a proposal for a Council directive on the legal protection of databases; and a proposal for a Council directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions. In addition, the Department is considering the implementation into United Kingdom law of two adopted directives —directive 89/104/EEC to approximate the laws of the member states relating to trade marks, and directive 92/100/EEC on rental right and lending right and on certain rights related to copyright in the field of intellectual property.

Numerous organisations and individuals have been consulted in connection with these measures. In general, consultation has taken place through bodies representing particular interest groups, where these exist. Organisations consulted in relation to the measures listed above include the following.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the developments in copyright matters made under Britain's Presidency of the European Community.

Mr. Leigh: One directive in the copyright field was adopted during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community—directive 92/100/EEC of 19 November concerning rental and lending rights and certain rights related to copyright. The United Kingdom also sought agreement at the December Internal Market Council on a draft directive dealing with copyright and related rights in the field of cable and satellite broadcasting, but a minority of member states resisted this. Regular discussions were held at Council working group level on a draft directive on the duration of copyright and neighbouring rights protection. The United Kingdom also played a leading role in Community efforts to further the work of the World Intellectual Property Organisation in the copyright field.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce his review of the assisted areas map; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to make a decision on Coventry and Warwickshire's application for continued assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 2 December 1992, at column 260

Export Insurance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with organisations representing British exporters concerning the provision of public funds for insuring exports against political risk.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I have had frequent consultations on political risk insurance with organisations representing British exporters and banks.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received, and what discussions he has had, concerning the planned discontinuation of export reinsurance for political risk in 1994; and if he will give details;

(2) if he will make a statement on the Export Credits Guarantee Department's capacity to provide export reinsurance, particularly for political risk;

(3) what was the total level of export reinsurance provided by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in each of the last 10 years; and what proportion specifically related to reinsurance for political risk, in each export sector and for Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and England;

(4) what assessment his Department has made of the likely effect of the planned discontinuation of export reinsurance for political risk, in 1994, for United Kingdom exports, exporters and the balance of trade, in each export sector and for Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and England.

Mr. Needham: The Export Credits Guarantee Department is able to provide reinsurance, subject to Treasury consent, under the terms of the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991.

The ECGD currently supplements the private sector reinsurance treaties, for both commercial and political risk, of the privatised successor of the insurance services group. This support will be available for up to December 1994 in order to give time for the new company to arrange to source its full reinsurance requirement from the private market. The new company is working to achieve this outcome. Over 90 per cent. of its needs are currently being met by the private market.

Quite separately, the Export Credits Guarantee Department provides the new company with 100 per cent. reinsurance of the risks arising on certain higher risk markets for which no capacity has been made available by the private market. This facility is not time limited. Subject to satisfactory financial performance, it will continue for as long as the Government consider it essential to meet the reasonable needs of United Kingdom exporters.

I believe that the combined effect of these arrangements will be to maintain a good level of short-term export credit insurance support for United Kingdom exporters.

These reinsurance facilities have only been available since December 1991 and apply to less than 10 per cent. of the new company's reinsurance exposure for standard short-term business. The Export Credits Guarantee Department reinsurance is provided on a global basis and it is not possible to provide a breakdown between the risks, goods or geographical location of exporters reinsured.

Representations have been made to me by interested parties about the likely adequacy of the reinsurance market to meet future demand and any implications this may have for Government policy. I am considering these representations.

Incentives to Industry

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has set up a committee in his Department to examine the flow of incentives towards industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department carefully examines each year the balance of priorities, and value for money, of our spending on grants to industry.

Research and Industrial Support

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the allocation of funds for research and industrial support within his Department during the course of 1992.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the Department's allocation of funds on research and industrial support in 1992 was given in the regional and general industrial support and other support for industry sections of "Trade & Industry; The Government's Expenditure Plans 1992-93 to 1994-95", Cm 1904. Further information was included in the selective assistance to industry and research and development and other programmes sections of "The Government's Expenditure Plans within the Energy Sector 1992-93 to 1994-95" Cm 1905. The supply estimates—1991-92 HC273-IV & V—as subsequently updated by the supplementary estimates—1992-93 HC45, HC231 and HC434—contain detailed information on expenditure in 1992-93. The Department's latest plans are given in "Trade & Industry; The Government's Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96", Cm 2204, published on 10 February 1993.

Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are directly or indirectly employed in the oil and gas industry (a) in Scotland and (b) in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: A survey by the Scottish Office and what is now Scottish Enterprise estimated that in 1990 direct and indirect employment by the oil and gas industry in Scotland was some 97,400. A similar, but less comprehensive, survey covering employment in 1992 is in preparation. No comparable survey exists for the United Kingdom as a whole, but the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association has estimated that direct and indirect employment could be 300,000.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Eight staff in my Department are assigned to the market testing programme. Since November 1991, the programme has cost the Department £460,000. This covers direct staff costs and consultants brought in to add private sector skills in line with the principles of the "Competing for Quality" White Paper.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Following publication of the White Paper "Competing for Quality", I put forward a programme of market tests for completion by September 1993. While a number of these tests are at an advanced stage, none has yet completed the full process.

In the period in question, there have been numerous instances of contracting out services for management or policy reasons, but in these cases the formal testing of the market against internal provision has not been necessary.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give for Standard Industrial Classification Orders 3302 and 3341 (a) annual output, (b) United Kingdom market size and (c) balance of trade for each year since 1987; and if he will give the figures on a similar basis for Standard Industrial Classifications 3302 and 3341, together with Standard Industrial Classifications 3301, 3443, 3453 and 3454.

Mr. Sainsbury: The figures may be obtained readily from the summary tables of Central Statistical Office "Business Monitors" PAS3301, PQ3302, PAS3441, PAS3443, PQ3453, and PAS3454, copies of which are available in the Library. The best estimate of the United Kingdom market size may be calculated by adding imports to, and subtracting exports from, the figures for sales of principal products shown in these tables.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of actual capital expenditure on current petroleum and natural gas development in the United Kingdom continental shelf in each of the last 15 years; if he will forecast the level of future capital expenditure in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Details of actual capital expenditure on petroleum and natural gas development in the United Kingdom continental shelf are given in my Department's report to Parliament, the "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", the Brown Book, copies of which are available in the Library. A survey conducted by my Department during 1992 shows company intentions to invest some £4·7 billion in each year from 1993 to 1995, £4·1 billion in 1996, and £3·2 billion in 1997. The decline shown in the intended expenditures over the later years of the survey period is usual in these surveys, since companies cover only projects which are sufficiently advanced to enable reasonable estimates of expenditure to be made. However, if these intentions are realised real annual expenditure will remain higher than in any of the years between 1987 to 1989.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will forecast the number of orders for platforms for United Kingdom oil and gas production development in each of the next five years and the estimated level of capital expenditure this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: A survey conducted by my Department during 1992 shows company intentions to order some 44 platforms over the next five years, on which intended expenditure is some £8·3 billion for the structures, decks, modules and equipment alone. The survey does not collect the number of orders in each year, and only includes projects where company plans are sufficiently advanced to enable reasonable estimates of expenditure to be made.

Gas-fired Power Projects

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licence applications have been received in each of the last five years for gas-fired power projects; and if he will give details of their generation capacity.

Mr. Eggar: The following is the information requested.

Year	Number	Capacity (MW)
1989-90	4	3,280
1990-91	11	9,485
1991-92	15	8,508
[1]1992-93	4	989

[1] To date.

Notes:

1. Prior to section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 coming into effect on 31 March 1989 application for consent for power stations, other than those made by the Central Electricity Generating Board, were made to local planning authorities under the Town and Country Planning Acts.
2. Applications for consent for power stations with a capacity of 50 MW or less are dealt with under the Town and Country Planning Acts and my Department does not have information on such applications.
3. Power stations in Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many gas-fired power projects are (a) currently under construction or (b) already in operation; and what is the output/generation capacity of each.

Mr. Eggar: Major—above 50MW—gas-fired generating stations in England and Wales are as follows:

Station	Location	Proposer	Capacity
Commissioned
Killingholme	South Humberside	PowerGen	900MW
Roosecote	Cumbria	Lakeland Power	230MW
Under construction
Barking	London	Barking Power	1,000MW
Brigg	South Humberside	Regional Power Generators	240MW
Calder Hall	Cumbria	British Nuclear Fuels	160MW
Corby	Northamptonshire	Corby Power	350MW
Deeside	Clwyd	Deeside Power Development Company (National Power)	450MW
Keadby 1	Near Scunthorpe	Keadby Power	680MW
Killingholme "A" (phase 1)	South Humberside	National Power	650MW
Little Barford	Bedfordshire	National Power	680MW
Medway	Kent	Medway Power	660MW
Peterborough	Cambridgeshire	Peterborough Power	355MW
Rye House	Hertfordshire	PowerGen	680MW
Spondon	Near Derby	Derwent Cogeneration	318MW
Wilton	Teesside	Teesside Power	1,750MW

Power stations in Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, respectively.

ECGD

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the role and functions of the Export Credits Guarantee Department; which functions have been privatised and on what basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Export Credits Guarantee Department's 1991-92 annual report and trading accounts, which were laid before the House on the 28 January 1993, provide full details of the Department's role and functions. These documents have been placed in the Library.

The Insurance Services Group of ECGD was privatised on 1 December 1991. I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley) on 2 December 1991, Official Report, columns 11-12 in which he set out the terms of the sale.

Leyland DAF

Mr. Corbett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations he has given to the implications for the British Army of the cessation of the supply of Leyland DAF military trucks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 February 1993]: This is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. I understand that the Ministry of Defence is in contact with the receivers.

Red Star Parcels

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the date of the publication of the memorandum of sale for Red Star parcels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The British Railways Board at present hopes to issue a memorandum of sale for Red Star in March of this year.

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the effect of the Government's proposals for rail privatisation on the pension of existing Red Star employees, who (a) lose their jobs as a result of privatisation and (b) remain in the employ of the new company following privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The British Railways Board, which is handling the sale of Red Star, is considering appropriate arrangements for the pensions of all existing Red Star employees.

BNFL (Accidents)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all reportable accidents and incidents that have occurred at (a) BNFL Chapel Cross, (b) BNFL Calderhall, (c) BNFL Sellafield, (d) BNFL Springfield and (e) BNFL Capenhurst since 1962; and if he will provide a breakdown of the annual totals into the number of (i) fatalities, (ii) major injuries, (iii) other injuries, (iv) dangerous occurrences and (v) disease.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The full answer to the question can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Incidents at nuclear installations reported to the President of the Board of Trade or Secretary of State for Scotland are published by the Health and Safety Executive in its quarterly statements of incidents at nuclear installations. Copies of these are held in the House of Commons Library along with the site newsletters. The available information on conventional accidents at these sites is given in the table:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Macedonia

17. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support Macedonia's application to become a member of the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in close consultation with fellow members of the Security Council on Macedonia's United Nations application. Our decision will be taken in the light of these consultations.

Iraq

18. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to persuade the United Nations to lift sanctions against Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There can be no question of lifting sanctions against Iraq at present. Iraq is not in compliance with its obligations under all relevant United Nations resolutions.

20. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his current plans to place the Iraqi question before the United Nations Security Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council frequently discusses Iraq, both in formal and informal sessions. On 25 January the Security Council concluded that there was no basis for the lifting of economic sanctions. Discussions are continuing on the Secretary-General's proposals for the reinforcement of the United Nations Iraq/Kuwait observer mission.

28. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications or other approaches on the recent attack on Iraq he has had from countries which formed the UN alliance during the Gulf war, other than the USA and France; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in close touch with our coalition partners. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed Iraq with the Sultan of Oman and King Fahd during his recent visit to the Gulf.

European Foreign Policies

19. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mr. Hurd: I meet my European Community partners regularly to discuss the strengthening of intergovernmental co-operation on foreign policy issues.

Serbia

21. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Serbian Government about the persecution of Muslims in the Sandzak region of Serbia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our European Community partners have repeatedly condemned the Serbian Government's treatment of minorities, including Muslims in Serbia.

South Africa

22. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he is considering to encourage sporting, cultural and trading links with South Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support sporting and cultural contacts with South Africa. The British Overseas Trade Board has designated South Africa as one of its targets for trade promotion. A programme of events is planned to draw the attention of United Kingdom exporters to opportunities in South Africa.

Kuwait

23. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in respect of the current situation in Kuwait.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in regular touch with our allies about the threat to Kuwait's security.

Abu Dhabi

24. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between Britain and Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I said in reply to the hon. Gentleman's question on 3 June 1992, at column 825, relations are excellent.

Maastricht

25. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the timetable for ratification of the Maastricht treaty in each other EC country.

Mr. Hurd: Nine member states have ratified the treaty. Germany has completed the ratification process but has yet to deposit its instrument of ratification in Rome, pending resolution of a private action brought in the constitutional court.

A second Danish referendum will be held on 18 May.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

26. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider his policy on meeting officials of the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We maintain regular contacts with the Palestine Liberation Organisation at senior official level. Ministerial contacts were broken off because of PLO support for Saddam Hussein. Our policy remains under review.

35. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel regarding recognition of the PLO.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is up to the Israeli Government to decide whether to recognise the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Balkans

27. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about British policy in the Balkans.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy is to support the international effort to find peaceful solutions to the area's problems, notably by the international conference for the former Yugoslavia; to prevent the conflict spilling over into Kosovo or Macedonia; and to provide humanitarian reflief to those caught up in the fighting.

Kashmir

29. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Indian Government on self-determination for the people of Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed Kashmir with the Indian Prime Minister when he visited New Delhi recently. He made clear that the best way forward should involve simultaneous progress on dialogue between India and Pakistan, an improvement in human rights and a genuine political process in Kashmir in which the political aspirations of the population there can be accommodated; and a cessation of all external support for violence in Kashmir.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by him recently to the Government of India about human rights in Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised British concerns about human rights in Kashmir with the Indian Prime Minister during his visit to India last month. He also encouraged the Indian Government to allow independent human rights organisations and others to visit Kashmir. Mr Narasimha Rao assured us of his Government's commitment to respect human rights and determination to take action against wrongdoers.

Turkey

30. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the Turkish ambassador to discuss human and civil rights in Turkey.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans for such a meeting.

We have been in regular contact with the Turkish Government on the subject of human rights.

The issue was most recently discussed during the visit to the United Kingdom of the Turkish Prime Minister in November. During the visit Mr Demirel reiterated his Government's commitment to its programme of reforms which aims at improving human rights and increasing democratisation in the country.

We welcome this clear commitment to human rights by the Turkish Government and look forward to the implementation of their programme.

UN Security Council

31. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's continuing permanent membership of the UN Security Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 2 February, at column 81.

Falkland Islands

32. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the constitutiona! position of the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will issue a letter of comfort to oil companies currently prospecting in water around the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The question of a "letter of comfort" is under active consideration.

Japan

33. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to strengthen United Kingdom relations with Japan.

Mr. Goodlad: Relations with Japan are excellent. We intend to maintain the momentum of regular ministerial and other visits. Subject to final confirmation from the Japanese Government, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs plans to visit Tokyo in April. The Prime Minister, Chancellor of the Exchequer and Foreign Secretary will visit Tokyo in July for the economic summit. Both Governments actively encourage a range of cultural, educational, scientific and academic exchanges to expand knowledge of each other's societies. We warmly welcome Japanese investment in this country. The meeting in Japan next month of the UK-Japan 2000 Group will continue the valuable contribution made by that group. Trading relations have greatly improved under the impetus of the Opportunity and Priority Japan campaigns, but both sides recognise the need to address the growing imbalance.

Norway

34. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made on considering Norway's application to join the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Edinburgh European Council invited the Council of Ministers to decide on the opening of negotiations with Norway once the Commission's opinion, a detailed assessment of Norway's suitability for membership, is available. If the opinion is favourable, we expect negotiations with Norway to start soon after.

Overseas Representatives (British Cars)

36. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on buying British cars for use by overseas representatives.

Mr. Goodlad: In accordance with Government guidelines the policy of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is to purchase cars for use by overseas representatives on a value-for-money basis.

British manufacturers are used where they are competitive on quality, fitness for purpose, price and delivery.

Angola

37. Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Angola.

39. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking through the international community to end the violence in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government supported Security Council resolution 804 and will continue to support the efforts of the United Nations to promote dialogue between the Government of Angola and UNITA with a view to agreeing a ceasefire and full implementation of the Bicesse peace agreements. We therefore welcome the meeting, held under UN auspices, at Addis Ababa last month between the two parties and hope that this will be followed by further dialogue.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs further to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 30, what further action he is taking to secure the release of three British citizens held by UNITA forces in Angola; what joint action he proposes with other governments with citizens similarly held; whether this issue will be raised at the UNITA/government talks in Addis Ababa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 9 February 1993]: Since first hearing of the detention of three British citizens by UNITA in Angola, we have made strong representations to UNITA for their release. I am pleased to say that all three were released on 7 February together with a number of other foreign detainees, and have now left Angola.

Former Soviet Republics

38. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the assistance being given by the United Kingdom to the former Soviet republics.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The purpose of British assistance to the states of the former Soviet Union and the Baltics is to support economic and political reform. We have pledged bilateral aid totalling over £131 million, including £100 million for the know-how fund. So far, we have spent £35·7 million, and a further £11 million is already committed to specific activities. Our assistance is directed to priority sectors, mainly small business development, financial services, energy and food production and distribution. There is £280 million in medium-term export credit cover for the region, for which only Russia at present qualifies. We also contribute about 18 per cent. of European Community grant aid to the region, totalling 1,305 mecu in 1991 and 1992. The European Community has also made available 1.75 billion ecu in loans and credits. We provide further support through the World bank, the European bank for reconstruction and development and the Asian development bank.

Customs Fines

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rulings have been made by the European Court of Justice regarding the illegality of customs fines; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

My attention has not been drawn to any rulings by the European Court of Justice regarding the illegality of Customs fines.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Neither the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office nor the Overseas Development Administration have staff assigned specifically to market testing. Since November 1991, however, market testing has accounted for a significant proportion of the time of some 25 diplomatic wing staff and 11 staff of the Overseas Development Administration. The cost, including direct staff costs, of the diplomatic wing's market testing programme up to 31 December 1992 was approximately £170,000; the cost of the Overseas Development Administration's programme was approximately £93,000.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: In following up the requirements of the White Paper "Competing for Quality", Cm 1730, the diplomatic and ODA wings of the FCO each agreed a programme of market testing with the efficiency unit.

Market testing exercises for the implementation of this programme are in hand but none has yet been completed.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Sri Lankan high commissioner.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not met the Sri Lankan high commissioner recently. I last met the high commissioner on 19 January.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Sri Lanka concerning the human rights situation in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We frequently discuss our concerns on human rights with the Sri Lankan Government. We take every opportunity to stress the importance we attach to respect for the rule of law.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings Foreign Office officials or Ministers have had with representatives of the Tamil Tigers in (a) Sri Lanka, (b) the United Kingdom and (c) elsewhere, and on what dates.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We try to keep in touch with all shades of Sri Lankan opinion. This is consistent with our frequent offer of good offices if all sides would find it useful to help negotiations take place.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings his Department's officials or Ministers have had with representatives of the Tamil community in the United Kingdom to discuss human rights in Sri Lanka in the last year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Before I visited Sri Lanka in October 1992, I met a group of representatives of human rights organisations, including those representing Tamil concerns. FCO officials are in frequent contact with both governmental and non-governmental human rights organisations in the United Kingdom and Sri Lanka.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to visit Sri Lanka. I visited Sri Lanka from 12 to 18 October last year.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will estimate (a) the number of barges on the River Danube which have broken United Nations sanctions by delivering oil or oil products to the territory of the former Yugoslavia, (b) the number of tankers in the Adriatic which have done so and (c) the number of aircraft originating in Iran which have done so.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We know of at least five barges that have breached UN Security Council resolution 757 of 1992 by delivering oil or oil products to Serbia on the Danube since the imposition of sanctions. We are aware of six tanker deliveries of oil to Montenegro via the Adriatic. No plane originating in Iran has yet been suspected of carrying oil or oil products to the former Yugoslavia. However, we know of at least one attempt by an Iranian plane to deliver arms to one of the parties to the Yugoslav conflict, in breach of UN Security Council resolution 713 of 1991.

Weapons Convention

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government propose to ratify the 1981 convention on the use of weapons which may be excessively injurious or indiscriminate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We are currently considering ratification of the convention by the United Kingdom, and expect to reach a decision soon.

Global Environmental Change

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what detailed studies his Department has made or commissioned over the past three years in the foreign policy implications of global environmental change; and if he will make them available in whole or in part to the House.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We keep the foreign policy implications of global environment change under continuous review within the FCO. The Department has not commissioned specific external studies in this area.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his plans for developing a dialogue with national non-governmental organisations and academic bodies in areas of international environment policy where his is the lead Department.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regular dialogue with non-governmental organisations and academic bodies covering a range of international environmental policy issues. We also maintain close contact with non-governmental organisations on international aspects of a range of specific environmental issues.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Decommissioning Scheme

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out for each fishing fleet within England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland the payments made under the fishing decommissioning scheme of 1984.

Mr. Curry: Payments made in respect of vessels in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland under the Fishing Vessels (Financial Assistance) Scheme 1983 were as follows:

	£ million
England	15·54
Scotland	2·24
Wales	0·46
Northern Ireland	0·26

Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on the implementation of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992.

Mr. Curry: I shall shortly be laying before Parliament an order setting out the principles on which days-at-sea allocations will be worked out. On the basis of this order, Fisheries Departments will issue provisional days-at-sea figures to fishermen, who will have an opportunity to comment on them before days-at-sea restrictions start to operate. All fishermen will have a further opportunity to make a formal appeal to the Sea Fish Licence Tribunal which is now being set up.

I am placing in the Library of the House today an information note giving further details.

EMPLOYMENT

Bridging Allowances

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds in receipt of bridging allowances for October, November and December 1992 on a comparable basis to the figures given in the answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), of 29 October, Official Report, columns 832-34.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 10 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the numbers of 16 to 17-year-olds in receipt of bridging allowance for October, November and December 1992. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information you have requested is provided in the attached tables.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Restart Interviews

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table showing the results of Restart interviews for the period 1 April 1992 to 1 December 1992 on the same basis as the answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), of 29 October, Official Report, columns 834-36.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 10 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the results of Restart interviews conducted during the period April to December 1992. This is something which falls with the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information you asked for is given in the attached annex. As you will appreciate, these figures reflect only the direct results of Restart. We do not know how many people subsequently take up a job or place on an employment or training programme as a result of the guidance given to them at their interview. It is through these indirect results of the help which advisers give clients in reviewing their options for returning to work that Restart has its effect.

An indication of the scale of that effect is provided by the report "The Restart Effect" which was recently published by the independent Policy Studies Institute. It is based on an analysis of the largest survey of unemployed people in the United Kingdom since 1980. This showed conclusively that the programme had a major effect in reducing the time it takes people to leave unemployment, to get a job and to enter Employment Training, particularly for those people who were at a disadvantage within the labour market.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all reportable accidents and incidents that have occurred at AWE Burghfield and AWE Cardiff since 1962; and if he will provide a breakdown of the annual totals into the number of (i) fatalities, (ii) major injuries, (iii) other injuries, (iv) dangerous occurrences and (v) disease.

Mr. Aitken: The breakdown of figures for reportable accidents and incidents for AWE Burghfield and AWE Cardiff during the period 1962 to 1992 is not readily available in the form requested. I shall write to the hon. Member when they are available.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Aitken: A provisional list of regulations that impact on business has recently been compiled. It will be fully checked for accuracy and placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Trident

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average weight of a Trident submarine.

Mr. Aitken: The submerged displacement of the Vanguard class Trident missile submarine is some 16,000 tonnes.

Public Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what public appointments he has made since 1 November 1992; and what information he has on the political affiliations of those appointed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Three appointments have been made to Ministry of Defence executive non-departmental bodies since 1 November 1992. Appointments are made on the basis of aptitude and merit, and political affiliation, if any, is not relevant or recorded.

UN (Military Secretariat)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to send a retired senior officer to the United Nations to advise on the establishment of a military secretariat there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on Monday 8 February, Official Report, column 498.

Army Redundancies

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the redundancies in the British Army in 1993-94 will be compulsory.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 9·6 per cent. of Army redundancies, all of whom will be officers, will be compulsory.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what levels of redundancies are to be made in the British Army in the year 1993-94; and what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer of those redundancies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The position on planned redundancies remains as set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) on 10 December 1992, Official Report, column 800; the estimated cost of the redundancy payments—special capital payments—is £188 million.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place about the replacement of the royal yacht Britannia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 26 January, Official Report, column 646.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what current discussions he has had with the German Government about prospects for German participation in the European fighter aircraft project.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollock (Mr. Dunnachie) on 9 February.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost, and how many people would benefit, if the earnings limit for invalid care allowance was (a) raised to the lower earnings limit for paying national insurance contributions or (b) abolished.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 18 November 1992 at column 252.

War Disablement Pensions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of war disablement pensions have made a claim for loss of hearing below the 20 per cent. level in 1990, 1991 and 1992; and how many are currently outstanding.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, claims for war disablement pension have increased significantly during the period as follows.

	Claims
1990	27,004
1991	42,881
1992	133,972

Note: Records do not show how many of these claims were for noise induced hearing loss.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants received income support in respect of costs for (a) nursing care homes and (b) residential care homes in (i) May 1991 and (ii) May 1992; and if he will provide a regional and social services authority based breakdown of these figures.

Mr. Burt: Information in the form requested is not available. Such information as is available is in the table.

May 1991	Residential Care People receiving income support in (thousands)	Nursing Homes People receiving income support in (thousands)
England	123	76
Scotland	8	9
Wales	7	9
Great Britain	139	94

May 1992	Residential Care (thousands)	Nursing Homes (thousands)
England	135	95
Scotland	10	12
Wales	7	10
Great Britain	152	116

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the relevant regulations to allow claims for vibration white finger in circumstances where the claimant has been mainly working with wood; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: There are no plans at present to amend the industrial injuries benefit regulations relating to claims for vibration white finger. The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council is currently studying the scientific evidence relating to hand/arm vibration syndrome, which includes vibration white finger, and will report in due course.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Benefits Agency to cease to refer to members of the public eligible for benefits of any sort as customers and to substitute applicants or other words or phrases appropriate to the context.

Mr. Burt: Ministers fully support the Benefits Agency's use of the word "customer" where appropriate. I have asked Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, to write with a full reply to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Nigel Spearing, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if the Agency will cease to refer to members of the public eligible for benefits as customers and substitute the word applicant or some other words or phrases.

At the launch of the Benefits Agency in April 1991 one of the four Core Values on which the Agency was to conduct its business was Customer Service. The term "customer" was introduced in an attempt to focus our attention on the people we serve and to break down long standing barriers often implied in the use of other terminology. People who use the services of the Benefits Agency are entitled to be treated with the care and respect which is normally denoted by the term customer.

"Customer" is also a more useful and all-embracing term than either claimant or applicant. The Benefits Agency deals not only with people who are claiming (or in the process of claiming) benefit, but also with their relatives, people acting on behalf of those claiming benefits, employers, welfare rights officers, other government departments and agencies. We use the term "internal customer" when describing the relationship between the links in the organisation, and this is a principle common to many organisations. The term reflects the attitude we should adopt and we have no plans to change it at the present time.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make an estimate of the number of (a) individual claimants and (b) households in Lambeth dependent upon income support at any one time.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Fraser, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for an estimate of the number of (a) individual claimants and (b) households in Lambeth dependent upon Income Support at any one time.

The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I have listed below the available information, as at 30 November 1992, of the number of Income Support recipients at the Benefits Agency Districts covering the London Borough of Lambeth. Benefits Agency District boundaries do not correspond with those of individual boroughs and some may, therefore, live outside the borough of Lambeth. This information has been obtained from the Income Support Management Information Statistics.

District	Number of Recipients
Bankside	25,616
Lewisham and Brixton	57,393
Palace	65,007
South West Thames	55,474
Total	203,490

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants who have lost their benefit books have been refused a replacement in the 1991-92 financial year and from April 1992 to date; and where there has been a previously lost book, how many have been subject to unauthorised encashments.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many Income Support claimants have lost their benefit books and were then refused a replacement in the 1991-92 financial year and from April 1992 to date; and where there has been a previous lost book, how many have been subject to unauthorised encashments.

The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I should explain that the number of cases where a customer reported an Income Support order book lost in 1991-92 and up to the quarter ending 30 June 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, were:

	1991-92	Q/E 30 June 1992
Number of IS books issued:	6,472,016	1,337,865
Number of IS books reported lost:	66,594 (1·03 per cent.)	19,873 (1·48 per cent.)
Number of IS books reported lost, stolen, destroyed after receipt:	28,004 (0·4 per cent.)	10,559 (0.8 per cent.)

When customers report that they have lost an order book, they will be asked about the circumstances of the loss, and a replacement will be issued. The interviewing officer will have to be satisfied that reasonable efforts to trace the book have been made. The customer may not automatically receive a replacement book, but could be paid benefit temporarily by girocheques on a weekly basis.

The overall number of payment transactions makes a full reconciliation of order books by weekly counterfoils impracticable and not cost effective. It is therefore not possible to readily identify how many of those missing order books have subsequently been cashed.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to begin paying Mrs. Shirley Wakeham of The Nook, Ugborough, Ivybridge, South Devon, the disability living allowance awarded to her on 26 February 1992; if he will make a statement as to the reasons for the delay; and if he will consider the payment of interest to reimburse Mrs. Wakeham for the unpaid benefit.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr Anthony Steen, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions raised about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about when payments of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) awarded to Mrs Shirley Wakeham of The Nook, Ugborough, Ivybridge, South Devon, will begin, the reasons for the delay, and whether he will consider the payment of interest to reimburse Mrs Wakeham for the unpaid benefit.

Outstanding payments of DLA were made to Mrs Wakeham on 5 February 1993. Payment was unfortunately delayed due to a clerical error made in recording the Adjudication Officer's (AO) decision onto the DLA computer system.

The rules governing the payment of compensation for loss of interest are quite specific and require that delay in making payment on a claim must amount to 12 months or more before compensation can be considered. In Mrs Wakeham's case the delay amounts to less than 12 months therefore compensation cannot be paid.

Clearly her payments have not been handled with the efficiency I would expect and I offer my sincere apologies for any distress or inconvenience caused.

I have separately replied to you in greater detail about this case. I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to make a decision on the application for attendance allowance submitted by Graham Peter Barton of 7 Churchill Cottages, Ugborough, Ivybridge, South Devon, NI No. NZ 46 58 27 A; and if he will make a statement as to the reasons for the 13 month delay in settling this matter.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be place in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about when he expects to make a decision on the application for Attendance Allowance (AA) submitted by Graham Peter Barton of 7 Churchill Cottages, Ugborough, Ivybridge, South Devon NI No NZ 46 58 27 A; and if he will make a statement as to the reasons for the 13 month delay in settling this.

A decision was made on Mr. Barton's AA claim on 24 June 1992 and notified to him on 30 June 1992. The subsequent review decision was made on 26 January 1993 and notified to him on 3 February 1993. Unfortunately Mr Barton's original AA claim made on 5 December 1991 was mislaid. A further claim was not obtained until 19 March and subsequent delays have resulted from the heavy volumes of work following the successful launch of Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

My letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs explained the problems the Agency has faced since the successful launch of DLA and the positive steps I have taken to improve the situation. Further steps are being taken to recruit additional, and redeploy existing resources to clear the backlog of reviews.

I must apologise for the delay in dealing with Mr Barton's case. Such matters are not taken lightly when they fail to come up to the standard of service the Benefits Agency is trying to give all its customers and in this instance Mr Barton has clearly not received the standard of service to which he is entitled.

I have separately replied to you in greater detail about Mr Barton's case. I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Benefits Agency (Customer Charter)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of claimants who have applied for compensation under the Benefits Agency's customer charter; and what is the number of successful claims.

Mr. Burt: The administration of compensation under the Benefit Agency's customer charter is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms. Mildred Gordon, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking, what is the number of claimants who have applied for compensation under the Benefit Agency's Customer Charter; and what is the number of successful claims.

I would like to explain that the Department has operated Special Payment arrangements for many years and not solely as a result of the Benefits Agency's Customer Charter.

However, the information you require is not available in the precise form requested. This is because, although some customers request compensation themselves, cases are normally forwarded for consideration as a result of identification by Benefits Agency office staff.

I am able to state that, in the period 1 April 1992 to 30 September 1992, compensation for delay in payment of benefit was agreed in 3,085 cases.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the arrangements detailed in Mr. Michael Bichard's letter of 6 January, whereby Mr. James Johnston of 17 Summerlands Court, Brixham, will receive his disability living allowance each month by automatic credit transfer, will be activated; and when Mr. Johnston may expect to receive the next instalment of disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 9 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions raised about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about when the Disability Living Allowance awarded to Mr. James Johnston will be paid by automated credit transfer and when may he expect to receive the next instalment of his benefit.

Mr. Johnston's benefit has been paid by automatic credit transfer since 14 September 1992 and the next payment is due on 24 February 1993. I have written to you separately and in greater detail regarding Mr. Johnston's claim.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Drugs

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department has received from the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry regarding membership of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs; what was the date of any representations; and what was her Department's response.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Director of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry wrote to me on 11 December on this matter. A reply was sent on 25 January. I can now announce the names of the new members. They are as follows:

Dr. P. R. Fellows—General practitioner, Gloucestershire and chairman of Gloucester local medical committee.

Miss A. F. Glasier—Consultant gynaecologist and director of family planning, Lothian health board.

Dr. C. Grattan—Consultant dermatologist, Norfolk and Norwich hospital.

Dr. G. Hargreaves—Former GP with experience of the pharmaceutical industry.

Professor S. Holgate—Specialist in allergic disorders, Southampton university.

Mrs. S. Noyce—Pharmacist adviser to Sefton FHSA.

Hospital Patients

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in each of the last five years per regional health authority (a) as national health service patients and (b) as private patients within the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: The information that is available is set out in the table. The latest information on private patients is for 1989-90. Information for earlier years is not available.

Schizophrenia

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital admissions there were for patients with schizophrenia in each year since 1986; and how many of these in each year were re-admissions.

Mr. Yeo: The table gives the number of admissions and re-admissions in England where a diagnosis of schizophrenia was made. 1989-90 is the only year where the quality of information permits publication.

Number of hospital admissions in England for patients with schizophrenia and number of re-admissions (HES) 1989-90

Community Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being undertaken by her Department to ensure the financial security of short-stay residential projects after the introduction of community care arrangements.

Mr. Yeo: From April local authorities will be responsible for assessing individuals' needs and arranging care, including short-stay residential care if appropriate. The money that the Department of Social Security would otherwise have spent supporting people in residential care will be transferred to local authorities to enable them to meet these new responsibilities. Particular encouragement has been given to local authorities to make suitable arrangements for respite care. We will be monitoring carefully how authorities fulfil their new responsibilities.

London Hospitals

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy in coming to decisions in the Tomlinson proposals to establish schemes under which medical and nursing staff in London hospitals can be redeployed to (a) acute services outside London and (b) primary and community care services in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: We intend to announce our proposals for the future of the health service in London shortly. This statement will make clear the Government's response to Tomlinson's proposals and will set out how we wish to see the national health service in London evolve and improve.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring is undertaken and which statistics are kept by her Department to ensure a national consistency in decisions affecting extra-contractual referrals.

Mr. Sackville: None. Decisions about extra-contractual referrals should reflect "Guidance on Extra Contractual Referrals" (EL (92) 60) which should ensure national consistency. Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued by her Department about the grounds on which an extra-contractual referral can be derived.

Mr. Sackville: An extra-contractual referral is a referral made to a provider unit outside an existing contract with the patient's district health authority. "Guidance on Extra Contractual Referrals" was issued under cover of EL(92)60, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications have been received from units or hospitals seeking trust status in Northumberland; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received three expressions of interest from units in Northumberland seeking trust status in the fourth wave. If all are successful it will bring the total number of national health service trusts in Northumberland to five.

Mental Health Review Tribunals

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hearings mental health review tribunals have had in each year since 1987;

(2) how many applications there have been to mental health review tribunals in each year since 1987.

Mr. Yeo: The number of applications for and hearings of mental health review tribunals in each year since 1987 is as follows:

	Applications	Hearings
1987	5,001	2,928
1988	5,581	3,168
1989	6,378	3,731
1990	7,293	4,378
1991	8,137	4,728
1992	9,073	4,935

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many mental health review tribunal hearings patients have had legal representation in each year since 1987.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times sections 2, 3 and 37 of the Mental Health Act 1983 have been used in each year since 1987.

Mr. Yeo: The information is given in the table.

Hospital Broadcasting

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy toward the use by hospital broadcasting organisations of a freely radiating FM frequency.

Mr. Sackville: Patient audio entertainment is readily available by using proven cabled (hard wire) systems delivered to the bedhead. The quality of properly designed systems is excellent, they afford privacy, and there is little risk of interference with sensitive equipment within the hospital. It should not be necessary for hospital entertainment to be broadcast on FM.

Dentists

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of dentists receiving national health service remuneration; and of these how many (a) hold regular Saturday surgeries for NHS registered patients, (b) undertake specialist services for children and (c) provide out-of-hours emergency services.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 30 September 1992 there were 15,411 general dental practitioners (GDPs) in England receiving remuneration for providing dental care and treatment under the national health service.

The other information requested is not held centrally. However, information based upon a sample of GDPs, used in conducting a workload survey in 1991, suggests that some 33 per cent. of GDPs held Saturday morning sessions in 1991. Very few held Saturday afternoon sessions, and most of those who did also held Saturday morning sessions.

The same survey shows that 78 per cent. of GDPs personally provided out-of-hours emergency cover. (All GDPs with continuing care or capitation patients are required to make reasonable arrangements to provide emergency cover for such patients, but need not necessarily provide the cover personally.)

Information on specialist services provided by GDPs for children is not collected centrally.

Wessex RHA (Computer)

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the money lost by the Wessex regional health authority in attempting to install a new computer system; and if she will make a statement on the current situation.

Mr. Sackville: The district auditor estimated that about £43 million has been spent by the Wessex regional health authority on the RISP computer project. The Wessex RHA's regional general manager has publicly stated that the RHA has derived no benefit from about £20 million of that expenditure.

Community Pharmacists

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much her Department owes to community pharmacists for periods of up to (a) 60 days and (b) 90 days;

(2) if she will set out her Department's policy towards the timing of payments to community pharmacists in respect of the NHS pharmaceutical services they provide; and what steps have been taken to implement the objective of ensuring that large companies or organisations pay their debts to small suppliers within a 30-day period;

(3) on how many occasions, and to what extent in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, community pharmacists received payment in respect of NHS pharmaceutical services within (a) 30 days, (b) 60 days or (c) 90 days of the provision of these services.

Dr. Mawhinney: Pharmacists receive some 80 per cent. of their national health service fees and payments within one month of submitting the prescriptions they have dispensed to the prescription pricing authority. The balance is paid a month later when the authority has calculated the exact payment due. In practice this means that, in any one month, pharmacists are receiving the equivalent of a full month's payment for their work.

Hyperbaric Oxygen Therapy

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the Royal College of Physicians' report commissioned by her Department which examines the recommendations for guidelines on hyperbaric oxygen therapy.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health did not commission the report on hyperbaric medicine. The working party was set up by the faculty of occupational medicine. Publication of the report is a matter for the Royal College of Physicians.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider issuing a health notice giving guidelines on the value of hyperbaric oxygen as a treatment for gas gangrene and carbon monoxide poisoning.

Mr. Sackville: I have no such plans at present.

Prison Mother and Baby Units

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost of the visits by the social services inspectorate to the mother and baby units in prisons in each year since 1990; and which budget bore the cost of the visits;

(2) what plans she has to transfer the inspection of mother and baby units in prisons from the social services inspectorate to the chief inspector of prisons; and if she will make a statement;

(3) how many times the social services inspectorate visited the mother and baby units in prisons during 1990, 1991 and 1992, respectively; how many members of the inspectorate made each inspection; and what was the duration of each visit.

Mr. Yeo: At the request of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, the Department of Health is conducting a programme of three inspections of the mother and baby units in prison at two-year intervals between 1990 and 1994. The first two inspections took place in 1990 and 1992 and a third is planned for 1994. The position will be reviewed after the 1994 inspection.

The Department set up a multi-disciplinary team led by a social services inspector to conduct the inspections. There were five members of the team; two social services inspectors, one nurse, one paediatrician and a psychiatrist. In 1990 the team allotted three days to inspect each unit and in 1992 four days.

The Department of Health met the costs of these inspections. The costs cannot be identified separately.

Child Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with representatives of voluntary organisations with regard to their taking over wholly or partially the statutory child care functions of individual local authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Hospital Incinerators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the hospital incinerators in England that (a) burn less than 25 kg of clinical waste per hour and (b) burn less than 1 tonne of clinical waste per hour.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Attercliffe Study

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what alternative sources of funding are available for the initiation of the Attercliffe study, following the ending of the urban programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: Urban programme and urban development corporation resources have been used to fund the Attercliffe study. The study is now complete and the recommendations are being considered by Sheffield city council and its partners.

Derelict land grant, city grant—both to be absorbed into the proposed urban regeneration agency—urban development corporation and European regional development fund resources may be available for those schemes which meet the relevant grant criteria and also have sufficient priority when considered alongside other schemes.

In addition, the recent relaxations on use of capital receipts should enable Sheffield city council to assist such schemes from its own resources.

Deposit Bond Bank Schemes

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many deposit bond bank schemes are currently in operation in England and Wales; and what is their location.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held by the Department.

Refugees (London)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each London borough the latest actual and budget figures he has for expenditure on (a) housing, (b) education and (c) social services resulting from the acceptance by that borough of refugees to the United Kingdom; and if he will also list for each London borough the amount of specific grant allowed by his Department for this purpose.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information on actual and budgeted expenditure is not available centrally. Details of a special grant payable in 1992-93 to local authorities in respect of displaced persons from the former Yugoslavia are set out in the "Special Grant Report (No. 5)" which the House approved on 3 February.

Disabled People (Council Tax)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has made of the number of disabled persons in each council tax band B to H inclusive who are likely to be eligible for a disabled person's discount; and what is the estimated cost of this discount for each band B to H, and in total for England;

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of disabled persons living in dwellings valued in council tax band A who would be eligible for a discount if their dwelling were valued in any other band.

Mr. Howard: Figures are not available for the number of dwellings in each band likely to benefit from the reductions for disabilities scheme.

Urban Priority Areas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 243, if he will name the external researchers referred to in his answer; and if he will give a full timetable for consultations on the methodology to be used for the review of urban priority areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: The external researchers are the Centre for Urban Policy Studies, Manchester university. We will circulate shortly a paper by the researchers proposing a methodology to be used in analysing census data to the local authority associations and voluntary organisations. Given the technical complexity of the subject, we will seek to give as much time as possible for them to respond.

Special Needs Housing

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the funding of special needs projects currently funded by the Housing Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Expenditure plans for 1993-94 include provision of £96·6 million for the revenue funding of special needs projects by the Housing Corporation. Most of this provision relates to projects which are currently receiving funding from the corporation.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ring-fence the current financial regime governing special needs projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Revenue funding for special needs projects is provided by my Department through the special needs management allowance paid to housing associations by the Housing Corporation. Provision for this programme in 1992-93 is £95 million, specifically for supporting the housing management costs of associations operating in the field of special needs accommodation. Funding for 1993-94 will include provision for an additional 3,000 SNMA bedspaces, the majority of which will receive capital funding from the corporation's approved development programme. In addition, the ADP will provide funds for 1,500 units of special needs accommodation not requiring support from SNMA.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage special housing authorities being formed and run by disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to encourage the formation of such organisations.

The Housing Corporation currently supports about 250 housing associations which provide accommodation for a range of special needs, including the needs of disabled people.

Council Tax

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the number of council tax payers eligible for a second homes discount in each band, and in total, for England; and what is the estimated cost of the discount for each band and in total.

Mr. Howard: The table shows the estimated number of dwellings which may be subject to two council tax discounts. The majority of these will be second homes. Local authorities will not be setting their council taxes until the spring; we have no estimate of the cost of the discounts that might apply to second homes.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he intends to adopt to allow local authorities continued borrowing during 1993-94 to cover the collection of outstanding arrears of 1990-91 and 1991-92 community charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: During this year community charge collection has improved significantly, and it is essential that authorities continue to make every effort to collect all outstanding unpaid community charges. To assist authorities we are prepared to consider, in response to an application by an authority, granting an increase in its aggregate credit limit for 1993-94 to cover those unpaid 1990-91 and 1991-92 community charges which it expects to collect during 1993-94. This will enable such an authority to continue to borrow to cover these debts pending their collection during the course of next year.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 16 local authorities he referred to on 3 February, Official Report, column 342 which will receive a special grant to compensate them since their standard spending assessment is more than 5 per cent. lower than under the old basis of estimating; and if he will quantify the money each of the 16 local authorities will receive.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The "Special Grant Report (No. 5)", which was laid before the House on 28 January 1993, sets out the authorities to which population loss grants are to be paid, and the amount of each grant. These are listed:

Local Authority Housing Investment

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further conclusions he has reached following his consultation exercise on the development of the local authority housing investment programme process.

Sir George Young: Last May, my Department launched a major consultation exercise on the further development of the local authority housing investment programme process. The consultation paper made proposals designed to improve the way in which housing resources are used and to stimulate the involvement of local people in this process. It was suggested that local authorities should prepare new strategies covering the full range of housing activities in their area. It was also proposed that decisions on the initial allocation of Housing Corporation funding should be co-ordinated with local authorities' housing strategies for each area and recent trends in the allocation of HIP resources, designed to promote better value for the money spent through housing capital programmes, should be developed.

Interim decisions on these matters, covering points which it was necessary to settle in time for the 1992 HIP round, were issued in July, Official Report, 10 July 1992, column 384. We have now reached conclusions on the framework for the HIP process in 1993 and later years.

Our view is that the HIP process should develop progressively in a flexible manner, which allows scope for the differing circumstances of authorities and the developing housing policies of both local and central Government. To facilitate this, we intend to invite all housing authorities to draw up annual housing strategy statements in which each authority describes the needs and resources for housing in their area, and the plans and programmes which the authority has for addressing them. Housing strategies should be developed in consultation with the Housing Corporation, housing associations, the private housing sector, both rental and owner occupied, house builders, the voluntary sector, tenants groups and other interested parties. They should encompass all relevant functions and resources of the authority in a corporate approach.

Alongside this, we intend to build on this year's success in co-ordinating the arrangements for the HIP and the Housing Corporation's approved development programme processes. We have reaffirmed our view that there is a role for a significant element of discretion in the allocation of HIP resources, including a primary allocation criterion based on the efficiency and effectiveness of authorities in meeting housing need. And in particular we have reached the view that the statistical index used in the allocation of HIP resources—the generalised needs index or GNI—should be comprehensively reviewed, with special reference to the year-on-year stability of the index.

In the spring, the Department will issue guidance to local authorities on the preparation of housing strategy statements and the submission of HIP bids for 1994-95.

I have now asked officials to take forward discussions on the practical implications of these decisions with the local authority associations, the Housing Corporation, the National Federation of Housing Associations and other interested parties, as appropriate.

I have placed in the Libraries of the House copies of a note which gives more detail of the decisions we have taken.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of his Department's consultation document to local housing authorities proposing the transfer of the care element of the warden service in sheltered housing from housing revenue accounts to social service budgets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 10 February 1993]: Last September my Department issued a consultation document proposing temporary legislation, to be included in the Housing and Urban Development Bill, enabling local housing authorities to provide welfare services for their tenants and to account for the costs in their housing revenue accounts if they wish. These powers would avoid disruption and uncertainty in the wake of the Ealing judgment. The consultation document explained that the powers were intended to be temporary because it is the Government's intention that the housing revenue account should be a landlord account, and that welfare services should be accounted for elsewhere.

My Department received approximately 130 representations widely welcoming these powers, but many suggested that welfare services should continue to be provided by housing authorities as part of the housing service, or at least until local government reorganisation was complete. We have made it clear that no decisions will be taken on whether or when to withdraw these powers until a further, full consultation exercise has taken place.

I am issuing this further consultation paper today, and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the House Libraries. The paper is being sent to all local authorities and other interested parties, setting out proposals for the longer-term funding and provision of welfare services for tenants of local housing authorities. The paper proposes that housing authorities should retain the temporary powers, at present being considered as part of the Housing and Urban Development Bill, to provide these services for their tenants, until the current review of local government is completed. It also sets out options on which services might be excluded from the housing revenue account and on timing. We will take no decisions until we have considered what consultees have to say. Whatever longer-term arrangements are then decided on, we will ensure that there will be no disruption to services for tenants.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will also be issuing a consultation paper on these issues shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Blepharospasm

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision his Department makes for sufferers of the condition blepharospasm; and of he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: A wide range of benefits is available to sick and disabled people, including sufferers of blepharospasm, provided that they meet the conditions of entitlement. Information about benefits is available from the Benefits Agency in leaflets and through confidential free telephone advice lines.

Pensions

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures estimating the cost of reintroducing earnings uprating for the retirement pension and other linked benefits beginning in April 1996, giving annual figures in 1992-93 prices over a 10-year period.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. However, a comparison between the cost of earnings uprating of benefits and that of prices uprating of benefits from 1990-91 to 2050-51 can be made by referring to tables 13 and 14 of the "National Insurance Fund Long Term Financial Estimates—Report of the Government Actuary on the Second Quinquennial review under Section 137 of the Social Security Act 1975" published in July 1990 as HC 582.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to ensure that the hon. Member for East Lothian receives a reply to his letter of 4 November 1992 about the case of Mr. Mark Moffat, which was subsequently referred by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt), to the chief executive of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. I understand that Mr. Bichard has already replied to the hon. Member about this case.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each housing authority, for the latest year for which figures are available, the number of housing benefit claimants who live in (a) council housing, (b) other public sector housing and (c) private rented accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table. "Other public sector housing" is taken to refer to accommodation provided by housing associations. The information relates to averages of the quarterly caseload counts, from the housing benefit management information system statistics for May and August 1992.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rape (War Crime)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to place on the agenda at the human rights conference in Vienna and the G7 meeting in Tokyo the violation of women as a war crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Neither of these meetings would be the most appropriate forum in which to discuss the recognition of the violation of women as a war crime. The topic would be most suitably discussed under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross as guardians of the Geneva conventions. The ICRC plans to hold an international conference this summer which will review all aspects of the protection of victims of war.

Iraq (British Prisoners)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made recently towards the release of Paul Ride and Michael Wainwright from prison in Baghdad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to press for the release of Mr. Ride and Mr. Wainwright at every opportunity. The sentences imposed on the two men were grotesque. The Iraqi Government can be in no doubt that they stand to gain nothing from their continued detention.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the possible release of Michael Wainwright and Paul Ride.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have urged the Iraqis at every opportunity to release Mr. Ride and Mr. Wainwright without further delay. Their continued detention is a manifest injustice.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Governments have submitted evidence to the United Nations Secretary-General of war crimes in the conflict in the former Yugoslavia; and what proposals Her Majesty's Government now have to submit evidence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To date Bosnia Herzegovina, USA, Venezuela, Australia, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Russia, Colombia, Croatia, France, Turkey, Belgium, Italy, Slovenia, Albania, Canada, Mauritania, Sweden, United Arab Emirates and Denmark have submitted. We propose to submit substantiated evidence in the near future.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the percentage change in (a) real terms and (b) cash terms of his Department's budget from 1992-93 to 1993-94 (i) in total and (ii) separately for the diplomatic and aid wings.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 3 February 1993]: The figures are as follows:

	£ billion
Aid wing
1992-93	2·152
1993-94	2·267
difference in cash terms	+ 5·3 per cent.
difference in real terms	+ 2·5 per cent.
Diplomatic wing
1992-93	1·159
1993-94	1·220
difference in cash terms	+ 5·3 per cent.
difference in real terms	+ 2·4 per cent.
Total for FCO
1992-93	3·311
1993-94	3·487
difference in cash terms	+ 5·3 per cent.
difference in real terms	+ 2·5 per cent.

International Events

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the major international events in the United Kingdom and overseas in which Her Majesty's Government will participate in 1993; and which Minister will attend in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [pursuant to his reply 29 January 1993]: I should like to add to the list of major international events in which Her Majesty's Government will participate, the world conference on human rights, attended by the Foreign Secretary or the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs.

Debt (Developing Countries)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of developing country debt was scheduled to be cancelled at the outset of the Trinidad terms; and what proportion of total debt has been cancelled to date.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

At the Commonwealth Finance Ministers meeting in Trinidad and Tobago in September 1990, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, then Chancellor, proposed a reduction in the stock of eligible debt of two thirds. In December 1991, the Paris Club of creditor countries agreed to allow creditors to provide the equivalent of 50 per cent. cancellation of eligible debts consolidated under each agreement. These terms also include an undertaking by creditors to consider a reduction in the stock of eligible debt after a period of proven financial and economic responsibility of three to four years. For some of the most desperately indebted countries this may not prove sufficient, and we therefore take every opportunity to build consensus with our Paris Club colleagues to improve the terms on offer.

Specifically we are eager to see an increase in the amount of debt reduction available where necessary, and earlier action on the stock of eligible debt for debtors who already have a good track record.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the total amount of bilateral debt that has been cancelled to date under the Trinidad terms;

(2) if he will list the countries which have benefited to date from the cancelling of bilateral debt under the Trinidad terms, indicating the level of debt cancellation (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of each country's total level of foreign debt.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Fourteen countries have so far benefited from the Trinidad terms. The countries are Benin, Bolivia, Ethiopia, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea Republic, Honduras, Mali, Mauritania, Nicaragua, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Togo, Uganda, and Zambia. (a) Trinidad terms involve the equivalent of cancellation of up to half the eligible debt consolidated under the agreements. We estimate that the agreements so far reached will result in the equivalent of the cancellation of about US$ 1½ billion of claims over the lives of the agreements. The agreements also commit creditors to take action on the whole stock of eligible debt after a period of three to four years financial and economic responsibility. The amount of debt cancelled will therefore increase as these agreements mature. Unfortunately, answering (b) would entail disclosing confidential details of debtor countries' obligations to their creditors, and is not in any event a useful comparison to make.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Unmanned Aerial Vehicles

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the value of the British output of unmanned aerial vehicles and the balance of payments for such products.

Mr. Sainsbury: Figures for unmanned aerial vehicles are not separately identifiable in official trade statistics.

Aviation Committee

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the members of his Department's aviation committee and the number of times it has met since 10 April 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Aviation Committee has met three times since 10 April 1992.

The current membership of the Aviation Committee is as follows:

Chairman
Professor J. L. Stollery
College of Aeronautics
Cranfield Institute of Technology

Cooker and Gas Fire Manufacturers

Mr. Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the sector of industry which makes cookers and gas fires; how many such companies are known to his Department in the west midlands; and how many people are employed in the sector.

Mr. Sainsbury: United Kingdom production of cookers and gas fires in 1991 was £355 million. Of this, about 9 per cent. was exported. Firms in these sub-sectors have been adversely affected by the downturn in the housing market and in consumer demand.

Twelve firms in the west midlands are known to make cookers or gas fires. These employ 3,700 people.

Ship Building

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the gross tonnage of new merchant ships built in (a) United Kingdom shipyards and (b) EC countries in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury: The total gross tonnage of merchant ships of 100 gross tonnes and over constructed in the United Kingdom and EC countries in 1974, 1979 and 1991 is as follows:

Gross tonnage of merchant ships completed

	1974	1979	1991
United Kingdom	1,198,255	691,404	185,470
EC total	7,614,263	2,777,757	2,229,256

Source: Lloyd's Register of Shipping.
Notes:
1. Only the EC members of 1974 have been included in the EC total, in order to provide a comparable series.
2. From 1990 gross tonnage statistics for the Federal Republic of Germany have included the former German Democratic Republic. Hence the former German Democratic Republic is also included in the 1991 EC total.
3. Figures for the gross tonnage of merchant ships in 1992 are not yet available. 1991 figures have been provided.

BS 5750

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will carry out an independent evaluation of the costs and benefits of BS 5750; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have no plans to carry out an independent evaluation of BS 5750. BS 5750 is a voluntary quality management standard drawn up by industry to meet its own requirements and published by the British Standards Institution. The BSI established last week a new policy committee for small businesses to address needs of small businesses in all areas of BSI's activities. In the light of recent press coverage of the costs to small firms of complying with BS 5750, this new committee will look, as an early priority, into the application and promotion of that particular standard.

Liaison with Industry

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what liaison he has created within his Department and other concerned bodies charged with supervision of areas of concern to industry.

Mr. Heseltine: I have established a number of new divisions in my Department with the task of developing a dialogue with individual sectors of industry. In addition, as I announced on 2 February, we intend to set up seven business task forces to review all regulations which affect business.

Small Businesses

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to modify the audit requirements of small companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Government are nearing the end of their review of audit and accounting requirements for very small companies and I hope to announce the outcome soon.

Regulators

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to review the powers and accountability of (a) Ofgas, (b) Oftel and (c) Offer;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the powers and accountability of Offer; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received concerning the powers and accountability of Oftel; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what representations he has received concerning the powers and accountability of Ofgas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department receives representations from time to time concerning Offer, Ofgas and Oftel.

The coal review has received a number of items of evidence which have a bearing on the working of Offer and Ofgas, and will take into account all the recommendations made regarding these bodies in the Trade and Industry Select Committee report.

With regard to Oftel, some argue that its powers should be reduced, and some that they are inadequate. I believe that Oftel's powers are broadly right and there are no current plans to amend them.

The regulators are accountable for the discharge of their statutory duties. Each presents an annual report to Parliament. Select Committees may—and do—call the regulators to give evidence. If a regulator's proposal for a licence modification is not agreed by the licensee, the issue may be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for its view on the public interest. Ultimately, regulators' decisions may be subject to judicial review.

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase the transparency of (a) Ofgas, (b) Oftel and (c) Offer.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: With Government encouragement, the regulators already take great care to consult widely before reaching decisions on any issue, and to publicise their decisions and the reasoning behind them.

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the regulators of the privatised utilities.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992 provided additional powers where necessary to enable regulators to set and monitor standards of service. The regulators have used their powers effectively to promote competition, to secure fair prices, and to promote better service standards for customers.

Bicycles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department is giving the British bicycle manufacturing industry; and what efforts have been made to promote the British bicycle abroad.

Mr. Sainsbury: British bicycle companies are entitled to make full use of the many services including export advice from overseas trade services offered to United Kingdom industry by my Department, and the DTI vehicles division is specifically responsible for sponsoring the industry.

The Bicycle Association of Great Britain is actively involved in British Overseas Trade Board activities and regularly sponsors a group of bicycle companies at a major overseas trade fair in Cologne.

Furniture and Furnishings (Fire Safety)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been (a) the range of estimated annual costs and (b) his Department's estimate of the cost to a typical self-catering accommodation business made by the consultees to his draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) (Amendment) Regulations 1992 consultation document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 February 1993]: Consultees variously estimated the overall cost of purchasing new furniture to be in the range of £1,000 to £3,000, but gave no information on the basis of their estimates. The Department's estimate of the cost of purchasing new furniture to replace non-complying furniture is £850 for a self-catering unit accommodating four persons and is fully set out in the compliance cost assessment which was made available to all consultees.

Leyland DAF

Mr. Dover: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take the necessary action to ensure that all designs and patents for the Leyland DAF product lines currently operating within the United Kingdom form part of the assets being handled by the receiver appointed for these operations.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 9 February 1993]: All drawings and designs which are at the premises of the United Kingdom companies in receivership are under the day-to-day control of the receivers and are being examined with a view to ensuring that a complete set is available in respect of current products. The receivers' solicitors have been instructed to advise them upon the ownership of intellectual property used in the companies and are currently assessing the position.

Glass Curtain Walling

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of whether the criteria used to test the quality and strength of British glass curtain walling in France and Germany are discriminatory and a barrier to trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

I have no information that the criteria being used to test the quality and strength of British glass curtain walling in France or Germany are discriminatory against products from other member states and a barrier to trade. If I receive evidence of any discrimination or barriers to trade, in consultation with DTI colleagues, I shall take appropriate action to safeguard United Kingdom interests.

Construction Projects

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions he has made during the course of 1992 for or against major construction projects within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

I will write to the hon. Member once the information is available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Loans

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the form taken by relief from repayment of old aid loans by the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1979 we have consistently pursued a policy of commuting to grants through retrospective terms adjustment the outstanding aid loans of the poorest countries and rescheduling other aid loans for other debt-distressed countries. We consider eligible countries on a case-by-case basis.

The main criteria for RTA are poverty—the current threshold is countries with a per capita income of $545 or less—and firm evidence of commitment to IMF/IBRD-approved economic reform programmes. In the case of India, we provide equivalent measures, in the form of local cost aid to offset India's repayment of past aid loans.

Forestry Aid

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much forestry aid is currently paid in fees to (a) British consultants and (b) educational establishments within the United Kingdom; and if he will list each educational establishment in receipt of such funding, indicating the amount granted in each instance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We do not keep central records of fees paid to British consultants and educational institutions. Fees are negotiated contract by contract according to the tasks to be performed. The British institutions used in our forestry programmes include the University college of Wales (Bangor), the universities of Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Oxford and Reading and many other educational establishments and consultancy firms.

Commercial Bank Debt

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much United Kingdom commercial bank debt has been cancelled under the Brady plan; and what is the cancelled debt as a percentage of outstanding third-world debt.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Direct figures of United Kingdom commercial bank debt cancelled under the Brady plan are not available. However, in 1990 and 1991, United Kingdom banks' holdings of debt reduction instruments ("Brady bonds") rose by £2,930 million and £850 million respectively, or £3,780 million over the two years. It is estimated that these holdings replaced nearly £6 billion of loans outstanding, and therefore accounted for around £2 billion of write-offs. These £2 billion of write-offs may be considered as estimates for the amount of debt reduction, or cancellation, involved, and represent around 11 per cent. of all United Kingdom bank debt outstanding to developing countries as at end 1991. Total write-offs for 1989-91 are estimated to have been £4,160 million.

Debt (Developing Countries)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the level of debt repayments from developing countries received by the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years; and what was the level of new loans, investment, export credits and aid from Government and charities in each of those years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On the level of official debt repayments, I refer the hon. Member to the letter my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development wrote to him on 26 January, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. Provision of information on debt repayment poses the same problem as does information on interest alone. The United Kingdom net official and private flows to developing countries 1989-91 as published in the "British Aid Statistics" are as follows:

	Official development assistance	Official export credits	Project loans[1]	Voluntary agencies
1989	1,584	209	71	150
1990	1,503	259	88	170
1991	1,814	192	101	215

[1] Project loans is the definition for loan money actually spent in any given year rather than loan money committed in that year.

Figures for the seven years prior to 1989 are not immediately available. My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will write to the hon. Member with this information in due course.

Debt Relief

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of British aid in 1991 was included as debt relief according to the new directives announced by the OECD.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The amount of United Kingdom debt forgiveness counting as bilateral official development assistance, in accordance with directives agreed by the OECD, was £31 million in 1991. This includes debt covered by the Paris club's Toronto terms, plus ODA retrospective terms adjustment—the converting of old aid debts into grants—and normal debt rescheduling. No debt relief was granted by the Government under Trinidad terms in 1991 as it was only in December 1991 that the first two countries received these terms. Thus the debt relief granted in this form amounted to 1·71 per cent. of Britain's total official development assistance, or £1,814 million.

EC Aid

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the impact on the United Kingdom aid programme of the increase in EC aid agreed at the Edinburgh summit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our contributions to European Community aid programmes, both through the European development fund and through the EC budget, are part of our overall aid effort and are met from within the agreed PES provision for ODA's external assistance programmes.

The agreement reached at Edinburgh on future financing provides for considerable growth in the aid programme funded from the EC budget up to 1999. For the period up to 1995-96 covered in the autumn statement of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer it is expected that the proportion of the ODA's budget going through the EC will increase based on existing plans. Since we cannot anticipate decisions on the overall size of ODA's budget beyond 1995-96, we cannot anticipate the share which will go through the EC.

Tropical Forests

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedures have been established to monitor the effectiveness of the tropical forest action plan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We monitor the tropical forestry action programme through attendance at international meetings such as the tropical forestry advisers' group and through the national forestry planning processes in countries where we have significant aid programmes in the forestry sector.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if she will make a statement on the relationship between the commitment in the forest principles to unrestricted trade and the policy of limiting trade to sustainably produced timber.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no conflict between the forest principles agreed at UNCED and the International Tropical Timber Organisation's target of the year 2000 for all internationally traded tropical timber to come from sustainably managed sources. Both the UNCED principles and ITTO aim to promote the sustainable management of tropical forests and preclude unilateral and discriminatory restrictions contrary to internationally agreed rules.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the United Kingdom's tropical timber imports are derived from sustainable sources.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no reliable way of determining whether or not timber entering the United Kingdom has come from a sustainable source.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the International Timber Trade Organisation concerning the report on threatened timber species produced in May 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in frequent contact with the International Tropical Timber Organisation about how best to develop and build upon the work to which the hon. Member refers. We have offered to help meet the costs of expanding this work and of hosting an ITTO workshop, due to be held in March, to consider and, if necessary, refine, the scientific methodologies used to assess the extent to which individual timber species may be put at risk by the international timber trade.

World Bank

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account has been taken of the report on (a) the Pelosi amendment and (b) the portfolio management task force on World bank projects in deciding future United Kingdom funding arrangements for the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The so-called Pelosi amendment, which affected the United States position on environmental issues in multilateral development banks, is a matter for the United States Government. In the recently completed negotiations on the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association donors recommended to the bank's executive directors that once a borrower has made information on environmental assessments publicly available in the borrowing country, the same information should also be made publicly available at bank headquarters and in field offices in member countries.

IDA donors, including the United Kingdom, welcomed the report by the bank's task force on portfolio management aimed at improving the quality of project design and implementation and called on the bank to bring forward detailed proposals to make them effective. The bank's board of directors has subsequently discussed the report and asked the bank's management to prepare an action plan in the near future.

Deforestation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies have been made of the link between deforestation and population growth in the third world.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 4 December at column 427.

Adjustment Lending

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what processes are employed by the Overseas Development Administration in seeking to assess and minimise the environmental impacts of adjustment lending.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome the recognition that the multilateral institutions which are responsible for structural adjustment lending are giving to assessing the likely environmental consequences of such programmes and the assistance to developing countries to apply policies conducive to the protection of the environment. We support the World bank's position that more work needs to be done to identify the environmental impacts of adjustment lending. Where we are directly involved in adjustment programmes the processes set out in ODA's "Manual of Environmental Appraisal" apply, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy to establish a permanent commission on the Welsh language;

(2) if he will make it his policy to develop a national Welsh language planning unit in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Bill would establish a new, statutory Welsh language board. The board will have a very wide remit extending to all matters relating to the Welsh language.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to bring forward a comprehensive strategy for the maintenance and promotion of the Welsh language in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government have a comprehensive strategy for the maintenance and promotion of the Welsh language of which the Welsh Language Bill is but the latest part. S4C has been a great success and remains one of the most visible and important manifestations of the Government's commitment to the language. The central place of the language in our education policies is demonstrated by the status of Welsh as a foundation subject under the national curriculum and, most recently, by our proposal to establish Awdurdod Cwricwlwm ac Asesu Cymru. Many other Welsh organisations, both statutory and voluntary, also serve to promote the language through its use in their various activities.

This strategy can only be enhanced by our proposal to establish a statutory Welsh language board.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local authorities in Wales encouraging the establishment of Welsh language learning centres in each local authority area in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local authorities are best placed to decide how to meet the needs of Welsh language learners in their areas. The Department has helped to fund the centres at Nant Gwrtheyrn and Canolfan Iaith Clwyd and also local authority Welsh for adults courses.

Variable Message Signs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many variable message signs there are on each motorway and key trunk roads in Wales; and how many signs on each road have been placed within the last two years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Excluding lane control and matrix signs there are 11 electrically operated variable message signs on the motorway, 27 on the A55 and 14 on the A5 and Menai bridge; of these one, seven and zero respectively have been put in place in the last two years.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to the recommendations relating to opencast mining made by the Trade and Industry Committee in its first report on British energy policy and the market for coal, HC (1992-93) 237, in relation to opencast mining in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have stated that they will take account of the Trade and Industry Committee's report before coming forward with their coal review White Paper which will be published shortly.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he approved offers of regional selective assistance to (a) Hoya Lens UK Ltd., (b) Ringshore Ltd., (c) W. A. Turner Ltd. and (d) Chartered Trust Ltd; what public statements he has made on each of those approvals; and whether each of the grants has now been paid in full as offered.

Mr. David Hunt: Information about RSA offers to the companies concerned together with the current position on grant payments is as follows:

Company	RSA assistance offered £ million	Public statement
Hoya Lens UK Ltd.	0·950	7 October 1988
Ringshare Ltd.	3·4	[1]July 1992
W. A. Turner Ltd.	2·0	28 February 1991
Chartered Trust Plc	0·990	14 February 1990
	0·250	13 June 1990

[1] Employment Gazette

Note:

None of the grants have yet been paid in full. Other details about projects are matters of commercial confidentiality.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Three different consultancies have been engaged to help the Department both in drawing up and undertaking its current market testing programme. They are Coopers and Lybrand, Touche Ross and Price Waterhouse. The total cost to date is £25,000.

Potatoes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many potato producers there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Potatoes were grown on 1,519 main agricultural holdings in Wales in 1992 according to the June agricultural census.

Nicotine Patches

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he is making for nicotine patches to be prescribable in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Generally a doctor may prescribe under the national health service any medicines which are needed for the treatment of his or her patients. The exceptions are those drugs and other substances which have been listed in schedule 10 of the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992 on the advice of the Advisory Committee on Drugs or the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances (ACBS). These items may not be prescribed by GPs for supply under NHS pharmaceutical services, but may be prescribed privately and in some cases may be purchased without a prescription.

One patch has been included in schedule 10 on the advice of the ACBS, but the product is available on private prescription or over-the-counter from pharmacies. It is open to the committee to review the availability on GP prescription of any similar products.

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of "Tourism in the UK: Realising the Potential" as it applies to his Department's responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Issues relating to tourism in Wales highlighted in the document "Tourism in the UK—Realising the Potential" are subject to continuing review. In particular:

a. The Wales tourist board was granted powers on 16 March 1992 under the Overseas Promotion (Wales) Act 1992 to market the Principality independently abroad. I approved the WTB's overseas marketing plan on 5 February 1993 following consultation with the British Tourist Authority.

b. The board has committed itself to the principles of the citizens charter which are fully represented in its current 1992-93 corporate plan.

More generally, the WTB is at present developing a new tourism strategy which will address other issues raised within the document.

Radioactive Contamination

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sites within North Wales where his Department undertakes official radiation monitoring of coast contamination levels.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: On behalf of the Welsh Office, the directorate of fisheries research of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food undertakes regular monitoring of radioactivity in the surface and coastal waters of Wales. Details of this monitoring, including the sampling locations, are given in the annual aquatic environment monitoring reports, copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales which have launched a review of private sector housing provision in their area as a result of the publication of "Agenda for Action on Housing in Wales".

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Against the background of the "Agenda for Action", all Welsh housing authorities have reviewed private sector housing provision in the context of their annual housing strategies and operational plans.

Female Appointees

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of appointees to all of his quangos is female; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: At present 18 per cent. of appointees to the public bodies in Wales are female.

I am seeking to increase the number of women holding public appointment in Wales and I am taking every opportunity to do this. My target is that by September 1996, 30 per cent. of public appointments in Wales will be held by women.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to appoint some female members to the Welsh Economic Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I will announce my decision on the composition of the Welsh Economic Council in due course.

Pharmacists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the fees paid to pharmacists for dispensing expensive items; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Discussions with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee are taking place as part of the 1993-94 pay negotiations.

EDUCATION

Conductive Education

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will publish the Birmingham university report on the effectiveness of treatment at the Institute for Conductive Education in Birmingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: It is intended that the full report, containing a description of the methodology of the research by Birmingham university and details of all its findings, will be published by HMSO on behalf of the Department in May 1993.

Special Needs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he plans to publish specified assessment and statementing timetables for special education needs applications to local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: Statutory timescales for the making of assessments and statements by LEAs would be embodied in regulations under the Education Bill. We propose to consult on a draft of those regulations later this year.

Primary School Classes

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each local education authority the number of primary school pupils in class sizes of (a) 1 to 30, (b) 31 to 35, (c) 36 to 40 and (d) 41 and over in January 1992.

Mr. Forth: The information requested for single-teacher classes in maintained primary schools in England is given in the table.

Technical Qualifications

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to improve awareness among employers of the value of technical qualifications as compared with A-levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend is working closely with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and the awarding bodies to explain our reforms of vocational qualifications to young people, their parents, schools, colleges, employers and higher education institutions.

The new general national vocational qualifications and national vocational qualifications are designed to exacting criteria and will offer routes to employment or higher level study, alongside A-levels and AS examinations. We intend that many young people will consider GNVQs in particular as an alternative or an addition to A-level study.

Central Administrative Staff

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of the current administrative staff at the Department for Education and Office for Standards in Education of principal level and above have had experience in schools, colleges, universities or local government education administration; and what proportion this is of the total for each grade.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 8 February 1993]: According to the information currently available to the Department, the approximate proportions of current administrative staff at the Department for Education at these grades who have had previous experience as teachers in schools, further education, universities or in local government education administration are as follows:

	Total staff in grade
Grade 3—17 per cent.	12
Grade 5—28 per cent.	43
Grade 6—33 per cent.	9
Grade 7—25 per cent.	131
The figure for OFSTED is:
Grade 7—38 per cent.	8

PRIME MINISTER

Definition of Regions

Mr. Radice: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to co-ordinate the definitions of regions used by Government Departments.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister what steps are being taken by his Government to ensure that Government Departments use a standard definition of the English regions.

The Prime Minister: There is a standard definition of the regions which many Departments use, particularly for statistical purposes. The structures they use for administrative purposes are often based on that definition, while also taking account of the regional pattern which is best suited to managing the services for which each is responsible.

Pensions and Benefits

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set up arrangements for (a) the targeted non means-tested retirement pensions and the child cash allowances and (b) the income support measures to be considered in a new department subordinate to the Chancellor of the Exchequer equivalent to the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise systems.

The Prime Minister: No.

Trident

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Prime Minister what conclusions he has reached on the decision for the Trident refitting contract.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the replies given on 9 February, Official Report, columns 571-72, by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Members for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) and for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) respectively.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Expenditure Scrutiny

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the oral statement by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury of 8 February, Official Report, column 681, at what stage in the process of scrutiny of public expenditure the expenditure of the Northern Ireland Office will be examined.

Mr. Mates: The process of scrutiny to which the Chief Secretary referred will cover the activities of range of Great Britain programmes which, in Northern Ireland, are covered by the regional block. While my right hon. and learned Friend has a measure of discretion in the allocation of resources within the block, territorial expenditure is also subject to Treasury scrutiny and the implications of the Great Britain reviews will be taken into account.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Allason: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions more than one public interest immunity certificate has been issued in criminal proceedings.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 1 February, Official Report, columns 17-18. In none of those criminal proceedings was more than one public interest immunity certificate issued.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research Funding

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much in cash terms, in real terms and as a percentage of the science budget and that of the Universities Funding Council has been spent (a) by Government and (b) by the private sector on university research funding in each year since 1981; and what proportion of the gross domestic product those budgets amounted to in each of those years.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the proportion of research and development expenditure on fundamental science and technology as a percentage of gross domestic product for each year since 1981; and what is the Government's share of that expenditure for each given year;

(2) what was the proportion of research and development expenditure on fundamental science and technology as a percentage of gross domestic product in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France and (c) Germany in each year since 1981.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available in the terms requested. Government expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product on basic research, as defined by the OECD, from 1984-85 to 1991-92 is listed in the table, together with available comparable information for France and Germany.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The consultants used by my Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 are:

Chris Goodall Associates
DMW
Ernst and Young
PA Consulting
Price Waterhouse
Shreeveport
Symonds Facilities Management
Touche Ross

The total cost of consultancy support is £323,477.

International Organisations (Funding)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what account he has taken of changes in the exchange rate in the resource allocations of research councils that contribute to international agencies; and what effect he expects changes in the exchange rate to have on resources available within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: The distribution of the science budget to the research councils which I announced on 10 February, Official Report, columns 630-31, was based on the advice received from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, which took full account of the changes in the relevant exchange rates.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the international organisations and agencies whose subscriptions are funded from research council resources; and if he will give the value of these subscriptions in pounds sterling for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Waldegrave: Details of the expected expenditure by research councils on international subscriptions of over £100,000 in the financial years in question are as follows:

Income Distribution

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information given in his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), 13 February, Official Report, columns 123-24, on income distribution.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimates are given in the tables. Estimates of income are based on information reported to tax offices and collected through annual surveys of personal incomes. For years before 1985-86, estimates exclude employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and some investment income on which tax is deducted at source. For years up to and including 1989-90, married couples are counted as one taxpayer and their incomes are combined. Following the introduction of independent taxation, for 1990-91 onwards, husbands and wives are counted separately. Estimates are based on the surveys of personal incomes for years up to 1990-91 and projections of the 1990-91 survey for subsequent years; the latter are therefore provisional.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the amount and share of income going to (a) the top 1 per cent., (b) the next 2 to 5 per cent., (c) the next 6 to 10 per cent. and (d) the next 10 to 20 per cent. and subsequent deciles; of tax units for each year since 1978-79, revalued at 1978-79 prices;

Mr. Dorrell: Readily available estimates are in the table. For 1978-79 and 1989-90, married couples are counted as one taxpayer and their incomes are combined. Following the introduction of independent taxation, for 1990-91 onwards, husbands and wives are counted separately. The estimates of total income relate to income subject to income tax and excludes non-taxable income such as certain social security benefits.

Concessionary Benefits (Taxation)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 869, from the Secretary of State for Transport, how many persons in each of those categories are subject to taxation of the concessionary benefits; and what was the total income received from the taxation of this benefit for each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: Pensioners of British Rail and British transport police are not liable to tax on their travel concessions.

Employees are generally liable to tax on the expense incurred in providing benefits for them, their families and dependants. However, the case known as Pepper v. Hart established that the relevant expense for in-house benefit is the marginal, or direct additional cost. This is nil or negligible for British Rail employees, the British Transport police, and former employees of the British Transport Docks Board, Sealink and Wightlink. The Inland Revenue is repaying any excess tax collected in the current and past years, estimated to be around £4 million a year, on request from employees and as tax offices identify the need to do so.

Former employees of British Transport hotels who are still in employment and whose employers pay for their travel concessions are liable to tax on the cost to their employer. The total tax received in respect of these employees is not readily available.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury's 1992-93 market testing programme was set out in "The Citizens Charter, First report: 1992 (Cm. 2101)". It comprises nine services: economic model building and development; internal audit; the Library; recruitment; training; reprographics; stationery; consultancy inspection services activities; and Treasury security guard. The inclusion of the Treasury security guard is dependant upon the completion of a review currently being undertaken by Cabinet Office. The programme is due to be completed by September 1993. Work has started on a number of areas but none has yet reached the stage of competitive tender.

Public Transport (Tax Relief)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received suggesting that there should be tax reliefs available to those who use public transport as a means of getting to and from work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I am not aware of any such representations.

Charities (VAT)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax was paid by charities in the latest financial year for which figures are available; and to how much this amount is equivalent in terms of (a) an increase in the standard rate of income tax and (b) an increase in the current rate of value added tax.

Sir John Cope: Information about the amount of VAT borne by charities is not collated centrally, but it has been recently estimated that charities pay up to £300 million in VAT each year. This amount is equivalent to approximately 0·2p on the basic rate of income tax or a change of 0·1 percentage point in the standard rate of VAT.

Public Expenditure Review

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy for any new proposals arising from the public expenditure review, announced on 8 February, relating to (a) entitlement to pensions or (b) entitlement to benefit not to be implemented within the current Parliament.

Mr. Portillo: It would be premature to comment on the outcome of the review before it has started. The hon. Member will be aware of the commitments contained in the Conservative party's election manifesto.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral statement by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury of 8 February, Official Report, column 681, when he expects the public expenditure review to be completed.

Mr. Portillo: The full programme of reviews is expected to be completed by the end of this Parliament, although preliminary conclusions from the four reviews started this year should help to inform the next spending round that begins in the summer.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value of mortgage interest relief at the standard rate (a) currently and (b) at the time in the last five years at which interest rates were at their peak level.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of mortgage interest relief at the basic rate is about £5·2 billion for 1992-93 compared with £7·2 billion for the basic rate component of the relief in 1990-91.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue forgone by the Exchequer in respect of each main tax allowance.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in appendix D of the "Autumn Statement Statistical Supplement" (Cm 2219) published in January 1993.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the extra revenue if personal allowances relieved tax at (a) 20 per cent. and (b) 25 per cent.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimates are in the reply given to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 13 January 1993, at columns 746-47.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Nelson: The number of statutory instruments laid before Parliament by the Treasury for Departments responsible to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is given in the table.

Banks (Customers' Personal Data)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will call for a report from the Governor of the Bank of England on the circumstances in which banks are requiring from new customers an agreement for their personal financial data being disclosed to third parties; and on whether such information has been discolosed without the knowledge or consent of the customer.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 February 1993]: No. Alleged breaches of the Data Protection Act 1984 are for the Data Protection Registrar, not the Governor of the Bank of England to investigate. Nor has the governor any specific responsibility for monitoring compliance with the common law duty of confidence which banks owe their customers. If proceedings are brought by customers, the courts will adjudicate on any alleged breach of duty.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to amend the Banking Act 1987 to ensure that personal financial data relating to bank and other financial institution customers cannot be disclosed to third parties without the customer's express consent.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 February 1993]: None. Banks owe their customers a duty of confidence under the common law in respect of all personal information, and the confidentiality of computerised personal information held by banks is covered by the Data Protection Act 1984. The common law duty is set out in the code of banking practice—"Good Banking"—issued by the banks and building societies. Customers who believe that the code has been breached can take this up with the banking ombudsman. An independent code of banking practice review committee is responsible for reviewing the code. The enforcement of the 1984 Act is the responsibility of the Data Protection Registrar.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he will take to ensure that the Bank of England requires banks regulated by it to take adequate precautions to prevent unauthorised disclosure of personal financial data to third parties.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The Bank of England has no specific responsibility for this matter, which falls to the banks themselves, the banking ombudsman and the Data Protection Registrar. If proceedings are brought by customers, the courts will adjudicate on any alleged breach of duty.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will discuss with the Governor of the Bank of England and the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board means of ensuring that banks and financial institutions regulated and supervised by them do not disclose personal financial data to third parties without their express consent.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 February 1993]: I see no need to do so. The Governor of the Bank of England does not have any specific responsibility for the protection of personal financial data. This is the responsibility of the banks themselves, the banking ombudsman and the Data Protection Registrar. The Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulating organisations are already able to deal with complaints made to them about breach of fiduciary obligations owed to investment business customers.

Petroleum Revenue Tax

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the cost to the Exchequer of offsets against petroleum revenue tax, in each sector of the United Kingdom continental shelf, in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 10 February 1993]: The figures required for the United Kingdom and United Kingdom continental shelf are included in the table. A breakdown by sector of the continental shelf is not available.

Government Shareholdings

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the quoted shareholdings together with their value, and the percentage of the issued share capital, owned by Her Majesty's Government; whether in each case the holding is associated with the right to appoint directors, or a golden share; and which Department has the power of appointment or of the powers of the golden share.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 10 February 1993]: The table shows the ordinary shares held by the Government, their market valuation and the percentage of the issued share capital that they represent. Where a special ("golden") share is held, this is shown together with the department exercising the rights attached and the expiry date, if applicable, on or before which the special share may be redeemed. Where the powers attached to a special share include the appointment of directors, this is shown.

British Telecom

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for how long the Government intend to retain part of their equity stake in British Telecom; and in which financial years he plans to make any further disposals of BT shares.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 10 February 1993]: On the 18 November 1992 my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced the Government's intention to sell part of their residual holding of shares in British Telecommunications plc in 1993-94. No decisions have been taken on the size, timing or structure of the sale.

Written Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the advisory cost limit for answering written parliamentary questions in each year since 1980; what was the percentage increase in (a) constant and (b) actual terms in each year; when he next plans to uprate the limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1993, cols. 437-38]: The percentage increases shown at constant prices were incorrect. For completeness the amended answer is restated as follows:

Year	Advisory cost limit for answering written parliamentary questions	Percentage increase since preceding change
		(a) At constant prices (indexed by GDP deflator)	(b) Actual

1990	250	—	—
1991	250	—	—
1992	400	+21	+60

[1] (Unchanged since 1965).

The advisory cost limit was last increased on 1992 and this followed a major review of costs in 1991.

The current level of £400 was fixed as a multiple of eight times the average marginal cost so that only cases of exceptional high cost might be affected and to avoid the need for frequent small increases.

The limit may be increased from time to time in future when costs or policy suggest the need for a change.

HEALTH

Schizophrenia

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients with schizophrenia were discharged from hospital in each year since 1986; and how many of these in each year were discharged (a) in less than one month, (b) in less than three months, (c) in less than six months and (d) in less than 12 months.

Mr. Yeo: The table gives the number of discharges from hospitals in England where a diagnosis of schizophrenia was made. 1989-90 is the only year where the quality of the information permits publication.

Discharges with a diagnosis of schizophrenia from hospitals in England for 1989-90 (HES)

Hospital Beds

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of beds available in each Thames regional health authority in each of the last 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: More important than the number of beds is the number of patients treated each year; this has increased by over a third since 1979. The information available is given in the tables.

NHS Staff Statistics

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community psychiatric nurses, psychiatric social workers, health visitors, district nurses and practice nurses were employed by the national health service in the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The figures for psychiatric social workers are not centrally collected. The other information requested is in the table.

Whole-time Equivalents for Community Psychiatric Nurses, Health Visitors, District Nurses and Practice Nurses in England 1987 to 1991

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will review her Department's guidelines on the prevention of queue-jumping by general practitioner fund holders

Dr. Mawhinney: The joint guidance issued to hospital consultants on general practitioner fund holding on 11

June 1991 by the Department of Health and the Joint Consultants Committee, (Circular EL (91)84), is still valid and a review is not required. It states that:

(i) common waiting lists should be used by provider units for urgent and seriously ill patients, and for highly specialised diagnosis and treatment;
(ii) contract portfolios should be flexible and be worked out in close consultation with the hospital clinicians who have to deliver them;
(iii) provider units should not offer contracts subject to (i) and (ii) which would disadvantage the patients of other purchasers.

Copies of the circular EL(91)84 are available in the Library.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients registered with fund-holding practices are over pensionable age; and what is the corresponding proportion in the general population.

Dr. Mawhinney: Provisional figures for England in 1991, the latest available, from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys show that 13·08 per cent. of males and 23·55 per cent. of females in the general population are over pension age. Comparable figures for fund-holding practices are not available centrally.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements she has made to monitor the financial procedures and health care quality of fund-holding general practitioner practices; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, regional health authorities have primary responsibility for the management and monitoring of the scheme. Regulations require fund holders to manage the fund efficiently and effectively and to submit income and expenditure returns regularly to family health service authorities. Their accounts are subject to external audit by the Audit Commission.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fund-holding general practitioner practices (a) are running and (b) have approval from her Department in (i) Cheltenham and (ii) Gloucestershire; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The South Western regional health authority is responsible for the management of the general practitioner fundholding scheme in these areas. The hon. Member may wish to contact Ms. Rennie Fritchie, the RHA chairman, for details.

Nurses

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bank nurses are currently employed, by regional health authority area, in the national health service; and what this number represents as a percentage of the total number of qualified nurses employed in the national health service in each regional health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

NHS Monitoring

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to monitor standards and service delivery in the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Patients charter and general standards of service are monitored at local level by district health authorities, general practitioner fund holders and family health service authorities. Regional health authorities take an overview of services in their regions and are accountable to the national health service management executive.

All regional health authorities have established programmes of medical audit—covering both primary and secondary care—and are now extending this into wider areas including nursing audit. In addition, the clinical standards advisory group has been set up under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to advise United Kingdom Health Ministers on specific issues.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the firms of consultants used by her Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has used a number of consultants to assist in preparing the market testing programme, to support in-house bids, to advise market test managers and prepare specification. Between November 1991 and the end of March 1993 the Department has spent or is committed to spend about £375,000. The following consultants have been used:
Coopers and Lybrand
CSL
Doctus Consulting Europe

Ernst and Young
Kermon Ltd
KPMG
PE International Plc
Procord Ltd
Shreeveport Ltd
Symonds Facilities Management Plc
Touche Ross

Community Care

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the representations she has received in respect of the Government's proposals for community care; and how many of those opposed, and how many were in favour of, the Government's proposals.

Mr. Yeo: The aims of the Government's community care policy enjoy wide cross-party support. The details of its implementation have been the subject of wide consultation and we have received many representations.

Children (Secure Accommodation)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the weekly charges to local authorities for the use of secure accommodation for children in the last three years and the number of children placed in such accommodation by each local social services authority in the last three years.

Mr. Yeo: Information about charges in the form requested is not collected centrally. Information about the number of admissions to secure units in England for the last three years is published in "Children Accommodated in Secure Units During the Year Ending 31 March 1991 England". A copy is available in the Library.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to limit the prescription of oral contraceptives.

Mr. Sackville: I have asked the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs to review the range of contraceptives available on national health service prescription. They will ensure that all clinical need continues to be met.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will publish a list showing the prescribed brands of oral contraceptive, their dose of hormones, and the price of a month's supply.

Funding

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent her Department takes account of (a) activity levels and (b) information on outcomes in assessing its funding requirements.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account she takes in determining the total expenditure on health care of international comparisons of health care spending as a proportion of gross domestic product; and what guidance she gives on the appropriate percentage that should be spent on medical and nursing salaries, administration salaries and costs, building maintenance and pharmaceuticals.

Mr. Sackville: A number of factors are taken into account in setting the overall level of funding available to the national health service, including the health benefits of increased activity, other developments and affordability. We will continue to achieve the best possible value from the record sums of money now spent in the NHS; spending in other countries with different health care systems is not relevant to decisions on funding the NHS.

It is the responsibility of health care providers within the NHS to determine how best to deploy the resources which they earn from NHS contracts, to meet the requirements of purchasers and to achieve the maximum benefit for patients.

Dentistry

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the women's organisations that were consulted by her Department or Sir Kenneth Bloomfield in respect of the Bloomfield report proposals to remove pregnant women and mothers with children under the age of one year from the exempt category for NHS dental charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Kenneth conducted his review independently.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of salaried dentists, orthodontists, dental nurses and dental hygenists for each district health authority, family health service authority and trust in England for each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of salaried dentists employed by family health services authorities in England during the last five years is shown in the table. The information is not recorded for district health authorities or trusts.

	Total number of salaried dentists as at 30 September

No separate record is maintained of dentists who specialise in orthodontics. It is estimated that there are some 28,000 dental nurses.

The number of salaried dental hygienists for each of the last five years is set out in the table. Figures are not yet available for the year ended December 1992. This information is not collected centrally for district health authorities, family health services authorities or trusts.

Year ended 31 December

	Number
1987	2,330
1988	2,450
1989	2,648
1990	2,808
1991	2,953

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family health services authorities have used their capital reserves to maintain dental services since July 1992; and if she will publish the amounts in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 9 February at column 619.

Family Planning Clinics

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the number of first contacts with people using family planning clinics and (b) the percentage of the female population seen at family planning clinics for each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Sackville: Information for 1991-92 is not yet available. For other years the information for England is as follows:

	First contacts at family planning clinics (thousands)			Female contacts seen[1] as percentage of population aged 15 to 49
	Total	Male	Female[1]
1988-89	1,147·6	32·4	1,115·2	9·5
1989-90	1,148·2	32·7	1,115·5	9·5
1990-91	1,091·6	31·9	1,059·8	9·0

[1] Whilst the great majority of first contacts will fall within the ages 15 to 49, there may be some above or below those ages.

NHS Administration Costs

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what management studies by outside consultants are planned by her Department to make recommendations on how administration costs can be saved and redirected to more effective provision of patient care within the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. It is the responsibility of health authorities and national health service trusts to ensure that administrative costs are kept to the minimum consistent with good management.

Computer Services

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will remove Sir Robin Buchanan from the posts of chairman of Wessex regional health authority and chairman of the NHS Supplies Authority during investigations into the privatisation of computer services.

Mr. Sackville: No. I have every confidence in Sir Robin Buchanan as chairman of the Wessex regional health authority and of the National Health Service Supplies Authority. He has fully encouraged and supported the extensive action taken by management of the Wessex RHA to rectify the organisational problems associated with RISP.

The district auditor commended the actions of the RHA in his report on the RISP project.

Sir Robin was selected as the most appropriate chairman for the NHS Supplies Authority because of his wide knowledge and experience of supplies issues. Under his chairmanship, NHS Supplies is already demonstrating the savings that it can make in purchasing goods and services for the NHS, which leaves the NHS with more money for direct patient care.

Acute Beds

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bed days were available on wards classified as acute, in each of the districts in the four Thames regions and special health authorities (a) during the financial year which ended 31 March 1992 and (b) during the first six months of the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Information for 1991-92 is given in the table. Information for 1992-93 is not yet centrally available.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what directions she has given to regional health authorities, in respect of the release of information already collected by them in relation to the operation of the health service; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what guidance she has given on which tier of management should take responsibility for decisions on the release of information to hon. Members within regional and district health authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have issued no directions or formal guidance to health authorities on the release of information to hon. Members. The patients charter however has set out important new commitments to publishing information. Beyond that, national health service authorities are responsible for deciding whether any further information should be made public.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her statement in respect of access to information by hon. Members of 26 January, Official Report, column 903, what directions she has given to the Yorkshire regional health authority to provide information already collected by that region in respect of statistical data relating to the normal operation of the health service within the Yorkshire region; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Provisional waiting time information is collected for management purposes and is published on a quarterly basis. Provisional waiting list figures for 31 December 1992 were published on 9 February in press release H93/547 a copy of which is available in the Library.

St. Thomas's Hospital

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the claim for central funding of the soft tissue tumour unit based at St. Thomas's hospital, London.

Mr. Sackville: The charitable moneys which currently are used to fund this service are to be withdrawn on 31 March 1993. From 1 April 1993 the unit will be brought into the national health service internal market. St. Thomas's hospital is working with the staff of the unit to help cost its work and charge referring hospitals for its services. The position of the unit will be kept under review as part of the national review of specialist services which is being carried out by the NHS management executive.

GDP (Health Care)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of gross domestic product was spent on health in each year since 1984 in each European Community member state; and if she will give the percentage change in each case since (a) 1963, (b) 1970 and (c) 1980.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 February 1993]: Total national health service expenditure in the United Kingdom as a percentage of gross domestic product in each year since 1984 is given in the table, together with the percentage real terms changes in total NHS expenditure compared with 1979-80. Figures for earlier years are not available on a similar basis, but show an increase in Government spending on health from 3·5 per cent. of GDP in 1963 to 3·7 per cent. in 1970.

Figures for other EC countries are not available on a comparable basis.

Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish figures showing health expenditure as a proportion of gross domestic product for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 29 January column 889]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply.

The estimated gross expenditure as a percentage of GDP for 1992-93 should read 6·0. The corrected table is as follows:

United Kingdom national health service expenditure as a percentage of GDP

	Gross expenditure as a percentage of GDP
1983-84	5·3
1984-85	5·4
1985-86	5·2
1986-87	5·2
1987-88	5·1
1988-89	5·1
1989-90	5·1
1990-91	5·3

	Gross expenditure as a percentage of GDP
1991-92	5·7
1992-93[1]	6·0

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs

6. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new strategies he intends to provide to tackle drug problems in England and Wales.

Mr. Jack: In addition to developing the drugs prevention initiatives, whose lives were recently extended until 1995, we are implementing the EC directive on precursor chemical control, and putting through the House the Criminal Justice Act. Finally, at a national level, we are committed to bringing forward proposals to ensure that the control of drug misuse is co-ordinated more effectively.

26. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new strategies he intends to promote to tackle drug problems in Blyth Valley.

Mr. Jack: I wrote to the hon. Member on 30 November 1992 about some of the projects in the north-east in which the drugs prevention team based in Newcastle has been involved and offered my assistance on any related matters he wished to raise including how these ideas might apply to Blyth. That offer still stands.

Visa Nationals

16. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make arrangements during 1993 to reduce the maximum period for which a visa national may visit the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have no plans to reduce the maximum period for a visit specified in the immigration rules, but I will consider in due course whether any changes are called for in connection with the draft external frontiers convention when action is needed to ratify it.

Stabbing

17. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victims there have been of crimes of stabbing in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: We do not know the total number of victims of stabbings, which are not recorded as a separate offence category by the police. We do know that the number of homicides in England and Wales where the method of killing was by a sharp instrument were 182 in 1989; 184 in 1990; and 223 in 1991.

Young Offenders

18. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to tackle youth crime.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have introduced a wide range of measures which aim to prevent young people from committing crime. We have also considerably strengthened the powers of the courts to deal with those who do. I am now preparing proposals for new measures which will increase the powers of the courts to provide care and training in secure accommodation for juveniles who persistently re-offend.

Racist Organisations

19. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in the law he is considering in relation to racist organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The views of racist organisations are repugnant to the Government and to the public at large and an offence is committed under the Public Order Act 1986 if there is the intention or likelihood of stirring up racial hatred, or if threatening, abusive or insulting behaviour takes place. The Government have no present plans to change the law.

Prison Population

20. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the size of the prison population; and what the figure was three years ago.

Mr. Peter Loyd: On 31 December 1992 the prison population in England and Wales was 40,600. Three years earlier it was 45,900.

Community Service Orders

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current use of community service orders.

Mr. Jack: The courts are making increasing use of community service orders. In 1991, 41,200 community service orders were started, an 8 per cent. increase over 1990.

Police (Civilian Staff)

22. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilians now work in the police force; and what change there has been in this figure since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There were 49,085 civilian staff employed by the police service in England and Wales at the end of November 1992. This is an increase of 14,455, or 42 per cent., since the Government first took office in 1979.

Electoral Registration

23. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to take to improve the current system of electoral registration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have set up a working group of Home Office officials and representatives of electoral registration officers and local authorities to look at all aspects of electoral registration. We shall consider the working group's findings once it has concluded its work.

Car Crime

24. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had recently with the Northumbria police authority about car crimes in the force area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State met representatives of Northumbria police authority on 10 December 1992 to discuss matters of concern to them. Car crime in the force area was not raised specifically.

Police (Restructuring)

25. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet in a position to make a statement on the future organisation of the police force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering what reforms may be needed and will announce his proposals as soon as possible. The interested parties will be consulted before final decisions are reached.

Crime Prevention Board

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from Crime Concern over the establishment of a new national crime prevention board; and what representations he has made.

Mr. Jack: The chairman of Crime Concern wrote to me last month welcoming the setting up of a National Board for Crime Prevention and seeking discussions on the relationship between it and the board. I have invited Crime Concern to come and discuss these matters with me once separate discussions between its representatives and senior officials on the ways in which they can contribute to the new developments on crime prevention have been completed. I have no doubt that Crime Concern will have a valuable contribution to make in assisting the work of the board.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill

28. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those organisations which have written to him to register their opposition to the proposals contained in the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have arranged for a list of the main organisations who have written to us to be placed in the Library.

Refugees (Detention Centres)

29. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans Her Majesty's Government have to build new detention centres for refugees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We plan to provide about 300 additional detention places in phases from 1993 to 1995 to accommodate those detained under immigration powers, including asylum applicants. These plans have not yet been finalised.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish his consultation paper on wheel clamping on private property.

Mr. Jack: A consultation paper on wheel clamping on private land will be published later this month.

Police (SSAs)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the standard spending assessment in respect of the police service for each local authority in 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will estimate the effect of this standard spending assessment if (a) the 1987 system of needs assessment and (b) the safety net arrangements introduced in 1988 had still been in place.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Police elements of English local authorities' standard spending assessments for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are given in the table. No figures are shown for Wales because Welsh local authorities' standard spending assessments do not identify separate elements for individual services such as police.

Information on what current police standard spending assessments would be if they were calculated by reference to the distribution formula which was discontinued in 1987 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to discourage crime by juveniles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Government have already introduced a wide range of measures to discourage young people from committing crime. In the Criminal Justice Act 1991, implemented on 1 October 1992, we have recently strengthened the powers of the court in relation to defendants under the age of 18.

Both in absolute terms, and as a proportion of all known offenders, the number of known juvenile offenders has declined in recent years. But the Government are not complacent. We are currently considering what additional measures it might be appropriate to introduce in order to deal more effectively with the small number of juveniles who persistently re-offend and for whom existing arrangements appear to be inadequate.

Parliamentary Boundaries Commission

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the Parliamentary Boundaries Commission.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the four boundary commissions for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are making satisfactory progress with their programmes of work to review the boundaries of parliamentary constituencies in the United Kingdom.

Youth Crime, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to tackle youth crime in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 10 February 1993 at column 625.

Operation Container

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of Operation Container; and what recent consultation he has had with the Greater Manchester police authority about its effects on policing in the conurbation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service expects Operation Container to end shortly, although this will depend on the prison population, especially the numbers remanded and committed to custody in the north-west.

The prison service has weekly meetings with the Greater Manchester police on Operation Container. In addition, on 5 February, the prison service area manager for the trans-Pennine area—which includes Manchester prison—discussed the management of plans to reduce numbers in police cells with the senior headquarters officers concerned. The implications of police cell usage on police operations was discussed at that meeting. It was explained that the police had successfully been able to confine the operation largely to rest day working in order to minimise the effect on normal police operations.

HMP Doncaster

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now made a decision on whether he will allow the prison service to make an in-house bid for the management of Her Majesty's prison, Doncaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Terrorism and Drug Importers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in legislation will be required to permit the security service to develop its role in combating threats from terrorism and drug importers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Security Service Act 1989 defines the functions of the service as being the protection of national security and the safeguarding of the economic well-being of the United Kingdom against threats from overseas.

The security service may conduct investigations only into areas which satisfy one or both of these criteria. Terrorism is referred to in the Act as a particular threat to national security and therefore falls within the criteria. The scale of drugs trafficking and other types of organised crime is not such that there is a current threat to national security. The security service therefore has no role in investigating these criminal matters and, contrary to recent press allegations, is not seeking one. The Government have no plans to amend the Act to redefine the functions of the service in this respect.

Police Complaints Authority

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent new appointments he has made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Miss Linda Haye, formerly head of the youth and community department of Hertfordshire county council, has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the Police Complaints Authority. She will take up her post on 15 February.

TRANSPORT

ATOLs

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of package air travel operators who do not hold an air transport operator's licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: It is an offence under the Civil Aviation (Air Travel Organisers' Licensing) Regulations 1972 for those who are required to hold an ATOL not to do so. It is not readily possible to estimate how many package holiday operators are in breach of that requirement at any one time; but the Civil Aviation Authority will, where appropriate, prosecute operators apparently guilty of such an offence and it is open to anyone who believes that an offence has been committed to report the matter to the authority.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider placing a legal responsibility on airlines to ensure that operators of packaged air travel, whose reservations are accepted by them, are in possession of a valid air transport operator's licence and comply with relevant EC directives.

Mr. Norris: Such a responsibility has been placed on United Kingdom airlines by regulation 11(1)(a) of the Licensing of Air Carriers Regulations 1992.

Cyclists, London

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will conduct a survey of the number of cyclists in central London who ride their machines after lighting-up time without any lights; if he will assess the risks to road safety resulting from unlit cycles; and what action he is taking to encourage them to ensure that they display adequate lighting.

Mr. Norris: Only about one fifth of all reported cycle accidents happen during the hours of darkness. It is not possible to estimate what proportion of these accidents is caused by the bicycle being unlit. The proposed survey would not permit this to be determined.

The law requires front and rear lights to be used between sunset and sunrise. Advice to cyclists about this requirement is contained in the highway code and that message is reinforced in road safety campaigns, such as the "Cycle Safe" campaign which is to be run later this year.

Road and Rail Freight

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportions of freight were carried by rail and by road in 1991, 1979 and 1967 in Great Britain, Germany and Japan.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent statistics readily available are for 1990, published, with 1980, in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1992", tables 8.9 and 8.10. Statistics for 1970 onwards, with definitions and more detailed comparisons, are published in the transport statistics report "International Comparisons of Transport Statistics Part 1: Intermodal". Both publications are in the House of Commons Library. Reliable comparisons are not available for years prior to 1970.

Piracy

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department's merchant shipping notice on piracy and armed robbery will be published.

Mr. Norris: Merchant shipping notice No. M 1517 "Piracy and Armed Robbery" is being distributed to shipowners, masters and crews. A copy of the merchant shipping notice has been placed in the Library of the House.

Airline Competition

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to discuss airline competition with chairmen of British-owned airlines; and which chairmen he proposes to meet.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend regularly meets chairmen of United Kingdom airlines to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will instigate an Office of Fair Trading investigation of competition and fare structures in the airline industry.

Mr. Norris: No. Within the EC, Community legislation covers these issues. Elsewhere, the Civil Aviation Authority already has appropriate powers.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action the Civl Aviation Authority is taking to allow greater competition between British airlines on Atlantic routes with particular reference to the London to San Francisco service;

(2) if he will use his powers to direct the Civil Aviation Authority to ensure greater consumer choice between British airlines serving Atlantic routes with particular reference to the London to San Francisco service.

Mr. Norris: We understand that cases concerning competitive aspects of north Atlantic routes, including competition on the London-San Francisco route, are before the Civil Aviation Authority. In view of the Secretary of State's appellate role, it would be inappropriate to comment.

British Airways Board

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what continuing financial or related interest in British Airways the Government have following privatisation relating to the structure and composition of the board of directors.

Mr. Norris: The Government retained a small shareholding in British Airways following privatisation in order to meet entitlements which were expected to arise under the loyalty bonus arrangements forming part of the offer for sale. The holding currently amounts to about 3·2 million shares, or 0·4 per cent. of total shareholdings in the company.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will use his reserve powers to ensure the fair allocation at Heathrow airport of take-off and landing slots for large and small British airlines.

Mr. Norris: No. Slot allocation at Heathrow is a matter for the airport co-ordinator, working within industry guidelines and European Community legislation.

Rail Subsidy

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will guarantee continuing levels of subsidy to prospective private sector railway franchisees for the full length of their franchise.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 February 1993]: It will be for the franchising director to negotiate contracts with private sector franchisees, and to make any subsidy payments necessary under them from within his budget. In doing so he will be in no different a position to any other public sector body in entering into contracts which run beyond the normal three-year public expenditure planning cycle.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what limit he will place on the amount of subsidy to be offered to prospective rail freight operators under the arrangements announced by the Government for the next 15 years; and what estimate he has made of the total amount to be guaranteed.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The Government have not set a specific time limit on the new scheme—we have said that it will be reviewed after a period of operation. The amount of funds available will depend on the level of demand for the scheme, objective assessment of its benefits, and competing demands for public expenditure.

DEFENCE

Aldermaston (Accidents)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to reply to the letter from Greenpeace to Mr. Allen, senior administration officer at Aldermaston, concerning accidents at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: The Department will reply to the Greenpeace letter of 26 January 1993 concerning accidents at AWE Aldermaston as soon as possible.

Bands

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the establishment of pipe bands of Scottish regiments, broken down by specialisation as appropriate; how they are funded; what are their annual costs; what training facilities for military piping are available, and at what annual cost; what is the annual income obtained from public or private performances of Scottish military pipe bands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pipe bands are not separately established in Scottish regiments, but a regiment could have 15 pipes, six side drums, two tenor drums and a base drum. There is currently a piping school within the Household Division, a Guards Depot piping school and a piping and drumming wing of the Scottish Division and an Army school of piping. Central records are not held for the annual cost, the training cost or the annual income of pipe bands.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the establishment, annual cost and training arrangements for the pipe bands of the Royal Irish Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no separate establishments for pipe bands in the regiment. The maximum number of instruments likely to be available to any regiment are 15 pipes, six side drums, two tenor drums and a base drum. Central records are not held for the annual costs of the bands. Pipers are trained at the Army school of piping in Edinburgh.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which ways the initial and subsequent training of band personnel varies between each of the services; and in each case what is the length of the full-time training undertaken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principal differences between the training of musicians in the services are due to different standards of musical competence on entry. The length and nature of training is affected by the degree of integration of musical and military training. In the Royal Marines these are fully integrated, whilst at the Royal Military School of Music and the Royal Air Force School of Music the training is predominantly musical, with military training being provided elsewhere. The lengths of training of personnel in the three services prior to joining a band are as follows:

Royal Marines
Musicians undergo eight terms of 15 weeks each. Buglers undergo five terms of 15 weeks each.

Army
10 weeks Common Military Syllabus (Recruits) and up to 44 weeks musical training, followed by three weeks on the Bandsmen Medical Assistants Course.

Royal Air Force
7 weeks initial recruit training; up to a year's musical training for non-graduates or, for graduates a shorter familiarisation course of between six weeks and four months (the length depends on individual capability); and three weeks and two days training as medical assistants.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to publish in full the review by the Commandant of the Royal Military School of Music of the future organisation, structure and geographical location of Army bands in the light of the restructuring of the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is an internal review, and I do not therefore intend to publish it in full. No decision has yet been made on the recommendations put forward by the review, but an announcement will be made in due course once any decisions are taken.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what equivalent level of civilian paramedical expertise Army band personnel are trained; and where, when and how often they are trained in these skills.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Army band personnel are trained to medical assistant rather than full paramedic standards. On completion of music training they attend a medical assistant course at the Royal Army Medical Corps training centre and thereafter receive regular refresher training in their units by qualified instructors. This enables them to undertake mobilisation roles in direct support of medical units in war.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role is played by the bands of regiments deployed (a) on emergency tours to Northern Ireland and Belize and (b) on residential tours outside Great Britain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The precise role of a band in any given theatre can vary, depending on the requirements of the unit commanding officer. On emergency tours to Northern Ireland and Belize bands deploy with units at the commanding officer's discretion, where they would typically man medical centres, deploy on patrol, as medical staff, and give concerts. When a unit has an integral band it would normally accompany the unit on residential tours outside Great Britain to BAOR, Cyprus, Hong Kong or Northern Ireland. Similar roles to those carried out on emergency tours are undertaken including taking part in ceremonial duties.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the rules governing the use of funds received by bands as a result of public engagements; what has been the total income in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will publish details of the level and nature of current commercial sponsorship of military bands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In return for a contribution to public funds service bands are permitted to carry out fee-paying engagements. The total income, in the last financial year for which figures are available, 1991-92, was £113,000. There were fewer engagements that year as a knock-on effect of Operation Granby. Details of commercial sponsorship are not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It is not, however, believed to be significant in scale.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) military operations and (b) operations in support of civil authorities in which Army band personnel have participated in the past 10 years, showing in each case the numbers participating and the nature of their activities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Army band personnel may deploy, usually as medics, with the parent unit to any operational theatre, or on any operation in support of the civil authorities.

Guatemala

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what charges will be raised by his Department for the flights currently being undertaken by an RAF C-130 in Guatemala; how many flights were undertaken; and from which agency the request for assistance originated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF C-130 flew nine sorties totalling 11 hours 20 minutes, in response to a request from the Overseas Development Administration. The flying charge, based on extra cost, will amount to some £16,500.

Channel Tunnel (Challenger Tanks)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the arrangements which will apply to the transit of British and NATO military material through France via the channel tunnel; and if the railways in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the European mainland and (c) the channel tunnel can carry Challenger tanks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decisions have been made on the military use of the tunnel in peacetime. Cost will be a major factor in any decision to use the tunnel for routine movements. The dimensions of the Challenger tank, and the absence of suitable rolling stock, currently preclude it from movement on the railways in the United Kingdom. Challenger tanks are routinely moved by rail in Germany. The tunnel is physically capable of taking the Challenger tank although a number of technical aspects as well as commercial and safety aspects would have to be resolved first.

TA Officers (Official Secrets Acts)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army officers have been charged under the Official Secrets Acts in each year since 1970; in how many of those cases the accused was kept in custody between arrest and trial, and for how long in each case; what was the outcome of each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Readily available records cover only the period since 1985. The information requested prior to that could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Since 1985 one Territorial officer has been charged under the Official Secrets Act—in 1992. That case is ongoing and it would not be appropriate for me to comment further.

Military Training

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what basic military training is undertaken by (a) Army, (b) Royal Marine and (c) Royal Air Force band personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Marine musicians and buglers are trained in a range of basic military skills, to enable them to fulful their peace and war roles, including medical support. For new entrants, this training is provided concurrently with musical training, and in the first 15-week term of their courses some 80 per cent. of the time is spent on basic military training. The proportion of time devoted to musical training increases in subsequent terms. Musicians and buglers undertake seven or more days military training each year following the completion of initial training.

In common with all other recruits to the Army, Army musicians undergo the 10-week common military syllabus (recruits) course on entry, prior to joining the Royal Military School of Music for the musicians' foundation course. On completion of this, they attend a course for bandsmen medical assistants.

Recruits undergo a seven-week initial training course, mostly in drill, at RAF Swinderby, before joining the RAF School of Music. On completion of musical training, trainees attend a medical training course, three weeks and two days long, to equip them for their role as medical assistants.

Warship Refits

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy concerning competitive tenders for refitting of naval warships.

Mr. Aitken: It remains our policy that, wherever possible, and in the interests of providing overall best value for money, competitive tenders will continue to be invited for that portion of the naval refitting programme not allocated to the two royal dockyards as part of their core programme.

HMS Gloucester

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his officials have discussed details of Devonport's offer to refit HMS Gloucester with (a) Babcock Thorn Ltd. or (b) other persons or bodies connected with Rosyth naval dockyard.

Mr. Aitken: I can confirm that no officials from my Department have discussed details of Devonport's offer with either Babcock Thorn Limited or other non-MOD bodies connected with Rosyth royal dockyard.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the 1990 decision to allocate HMS Gloucester to be refitted at Devonport was changed to a tender process; and for what reason the refit was allocated to Rosyth in 1992.

Mr. Aitken: HMS Gloucester was provisionally planned, in 1990, to be refitted at Devonport, but not formally allocated. For overall policy and value for money reasons, at that time it was decided to compete the refit. In 1992 the refit of HMS Gloucester was allocated to Rosyth in order to balance the naval workload there following the decision not to proceed with the planned refit of HMS Revenge.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the rescue missions flown by SAR helicopters based at (a) RAF Chivenor and (b) RAF Brawdy since 1986 have been to incidents in (i) Wales, (ii) the Bristol channel and (iii) Devon.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held in the format required.

Departmental Housing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give details on the level of demand for, and level of provision of, his Department's housing in Scotland;

(2) if he will give details of the level of demand for, and the level of provision of, married quarters for armed forces personnel stationed in Scotland; and if he will break these figures down for each branch of the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 December 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, the Ministry of Defence owned 6,821 housing properties in Scotland of which 5,903 were occupied. A total of 6,519 of these were service married quarters of which 5,702 were occupied, broken down by service as follows:

	Married quarter stock	Married quarters occupied
Royal Navy	2,058	1,742
Army	1,566	1,220
Royal Air Force	2,895	2,740
Total	6,519	5,702

In addition 52 service families—10 RN, seven Army and 35 RAF—were being paid an allowance to rent private accommodation because of insufficient quarters at their place of duty. The number of families on waiting lists for quarters in Scotland and accommodated temporarily elsewhere could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The majority of the vacant married quarters owned by MOD were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation or were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly. In addition, 171 surplus married quarters were in the process of being sold.

Three hundred and two properties were MOD civilian houses of which 201 were occupied. Fifty-two vacant properties have since been handed back to Dumbarton district council and the handback of a further tranche of 34 vacant properties is under negotiation. In addition, 42 houses were in the process of being sold, mostly to sitting tenants.

Forces Personnel (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of how many armed forces personnel are currently stationed in Scotland; and if he will break these figures down by branch of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 1 January 1993 the number of armed forces personnel in Scotland were, in each service:

	Number
Royal Navy and Royal Marines	[1]9,998
Army	2,185
Royal Air Force	7,532
TOTAL	19,715

[1] Including sea service personnel docked in Scottish waters.

The figures include all personnel—male and female, officers and other ranks, trained and untrained.

Barracks

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers (a) are, and (b) can be accommodated in barracks which are curently in use in Scotland; and which barracks these are.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Fifty-eight officers and 966 soldiers of the regular Army are accommodated in barracks currently in use in Scotland. These figures fluctuate daily owing to postings, enlistments and discharges. Barrack accommodation is available for 163 officers and 2,022 soldiers in Edinburgh at Craigiehall, the Castle, Dreghorn and Glencorse; in Inverness; in Fort George; and in the Hebrides at Benbecula and St. Kilda.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many days per annum barracks not currently used by the Regular Army are used by the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve; which barracks are used by the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve; and if he will give similar information for Royal Navy quarters, Royal Air Force quarters and Royal Marine barracks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Army Trucks

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sources of supply of 4 × 4 Army trucks there are in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We currently purchase 4 × 4 Army trucks from three companies in the United Kingdom. A number of other such companies have the capability to bid for any future orders.

Royal Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many crew, and at what cost, are permanently attached to the royal flight.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two hundred personnel are permanently attached to the Queen's Flight, of which 21 officers crew the aircraft. The flight's personnel costs amounted to £3.776 million in financial year 1991-92.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to seek the establishment of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty before the expiry of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

We have always accepted the long-term goal of a comprehensive test ban to be achieved on a step-by-step basis. The case for extension of the non-proliferation treaty stands irrespective of the state of progress towards a comprehensive test ban.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Leptospira Hardjo

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take to eradicate leptospira hardjo infection from the national dairy herd; and what action is being taken to warn dairy farmers and the public about the dangers of this disease.

Mr. Soames: Leptospira hardjo is not a notifiable disease and there are no plans to introduce eradication measures. Vaccination and treatment are effective in protecting herds. The disease represents a potential hazard to those in direct contact with cattle, but is not a risk to the general public. In discussion with veterinary organisations, the Department has produced an advisory document, agreed with the Health and Safety Executive, which contains advice on avoidance and dealing with the disease and which is being published and circulated by the British Cattle Veterinary Association.

High Tides

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department is taking in respect of the high tide levels predicted for March this year.

Mr. Gummer: I am aware that unusually high tides are predicted around some parts of the coast on 10–11 March as a result of a combination of factors, including the closeness of the moon's approach to the earth and the approaching equinox. In itself, this does not pose a flood risk since coastal defences are designed to provide a margin over highest astronomical tide levels. However, much will depend on weather conditions at the time. The Meteorological Office's storm tide warning service, which is funded by this Department, will continue to monitor the situation closely and pass any necessary warnings to the National Rivers Authority. In addition, officials in the Department have written to local flood emergency contacts drawing their attention to the possibility of high tides in early March so as to enable the local services involved to be ready to respond to any flood warnings received.

EMPLOYMENT

Check-off Deductions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate the number of consents that would be required under the proposed requirement that employers seek renewed consent to check-off deductions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Green Paper "Industrial relations in the 1990s", published in July 1991, quoted a 1989 survey which suggested that some 7 million employees are currently covered by check-off arrangements. Under provisions contained in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill every employee who wishes to pay union subscriptions through check-off will need to give written consent before deductions are made, and to renew that consent every three years. Where employees are covered by check-off arrangements when these provisions come into effect, employers will have one year during which to seek their written consent that they wish to continue to pay their subscriptions in this way.

Strikes

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost due to strikes in the north-west of England in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is provisionally estimated that in the twelve months to November 1992, the latest period for which data are available, 33,000 working days were lost in the north-west of England. Working days lost in the previous 10 calendar years are given in the following table:

Working days lost in strikes in the North West region

Calendar year	(thousands)
1982	989
1983	765
1984	1,381
1985	403
1986	390
1987	374
1988	459
1989	730
1990	722
1991	245

Wages

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms in the east midlands have been found to be paying below minimum rates set by wages councils in each of the last 10 years; and what is the amount of money calculated to be owed to employees in each of these years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Following the merger of the east and west midlands in 1986 to form the midlands division of the wages inspectorate, separate records for the east midlands were no longer kept. The available information is provided in the tables.

Midlands (east)—Wages inspectorate 1982-1985

Year	Number of establishments underpaying	Amount of arrears assessed £
1982	532	160,400
1983	573	167,449

1987	525	199,584
1988	747	190,698
1989	822	160,827
1990	749	197,916
1991	835	179,478

Prince's Trust

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what support the Government are currently giving to the Prince's Trust in its work to help the unemployed.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The work of the Prince's Trust assists both employed and unemployed young people. It is therefore not possible to identify support specifically for the unemployed.

In the current year, the Home Office and DHSS (Northern Ireland) contributed £67,780 to the Prince's Trust volunteers. The Department of Employment contributed £4·375 million to the associated Prince's Youth Business Trust. Further support from public funds has been provided locally through training and enterprise councils.

SCOTLAND

Children's Hospice

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the establishment of a children's hospice in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The statement which my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Local Government made on 2 December 1992 indicated that we accepted there was sufficient evidence of demand to support the establishment of a children's hospice in Scotland. We also believe that, having taken the initiative, the voluntary sector, as is the case with adult hospices, is best placed to develop such a project. While we remain convinced of the advantages of a combined effort by all those interested in taking this matter forward, we also believe that such an effort will be enhanced if there is a clear national focus for the activity. We have therefore decided to support the Children's Hospice Association Scotland (CHAS) in its proposal to provide a children's hospice suitably located to meet the demand from all parts of Scotland. I strongly urge all those with an interest in this development to add their efforts to those of CHAS. The Government are showing their support of CHAS in a tangible way by awarding them a grant under section 16B of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 as a contribution towards their core administrative costs.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Visa Appeals

Mr. Maddox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many ministers of religion have appealed against refusal to grant a visa to enter the United Kingdom in each year since 1987; and how many such appeals were (a) upheld and (b) refused.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The independent appellate authority does not keep a separate record of the occupation or professional qualifications of individual appellants, and therefore the information requested is not available.

Legal Aid

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will publish the external advice given to the Lord Chancellor on his proposed changes in legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have received a number of representations since I announced these proposals. The extent to which these are published is a matter for the organisations and individuals concerned.

Judges, etc (Numbers)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the total number of (a) Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, (b) Lords Justices of Appeal, (c) heads of division, (d) High Court judges, (e) circuit judges, (f) recorders, (g) assistant recorders, (h) stipendiary magistrates and (i) full time chairmen; what is the average age of each category; and how many are (i) men, (ii) women, (iii) barristers, (iv) solicitors, (v) black or Asian (vi) ex-independent school and (vii) ex-Oxford or Cambridge, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The available information (as at 1 January 1993) is set out in the table. The figures for black or Asian office holders are believed to be correct, but the formal recording of the ethnic background of applicants for judicial office began only on 1 October 1991, so such information may be incomplete. Aggregated information relating to the school and university background of judges is not readily available. However, the results of a recent special exercise in relation to the university background of the more senior judges are included in the table.

Magistrates Courts (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the annual cost of magistrates courts in Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total cost of magistrates' courts in Wales for 1991-92, the latest date for which information is available, was £16,102,630. This comprises both central and local government provision, and both revenue and capital expenditure.

Legal Aid

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received concerning his new policies on legal aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I have received a number of such representations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of "Tourism in the United Kingdom: Realising the Potential" as it applies to his Department's responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Those issues in "Tourism in the United Kingdom" which are the responsibility of my Department are being taken forward in collaboration with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. The Tourism (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 which came into operation on 1 April 1992 provides enhanced powers for the board and places it in the pivotal role to promote, market and develop Northen Ireland as a tourist destination.

A corporate plan for 1992 to 1995 published by the board develops in detail the guidelines outlined in the 1989-90 strategic review of tourism in Northern Ireland.

The statutory public consultative mechanism for tourism is in operation and the principles of the citizens charter are applied to the board's activities. The board will publish in the spring a report on "sustainable tourism" and open public consultation on the subject of tourism and the environment.

A new selective financial assistance scheme has been introduced for the tourism industry which can assist both the public and private sector to develop and market areas prioritised in the strategic plan which aims to create jobs in tourism and add to the economy taking into account the effects on the environment.

Roads

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what priority is being given to (a) upgrading the Larne to Belfast road and (b) submitting an application to the European Commission for funding improved transport links between Northern Ireland and Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland recognises the importance of the A8 Larne to Belfast road and a £2·5 million scheme to convert a further section of the road to dual carriageway has been included in the current five-year major road works programme.

Under the Northern Ireland transportation programme 1989-93 the European Commission has made available some £120 million European regional development fund grant to support transport infrastructure projects in Northern Ireland. Of this amount £4·4 million is being allocated in respect of a number of projects at the port of Larne from which there are direct shipping services to Ardrossan, Cairnryan and Stranraer. In addition the port of Belfast has been allocated £0·75 million grant towards the provision of facilities to accommodate the Seacat service to Stranraer. Belfast city and Belfast international airports, which provide services to Scottish airports, have both received grant support under the transportation programme for a range of projects.

It is expected that the present transportation programme will continue under the next round of funding post-1993, and will form an important part of the draft community support framework for Northern Ireland to be submitted to Brussels later this year.

Legislation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a list of all legislation presently applicable in Great Britain which is intended to be applied to Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I keep the legislative needs of Northern Ireland constantly under review in the light of developments in legislation for the rest of the United Kingdom. In the current parliamentary Session planned legislation reflecting those developments includes provision on the subject of access to health records, fire safety, the civil service, social security, environment and safety information, and criminal justice.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many suckler cow premium application forms were processed during each month of 1992; and what was (a) the shortest period and (b) the longest period to elapse between receipt of the application and payment of the claim.

Mr. Hanley: The number of applications processed in 1992 was as follows:

	Number
January	1,602
February	642
March	2,034
April	144
May	119
June	59
July	8
August	11
September	6
October	4
November	3,112
December	7,389

Information regarding the shortest and the longest period to elapse between receipt of the application and payment of the claim is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Decommissioning Scheme

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 896, what checks he will make on whether a fishing vessel applying for decommissioning is owned abroad; if vessels which have been registered overseas at any stop will be eligible for British decommissioning; what steps he intends to take to check where beneficial ownership lies; and if he will make a statement on the application of Community law to payments of decommissioning grants.

Mr. Curry: As I said in my answer of 29 January, the scheme will be confined to fishing vessels registered and licensed in this country. Checks will be made to ensure that this and all other conditions for payment under the scheme are satisfied. The rules of the scheme will be set out in a statutory instrument that the Government will shortly lay before Parliament. These will be in full accordance with Community law.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Of the market tests completed since November 1991, only two have involved the comparison of bids from internal and external service providers. These were:

Headquarters reprographic services;
Headquarters photographic services.

The result of both market tests was the maintenance of the in-house provision.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The following firms of consultants have been used by the Department as part of its market testing programme since November 1991:

Amtec Consulting;
Coopers and Lybrand;
Gould Consultants;
Hoskyns Group;
Leopold Joseph and Sons Ltd.

These private sector consultancies together with self-employed purchasing specialists used by the Department have helped to identify suitable candidates for market testing;

evaluate services currently provided;
provide training in market testing;
support in-house bids;
conduct the competition phase of market testing.

The total cost of these services to date is £80,926.

Beef and Butter

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from persons in the Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency about eligibility for free EC beef and butter; and what response he has made.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has received a petition on behalf of the Bentilee Volunteers, Stoke-on-Trent seeking the inclusion of people in receipt of state pension, long-term invalidity benefit and unemployment benefit as eligible groups for the receipt of food under the EC surplus food scheme. The inclusion of such groups would reduce per capita allocations to 0·21 kg of butter and 0·18 kg of beef per year. To distribute such amounts would be impracticable and would be of little benefit.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will extend the rules for eligibility for persons to whom designated organisations may distribute free butter and beef to include pensioners.

Mr. Curry: Those pensioners in receipt of income support or family credit or disability working allowance or who are homeless and destitute or living in welfare hostels are eligible for free food. To extend the scheme to all pensioners would reduce per capita annual allocations in the United Kingdom to approximately 0·24 kg of butter and 0·20 kg of beef per year. To distribute such amounts would be impracticable and would be of little benefit.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what bio-chemical studies are undertaken of (a) beaches contaminated by oil spillages and (b) beaches adjacent to areas affected by oil spillages.

Mr. Curry: The need for studies following oil spillages is considered on a case by case basis.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on what basis he assesses the toxicity to marine life of dispersants used in the marine environment to disperse oil from oil spillages;

(2) on which species toxicity tests were conducted for the dispersants used to disperse oil from the MV Braer.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 20 January at column 289. Full details of the toxicity testing procedures for oil dispersants are contained in the Fisheries Research Technical Report No. 39 which is available in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Music

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest figure for the annual running cost of each of the service schools of music, broken down into principal categories of expenditure; what is the annual intake of each of the service schools of music; and what is the (a) civilian and (b) service teaching complement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The net cash budget for the Royal Marines School of Music in 1992-93 is £6,693,000, of which £4,598,000 is for pay and allowances. This includes the cost of the 65 personnel of the Royal Marines band located at the school. The 1992 intake of trainees was 35 musicians and six buglers. The staff of the school comprises 47 personnel. Of these, 10 service personnel provide military training, and 23 service and 14 part-time civilian personnel carry out musical training.

The forecast running costs for the Royal Military School of Music in 1992-93 are £1,730,000, which will be offset by estimated receipts of £192,000. Personnel costs account for £1,173,000. The annual intake capacity for initial musical training is 140, including 30 foreign and Commonwealth personnel. The teaching staff comprises six military and 11 civilian full-time instructors and 13 part-time civilian tutors.

The RAF school of music is collocated with headquarters RAF music services and the two units' operating costs are not recorded separately. In the most recent year for which records are available (1991-92) the combined operating costs were £3,947,000. The 1992 intake of trainees was 14 new entrants, plus 19 for advanced training. The teaching complement comprises one officer, four non-commissioned officers and one civilian.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current established strength of each type of band in each of the services; and in each case what are the ranks of the band members, the number of each type of instrument established and the annual running cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The available information which is not necessarily in the same format for each service, is as follows:

Royal Marine Bands

The Royal Marines School of Music, Deal and the RM Bands at CINCFLEET and CINCHAVHOME each has a complement comprising:

The costs include staff costs, LOA, travel and subsistence and other miscellaneous costs, eg. quartering costs.

Leyland DAF

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many DROPS vehicles are still outstanding from the order placed by his Department with Leyland DAF company.

Mr. Aitken: On 5 February 1993, 349 DROPS vehicles were still outstanding from the order placed with Leyland DAF.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of Leyland DAF company being placed in receivership on the British Army.

Mr. Aitken: A preliminary assessment has been made but it is not possible to be definitive until the receiver has determined the company's future.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many 4-tonne trucks are outstanding from the order placed by the British Army with the Leyland DAF company.

Mr. Aitken: On 5 February 1993, 2,080 4-tonne trucks were outstanding from the order placed with Leyland DAF.

Consultants

86. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It is open to individual management areas within the Department to employ consultants as necessary, within the limits of their budgets. Information on these contracts and their value is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Scientists

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to assist the redeployment in civil research and development of scientists losing their jobs because of closure of defence research establishments.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to my hon. Friend.

Letter from J. Chisholm to Mr. Peter Temple-Morris dated 12 February 1993:

In today's written answer the Secretary of State for Defence informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the steps being taken to assist the redeployment in civil research and development of scientists losing their jobs because of closure of defence research establishments.

While it is true that the DRA's rationalisation programme will result in some 2,000 job losses, we have been able so far to draw our plans to take those wholly in the support areas. Our aim is to retain and develop our front line scientific capability.

I hope you will find this information useful.

Military Hospitals

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he plans for the status and activities of the seven military hospitals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker) on 4 February Official Report, column 267.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 37, if he will list the movements and locations of the royal yacht Britannia during the Falklands' conflict; and what press releases or press advice were issued about its role during the conflict.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the period in question, HMY Britannia left her home port of Portsmouth to visit St. Nazaire between 22 and 27 April 1982, and Dover between 7 and 11 June 1982, in support of official royal engagements. It is not possible to provide the rest of the information requested without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when and where his Department first announced that the royal yacht Britannia was no longer considered necessary as a possible hospital ship.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence concluded during late 1992 that there was no longer a requirement for Britannia to fulfil the war role of a hospital ship. We have confirmed this decision in response to specific inquiries, the first instance being by my Department's press office on 20 January 1993.

Royal Flights

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many nights in 1992 crew members of royal flights were found accommodation overseas; what was the cost; and what were the locations involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Whenever practical, aircraft of the Queen's Flight which have carried out tasks to overseas destinations recover to the United Kingdom, thus enabling them to undertake other tasks. When this is not practical, crew members are accommodated in hotels in accordance with the standard regulations which apply to all air transport crews. In 1992, 266 nights were spent away from RAF Benson as a result of flights in the United Kingdom or overseas. The estimate for travel and subsistence for financial year 1992-93 is some £264,000 which covers nights spent away in both the United Kingdom and overseas. Details of individual occurrences could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Winnick: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what policies are pursued to ensure that people from the ethnic minorities are recruited as Officers of the House.

Mr. Beith: In recruiting all staff to the House of Commons service, it is the Commission's policy that all eligible persons shall have equal opportunities for employment and advancement on the basis of their ability, qualifications and fitness for the work and that there shall be no discrimination on any other grounds. The Commission has appointed an equal opportunities officer whose responsibility it is to monitor the Commission's policy of equal opportunity and to provide relevant advice to management and staff of the House.

Members of selection boards are provided with written guidance as to the conduct of interviews. This makes it clear that there must be no discrimination on grounds of colour, race, ethnic or national origins, sex or marital status.

The Commission monitors its policy on racial equality by asking candidates to complete a questionnaire indicating their ethnic origin. This is voluntary and it is explained in the accompanying literature that the ethnic information is confidential to the equal opportunities officer and is not available to those involved in the selection process.

EDUCATION

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if schools are permitted to charge the Office for Standards in Education for the time and materials used in providing the essential information and statistics which independent inspectors need to make their inspections.

Mr. Forth: No. The information which registered inspectors will need to carry out an inspection will be readily available in all schools.

Open University

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many people have been enrolled in Open university courses for each year since 1979;

(2) how many Open university degrees have been awarded in each year since 1979.

Mr. Boswell: In 1979-80 there were 70,000 enrolments and 5,800 degrees awarded. Details of Open university enrolment and degrees awarded for later years up to 1990-91 are contained in statistical bulletin 8/92, copies of which are available in the Library.

Books and Magazines (VAT)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effect of a standard rate of VAT on books and magazines on the reading patterns of primary and secondary school children.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment. Books and magazines are zero rated for VAT.

Reading

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to encourage reading among young people.

Mr. Forth: This is already an essential element of our policy. The current review of national curriculum English, on which the National Curriculum Council is expected to report soon, has been addressing the need to ensure that pupils are encouraged to develop the habit of reading widely, and are introduced to the richness of great literature.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of students with special educational needs who gained entry to university and polytechnics for each year since 1982.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is (a) the number and (b) the proportion of children with statements of special educational needs in (i) primary schools, (ii) middle schools, (iii) secondary schools and (iv) special schools in each local education authority area.

Mr. Forth: Information about pupils with statements of special educational needs in maintained middle, secondary and special schools in each local education authority in England in January 1992 is shown in the table. The numbers of pupils with statements in maintained primary schools in 1992 are not available. In January 1991, the latest year for which reliable figures are available, there were over 30,000 pupils with statements in maintained primary schools.

National Library for the Handicapped Child

105. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to grant governmental funding to the national library for the handicapped child.

Mr. Forth: We have no plans to fund the national library for the handicapped child.

Higher Education Institutions

156. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 744, if he will conduct a survey of higher education institutions on the advantages of a single organisation fowarding tuition fees to them.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no plans to undertake such a survey.

157. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 744, if he will bring forward proposals that local authorities forwarding tuition fees to higher education institutions after the specified date should add a payment for interest.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

158. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on representations he has received from and on behalf of higher education institutions in respect of late payment of the tuition fees from his Department via local authorities.

Mr. Boswell: Representations have recently been received from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and from two individual institutions.

Professors of General Practice

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many professors of general practice there are in each medical school in England.

Mr. Boswell: I have been asked to reply.
This information is not collected centrally.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid Loans

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the levels of reduction in debt service achieved by countries that have benefited from the relief of old aid loans granted by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1979 we have written off over £450 million, through retrospective terms adjustment, of aid loans to the poorest countries. In the period 1979-91 this, together with the rescheduling of other aid loans, translated into a £410 million reduction in debt service for the countries concerned.

We recently announced that we would also write off £56 million of aid loans to Zambia from 1 April 1993, provided their economic reform programme stays on track. In addition, we agreed to provide India with local cost aid for projects to offset repayments of past aid loans amounting to £560 million. Thus, the Government have, overall, relieved the burden of aid loans to developing countries by about £1 billion. Twenty-four countries have benefited from these measures.

Forests

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific measures were undertaken to ensure that aid is targeted to the poorest people in areas where the forests are facing the severest threats.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain's aid in all sectors is targeted predominantly to the poorest countries and our forestry programmes are focused on countries, and parts of countries, where forestry and deforestation are important issues such as in Nepal, India, Sri Lanka, Indonesia, Kenya, Ghana and Malawi. Some relatively better off countries such as Brazil and Malaysia also receive our forestry aid because of the particular problems they face in this sector.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those logging activities recognised by the Overseas Development Administration as promoting sustainable forest use for the benefit of traditional and other forest dwellers.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The logging activities most likely to promote sustainable forest use for the benefit of forest dwellers are those in which they participate directly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Work on market testing is combined with other duties and it is not possible to give a figure for the number of people assigned to the market testing programme. We broadly estimate that the cost of the programme to date is £155,000. This includes the cost of support for the in-house teams and other consultancy work. It does not include the cost of the in-house teams themselves.

Tax Welfare

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review tax welfare alongside the review of spending Departments.

Mr. Dorrell: The tax system is reviewed each year in the run-up to the Budget.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of employees in his Department is registered disabled.

Sir John Cope: On 1 January 1993, the latest date for which this information is available, 0·9 per cent. of Treasury staff were registered disabled. The Department employs a number of people with disabilities who have chosen not to register as disabled.

Departmental Expenditure

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what common procedures are being used by Government departments in relation to (a) the 1993 public expenditure survey, (b) plans for reductions in years beyond 1993-94 and (c) plans for 1996-97; what figure is being used to calculate reductions in 1996-97 from the 1995-96 baseline; and what information he has on the effect on real terms of reductions of (i) 2½ per cent. and (ii) 5 per cent. below the 1993-94 baseline for each Department.

Mr. Portillo: Procedures for the 1993 public expenditure survey are currently under discussion. No decisions have been taken.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the publishing industry about the possible imposition of VAT on reading matter.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend has received many representations on Budget-related matters. As is usual, I cannot anticipate his Budget statement.

Monarch (Taxation)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the right hon. Member for Swansea, West can expect a reply to his letter of 12 January, concerning taxation of the monarch.

Mr. Lamont: I shall be replying to the right hon. Member's letter of 12 January very shortly.

Output Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average output per head for each county in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 February 1993]: The latest available information, relating to gross domestic product by county for 1987 and 1989, was published in the December 1991 issue of "Economic Trends". Estimates for Scottish regions have recently been revised, reflecting improved methodology, and these are as follows.

Gross domestic product at factor cost

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service has used consultants PE International and Price Waterhouse in its market testing programme at a cost of £12,800. The legal secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's Department and the Serious Fraud Office have not used any firm of consultants.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Refugee Children

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what immigration status is granted to unaccompanied children from the former Yugoslavia; and what assessment he has made of the effect of their families of their immigration status.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Applications are considered individually and decisions take account of all relevant circumstances.

Devon and Cornwall

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were employed by the Devon and Cornwall police force in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is set out in the table:

Devon and Cornwall constabulary
Strength as at 31 December

Year	Strength
1979	2,639
1980	2,721
1981	2,694

[1]November.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notifiable criminal offences took place in Devon and Cornwall in each year since 1979; and if he will publish separate figures for (a) violence against the person, (b) sexual offences, (c) robbery, (d) burglary, (e) theft and handling of stolen goods, (f) fraud and forgery (g) criminal damage and (h) other offences.

Mr. Jack: Statistics for 1979 are published in Table 32 of the 1979 volume of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". Statistics for 1980 are published in table 3.1 of the "Criminal Statistics, Supplementary Volume 3". Figures for 1981-90 are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—table 2.4 in the 1983 volume and table 2.5 in the remaining volumes—copies of all these publications are available in the Library. Information for 1991 is published in the table. Figures for 1992 are not year available.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in Devon and Cornwall
Number of offences

	1991
Total	108,208
Violence against the person	3,742
Sexual offences	806
Robbery	295
Burglary	25,708
Theft and handling of stolen goods	57,965
Fraud and forgery	4,175
Criminal damage	14,975
Other offences	542

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has introduced to reduce crime in the south-west.

Mr. Jack: The Devon and Cornwall constabulary has resources to maintain a strong and effective police service. At the end of November 1992 the force strength was 2,909 police officers and 1,400 civilians. This represents an increase in strength of 242 police officers and 292 civilians since 1979. We have also encouraged the development of effective crime prevention programmes. Nine crime prevention panels are in operation in the area and there are 3,378 neighbourhood watch schemes covering over 90,000 households. Other watch schemes have been introduced with the participation of the local community including boat watch, farm watch, community and business watch. The police have also reported a 3 per cent. decrease in the theft of vehicles of 1992 which is likely to be partly attributable to national and local car crime prevention campaigns. In addition an alcohol byelaw, which prohibits the consumption of alcohol in certain public places in an effort to reduce disorder and anti-social behaviour, was confirmed in Restormel in 1991 following Home Office approval.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were arrested by the Metropolitan police in (a) the last six months of 1991 and (b) the last six months of 1992; and how many arrested in each period were subsequently (i) charged, (ii) cautioned and (iii) had no action taken against them.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Faithfull

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his consideration of an application to the Court of Appeal to review the conviction of Mr. Peter Faithfull, HMP Sudbury.

Mr. Jack: Following a number of representations on Mr. Faithfull's behalf, we are making enquiries into his case. I can not at present say when my right hon. and learned Friend will be in a position to decide whether a reference to the Court of Appeal would be justified.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received a report from the Viscount Colville of Culross QC on the operation in 1992 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received such a report from Viscount Colville and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held in police cells as a remand prisoner in England and Wales as of 1 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 1 February there were 159 male prisoners in police cells in England and Wales of whom 132 were unconvicted. There were no women in police cells. The most up to date information, however, is for 11 February when there were 53 male prisoners in police cells, of whom 39 were unconvicted.

Brain Dead Patients

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will bring forward legislation to amend the law concerning brain dead persons on life support systems.

Mr. Jack: There are no plans to amend the law in this area.

Primates (Experiments)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department further to his answer to the right hon. Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) of 2 December 1992, Official Report) column 215, about Shamrock Farms, what changes he proposes in terms of both numbers of staff and operational procedures in the Home Office inspectorate to prevent any repetition.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 15 December 1992, Official Report, col. 101. There are no plans to alter the size of the inspectorate or its operating procedures.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department many motorists were prosecuted for illegally driving in a bus lane in the Greater London area in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not separately identified in the statistics collected centrally.

Market Testing Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since November 1991, the Home Office has awarded contracts to the value of £239,000 for consultancies as part of the market testing programme.

The following companies have been used by candidate areas to advise them on how best to respond to the market testing initiative, viz.

Price Waterhouse
Shreeveport
Corporate Renewal Associates
PA Consulting Group
Worthy Associates

Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte were also employed to assist the Department in developing its market testing programme.

Correspondence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his Department's target figures for days taken to reply to correspondence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: From 1 October 1992, the targets for answering ministerial correspondence are 35 calendar days (equivalent to 25 working days) for immigration and nationality department and prison service cases; and 21 calendar days (equivalent to 15 working days) for correspondence on all other subjects.

Prisoner Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men and how many women were sent to prison (a) on remand and (b) on sentence in each month of 1992 and in January 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The available information is given in the table. Data for September 1992 to January 1993 are not yet available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) when he will issue guidance to Departments on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 to market testing;

(2) what proposals he has to issue guidance to the private sector, or make available on request to the private sector, the General Guidance: Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 and a document regarding the detailed implications if the regulations apply; and if he will make a statement:

(3) what guidance he proposes on whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 will apply subsequent to market testing, where a contractor employs most of the former staff but not the pre-existing premises or equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Attorney-General made a full statement on 21 January to the Standing Committee on the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill which set out clearly the position on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations.

I am considering what further guidance might be helpful.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for the funding of legal advice for tenderers for departmental service provision contracting out under the market-testing procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Potential tenderers must make their own arrangements for seeking and paying for any necessary legal advice. They can reflect these and all other relevant costs in their bid proposals.

Milking and Mastitis Centre, Berkshire

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the names of the companies that have given grants to the milking and mastitis centre in Compton, Berkshire.

Mr. Waldegrave: Between 1985 and 1992 the milking and mastitis centre was in receipt of funds from the Milk Marketing Board. The centre has recently entered into a contract with a commercial company, under which the company is funding work to the value of some £140,000 over a period of three years. It is one of the terms of the contract that the identity of the company should be treated as commercial-in-confidence information.

Research Funding

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the total cost of the alpha-rated research projects which were refused by each research council in the financial year 1991-92; and how much money was spent by each research council on alpha-rated projects in that financial year;

(2) what proportion of research projects in fundamental science and technology from university departments graded alpha has been rejected in each year since 1981;

(3) what is the proportion of fundamental science and technology projects graded alpha and rejected which involved expenditure of less than £250,000.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the financial year 1991-92, the Agriculture and Food Research Council (AFRC), the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) and the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC) refused funding for alpha-rated research projects worth £13 million, £22·8 million and £10·2 million respectively, and spent £21·7 million, £7·8 million, and £9 million on alpha-rated projects, respectively.

In the academic year 1991-92, the Medical Research Council (MRC), and the Science and Engineering Research Council (SERC) refused funding for alpha-rated research projects worth £45 million and £151·8 million respectively, and spent £26 million and £105·6 million on alpha-rated projects, respectively. Figures for the financial year, for these research councils are not available.

The proportion of alpha-rated research projects rejected by each research council is shown in the table:

Council	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
AFRC	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	53	27	16	22	45	27
ESRC	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	22	46	40	56	56
MRC[1]	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	17	36	19	45	53	51	57
NERC	49	25	61	48	63	47	48	13	37	39	43
SERC	25	22	22	19	21	40	35	38	46	59	52

[1] Figures for the MRC are for Project Grants only.

Figures which show the proportion of rejected alpha-rated research projects which involved expenditure of less than £250,000 in 1991-92 are as follows: 100 per cent. of the AFRC's, ESRC's, MRC's and NERC's awards in 1991-92 were less than £250,000. 87 per cent. of rejected alpha-rated grant applications to SERC involved expenditure of less than £250,000.

WALES

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department's efficiency unit is responsible for managing its market testing programme and it has the equivalent of approximately six full-time staff engaged on the work. The estimated cost to date is £233,000.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A market test of building maintenance services has been carried out covering building project services and building inspections. The contract was awarded to Kirkham, Williams and Lewis.

Nuclear Power Plants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the environmental safety of the operation of nuclear power plants in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The two nuclear power stations in Wales at Trawsfynydd and Wylfa are subject to strict regulatory controls, as part of which an extensive environmental monitoring programme is undertaken. The results of this monitoring are regularly published by the Government and have consistently shown that the levels of radioactivity in the vicinity of the two stations meet international and national guidelines.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his estimate of the maximum and minimum capital allocation that fund-holding general practitioners in Wales will receive for hospital referrals in 1993-94;

(2) what is the maximum and minimum for capital allocation that fund-holding general practitioner practices in Wales have had for hospital referrals in 1992-93.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: GP fund holders do not receive any capital allocations. A fund is provided to enable them to purchase the hospital services included in the fund-holding scheme. The minimum and maximum allocations to fund holders for these services in 1992-93 were £145,000 and £1,328,000 respectively. Individual allocations depend on practice list size—which will reflect the number of GPs in the practice—and on the historic level of use of hospital services. Allocations for 1993-94 have not yet been determined.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated to each local authority area in Wales for care and repair housing schemes during each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of his Department's planning policy guidance note on the development of wind energy and other renewable resources, published on 3 February have been printed; and to whom the guidance note has been distributed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I understand that 4,500 copies of the joint Department of the Environment/Welsh Office planning policy guidance note on renewable energy have been printed by HMSO. Copies have been distributed to local authorities in England and Wales and for use by Government Departments, and others are available for sale from Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the (a) number and (b) percentage, in terms of the total population of the valleys programme area, of economically inactive males for the valleys programme area for 1991;

(2) what was the percentage, in terms of the total male population aged over 16 years, of economically inactive males in the valleys programme area, at the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: Statistics from the 1991 census are currently being prepared for the valleys programme area and I will write to the hon. Gentleman to give a full answer to the question shortly. Until then I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) on 13 January at columns 750-51, which gives the percentage of economically inactive males aged 16 to 64 for districts included in the valleys programme area.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds will be made available to the Cardiff Bay development corporation in the next financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: During 1993-94 my Department will make available to Cardiff Bay development corporation grant in aid of £44·9 million.

Fire Service

193. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the current capability of the fire service in Wales to cope with the demands made upon it; and what representations he has had from the Fire Brigades Union on the resourcing of the service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 10 February 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

On the basis of reports of inspections during 1992 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services, I am broadly satisfied that fire authorities in Wales are in this financial year complying with the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover and with the statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947. Her Majesty's inspectorate has, where appropriate, drawn the authorities' attention to some minor areas where they are failing to comply with these standards and duties. I have received no representations from the Fire Brigades Union specifically about the resourcing of the fire service in Wales, but my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State has discussed some resource issues relating to the fire service more generally with representatives of the Fire Brigades Union last November.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if, following the change in the value of the pound sterling, he will reassess the case for central funding of the promotion of tourism in England.

Mr. Key: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the importance of sports-related tourism.

Mr. Key: The relationship between sports and tourism is strong and mutually beneficial. The Sports Council estimates that some 11 per cent. of expenditure by domestic and overseas tourists is sport-related.

My Department provides grant in aid to the Sports Council to promote sport and leisure activities in Britain, and this includes activities undertaken by tourists.

We have already committed up to £75 million towards an arena, a velodrome and for the preparation of the site for the Olympic stadium. If Manchester is successful, then the benefits to British tourism, particularly in the north-west, will be considerable.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Eastbourne, (Mr. Waterson) of 25 January, Official Report, column 694, what assessment his Department has made of the levels of investment in tourism-related projects since the decision to suspend grants made under section 4 of the Tourism Development Act 1969; and what the figure was in 1989.

Mr. Key: The English tourist board (ETB) publishes a biannual survey of investment in tourism-related projects. According to ETB figures, projects with a total value of £2,921 million (excluding those with a value of less than £500,000) were under construction in England between January and June 1989. The corresponding figure for the six months from January to June 1992 was £1,062 million.

This level of investment is many times higher than the total value of projects assisted by the section 4 scheme in England. In the 1988-89 financial year, expenditure on section 4 grants amounted to £13·2 million and total investment in projects assisted by these grants was just over £123 million.

EMPLOYMENT

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the firms of consultants used by her Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive, the employment Department headquarters and the Employment service have used the following consultants to advise on its market testing programme, at a total cost of £144,885 (including VAT and expenses):

Coopers and Lybrand
Ernst and Young
John Pearce
KPMG
PA Consulting

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all the market tests that have taken place in her Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Four tests have been completed. One is under negotiation and therefore details are confidential. Of the remainder, both the Employment Department headquarters and the employment service travel services contracts were awarded to Wagons Lit. In-house provision was maintained for the employment service's information technology mainframe service.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff in her Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost her Department since November 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Full information on the costs and staffing involved in the market testing programme across the Employment Department group are not held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member when the information can be collated.

Wages Councils

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give estimates for the number of black workers likely to be adversely affected by the abolition of the wages councils.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 8 February 1993, Official Report, column 503.

Youth Training

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training places are currently available in the Bristol travel-to-work area.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from Avon training and enterprise council that as at 29 January 1993 there was a total of 258 YT places available in the county of Avon. Separate records are not maintained for individual travel-to-work areas.

Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which elements of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill were not discussed in advance with the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Equal Opportunities Commission was consulted about the most significant provisions in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill which concern equality of opportunity and in which it has a legitimate interest. The commission was not consulted about the provisions affecting trade unions or other broader industrial relations issues.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) improvement notices, (b) prohibition notices and (c) prosecutions have been issued or commenced by the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division (i) from 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992 and (ii) since 1 April 1992; and what were the results and penalties in each case of a completed prosecution.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

	1 April 19991 to 31 March 1992	Since 1 April 1992
Number of improvement notices served	nil	8
Number of prohibition notices served	2	3

Information on completed prosecutions is as follows:

(i) Between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1992, a total of three companies were convicted and fines of £850, £20,000 and £5,000, respectively, were imposed.

(ii) Since 1 April 1992, a total of six companies have been convicted. Fines of £100,000, £1,000 £30,000, £1,000, £1,000 and £5,000, respectively, were imposed. Charges brought against two compamnies were not proved.

Economically Inactive Males

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the (a) number and (b) percentage, in terms of the total population, of economically inactive males in the United Kingdom, at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: The most recent results from the labour force survey for the whole of the United Kingdom are for spring (March to May) 1992. At that time there were a total of 5,733,000 economically inactive males representing 26·3 per cent. of the total male population aged 16 and over.

HEALTH

NHS Employees

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent (a) nursing, (b) midwifery, (c) management and (d) clerical staff were employed by the national health service in each Birmingham health authority area and the West Midlands regional health authority area in each year since 1983.

Mr. Sackville: The figures are shown in the table. Many of the functions undertaken by senior nursing and senior professional staff are now reflected in the national health service management figures. This means that year-on-year comparisons are invalid. Management still accounts for less than 1·8 per cent. of the NHS work force and the ratio of clinical to support staff has never been higher.

The above tables catergorise staff by the terms and conditions on which they are paid. Staff with managerial reponsibilities were, until a discrete NHS management function was introduced in a series of phased implementations for 1984, paid on terms according to their professional function (eg. administration, nursing etc).

Staffordshire Health Authorities

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent staff were employed by the national health service as (a) managerial staff, (b) administrative and clerical staff and (c) nursing and midwifery staff in (i) the South-East Staffordshire health authority area and (ii) the Mid-Staffordshire health authority in each year since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures are shown in the table.

3. Source of information: Non-Medical Manpower Census HAP(STATS)B.
4. The fall in the number of nursing and midwifery staff in South-East Staffordshire is because of the transfer of services for elderly mentally ill patients from St. Matthews's hospital to other health authorities and to community homes.

Hospital Costs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what returns and at what intervals are made to her by hospitals on the average costs of procedures; and in what form those returns are made available to Parliament.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not routinely collect information on the costs of particular operations or procedures. However, since 1987-88 the Department has collected annual figures on average treatment costs by specialty by district. The health service indicators have included average treatment costs for patients using a hospital bed for most specialties. A copy of the indicators is available in the Library. For 1991-92 the specialty costs return was developed to collect total average costs by specialty on a provider unit basis. When the 1991-92 indicators are published later this year average specialty costs will therefore be at hospital rather than district level.

Health Care Provision

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent her Department collects and analyses statistics relating to hospital and health care provision within the private sector as well as national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Centrally collected information about the private sector is via Department of Health forms KO36, KO37 and KO71.

KO36 provides information about beds and other facilities in private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984. As well as recording the number of institutions, there is a count of available beds, hospitals with operating theatres, consulting rooms and various clinical departments. The return also records the numbers of nursing staff by their level of qualification.

KO37 collects aggregate activity for all private mental nursing homes registered by a health authority under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984. The return records data on patients detained under the provision of the Mental Health Act 1983. Latest data are published in a Statistical Bulletin "In-Patients Formally Detained in Hospital Under the Mental Health Act 1983 and Other Legislation, England 1984—1989-90" Bulletin 2(7)92, ISBN 1 85839 007 9.

KO71 collects aggregate data on new episodes of drug misuse and the type of drug used. The return collects data from the national health service, voluntary, local authority and private services. This is a new return and it is proposed to publish data later this year.

Nurse Prescribing

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the financial implications of deferring the implementation of nurse prescribing; what information she has on the long-term savings in health care costs which would flow from enabling certain nurses to write prescriptions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Based on the Touche Ross cost-benefit analysis commissioned by the Department, we estimate that postponing the implementation of nurse prescribing will avoid start-up costs of £11 million and annual costs, once all nurse precribers are trained, of £15 million at 1991-92 prices.

The time savings for each prescribing nurse and general practitioner consequential on the implementation of nurse prescribing are unlikely to be translated into reduced expenditure because the relatively small amounts of time saved per week are likely to be used up in a wide range of other activities. The main benefit of nurse prescribing is a speedier and better service for patients, the effects of which cannot be translated into monetary terms. As my hon. Friend knows, we are committed to implementing nurse prescribing as soon as resources permit.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is currently being undertaken by her Department to ensure that local authorities fulfil obligations outlined in section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Yeo: We expect local authorities to be aware of their statutory duties under section 2(1) of the 1970 Act to provide a range of services for disabled people, where they accept that there is need. Each case is assessed on its own merits by the local authority. The Department receives regular returns on certain services provided by local authorities under the Act, as well as information from other sources including the social services inspectorate. We follow up specific cases referred to the Department, where it is alleged that a local authority is in breach of its statutory duties.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she collects to identify human health risks arising out of oil spillage incidents; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health keeps under continual review the relevant scientific literature on chemicals which are likely to be harmful to human health. The Department is also able to seek advice from its expert advisory committees. Decisions on any necessary monitoring of food and the environment following an oil spillage incident are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who would consult the Health Departments on health effects.

Refugee Children

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources have been targeted towards unaccompanied children who are refugees from former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave to him today.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when guidance under the Children Act 1989 on refugee and asylum-seeking children will be published.

Mr. Yeo: Guidance and training material for social services staff working with unaccompanied refugee and asylum-seeking children is expected to be published in the spring.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she issues on the identification of who has parental responsibility for unaccompanied children who enter the United Kingdom as refugees.

Mr. Yeo: No specific guidance has been issued on parental responsibility for unaccompanied refugee and asylum-seeking children. Local authorities have responsibilities under the provisions of the Children Act 1989 in relation to unaccompanied refugee and asylum-seeking children.

In-vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the availability of in-vitro fertilisation services within the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 4 December 1992 at columns 433-34.

Refugees

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to local authorities and voluntary organisations in order to deal with the co-ordination of health care for refugees from the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Yeo: For the 1,000 displaced persons and their dependants whom the Government have agreed to accept from the former Yugoslavia, three reception centres have been opened. The staff of these centres, which are run by voluntary organisations, will liaise with the statutory authorities as necessary to ensure that health or personal social services needs are met. Departmental officials have written to both local authorities and health authorities in the reception centre areas to alert them to the expected arrivals.

Child Care

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the voluntary child day care organisations which have closed due to the introduction of regulations regarding adequate facilities under the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Referral Decisions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 470, if she will now issue guidelines to ensure that community health councils are notified about extra-contractual referral decisions, affecting the population in their areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have already asked regional health authorities to ensure that community health councils have access to information about purchasers' contracts with providers and their purchasing plans which will include extra-contractual referral patterns. However, as each ECR decision is based on individual clinical factors, it would not be appropriate to notify community health councils of these decisions.

North West Thames Health Authority

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the contract of employment for the current chairman of the North West Thames health authority expires.

Dr. Mawhinney: The date is 31 July 1994.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions Ministers from her Department and senior civil servants have had with the chairman and the chief executive of the North West Thames health authority; and what was the outcome of these discussions.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ministers and senior officials frequently meet the chairman and chief executives of regional health authorities to discuss a wide range of topics and issues.

Tomlinson Report

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will place copies of the Capita and Touche Ross studies commissioned by her Department in connection with the Tomlinson report in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Capita/Touche Ross study is one of three commissioned from management consultants as part of a preliminary review of options for reconfiguring acute services in inner London. Some of the information supplied by purchasers and providers for the studies was on an in-confidence basis and the full reports are not intended for publication. I will, however, arrange for executive summaries to be placed in the Library in due course.

General Practitioners

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the allocations to non-GP fund-holding practices in each region for 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not held centrally. However, the aggregate indicative prescribing amounts allocated to non-fund-holding general practitioners at regional and family health services authorities level for 1992-93 are shown in the table.

Death Certificates

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued for the completion of death certificates in cases where the actual cause of death is as a result of a long illness, in order to identify the illness contributing to, and indirectly the cause of, death.

Mr. Sackville: Medical certificates of cause of death are required to be completed by a registered medical practitioner. The form of the certificate is prescribed and is in the internationally agreed format which is designed to identify an underlying cause for all recorded deaths, except where the deceased is aged under 28 days. In addition, the certifier may record other significant conditions contributing to the death but which are not related to the disease or condition causing it.

Guidelines relating to their completion accompany the death certificates and are supplied to registered medical practitioners. Specimen copies have been placed in the Library and are available to interested parties on request.

Capitation Targets

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 469-70, if she will publish such information as she has on capitation targets.

Mr. Sackville: No. As I explained in my earlier reply, the information at present held centrally contains inconsistencies and would be misleading as a source of comparisons between districts of different health regions. Consistent and comparable information will be placed in the Library as soon as it is available.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those self-governing trusts that have filed their current accounts, indicating what percentage of the total this represents.

Dr. Mawhinney: All 57 first-wave national health service trusts have submitted the necessary financial accounts information for 1991-92 to the Department.

Creutzfeld Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the present number of known and suspected cases of Creutzfeldt Jakob disease and the geographic location of these cases; and what comparable data she has for the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Information showing the total number of definite and probable cases of Creutzfeldt Jakob disease is produced on a yearly basis by Dr. R. G. Will, consultant neurologist at the national CJD surveillance unit, Edinburgh. Data for 1992 will be available later this year.

Between 1987 and 1990 there were a total of 104 definite cases of CJD. The available data on deaths in the calendar year 1991 show that 28 people have been confirmed as CJD with a further four probable cases. The available information is shown in the table.

Definite and probable cases of CJD 1987-1991

Year and status		Number
1987	Definite	22
1988	Definite	22
1989	Definite	28
1990	Definite	32
1991	Definite	28
	Probable	4

Detailed information on geographical location of definite and probable cases is contained in the last report from Dr. Will. Copies have been placed in the Library.

This report confirms that there has been no change in the incidence, geographical distribution or occupational distribution of CJD. It will, however, be necessary to continue the study into the incidence of CJD for a decade or more to detect any change in the pattern of the disease.

Hospitals (Alcohol Sales)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of hospitals have bars on hospital premises selling alcohol.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available centrally.

Down's Syndrome

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies her Department has conducted into the use of, and efficacy of the Bart's test for pregnant women for Down's syndrome.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 5 February 1993]: Recently published articles and published studies on maternal serum screening, including the Bart's triple test, are listed as follows. Copies are available in the Library. These were funded from various sources.

The implications of these new tests are complex and are being addressed at the moment by two separate working parties set up by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and regional directors of public health.

Maternal serum screening for Down's Syndrome in early pregnancy—Wald N. J, Cuckle H. S, Dansem J. W. et al, British Medical Journal 1988, pp 883-7.

Antenatal maternal serum screening for Down's Syndrome: results of a demonstration project—Wald, Kennard, Densem et al, British Medical Journal 224/92, pp 391-4.

Prenatal screening for Down's Syndrome with use of maternal serum makers—Haddow J. E, Palomaki G. E, Knight G. J, et al, New England Journal of Medicine, Vol. 327, No. 9, pp 588-93.

Maternal serum screening for fetal Down Syndrome in Women less than 35 years of age using alpha-fetaprotein, hCG, and unconjugated estriol: a prospective 2 year study —Phillips et al, Obstetrics and Gynecology, Vol. 80, No. 3, Part 1, pp 353-8.

Prospective intervention trial of a screening protocol to identify fetal trisonomy 18 using maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein, unconjugated oestriol, and human chorinonic gonadotropin—Palomaki GE, Knight GJ et al, Prenatal diagnosis, Vol. 12, pp 925-30.

Health Care Funding

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of funding per capita for health care for each of the last five years for (a) the North East Essex health district and (b) the East Suffolk health district.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of funding per capita for health care in each of the last five years for (a) Mid Essex health district and (b) the East Suffolk health district.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The allocation of funds to the district health authorities is a matter for the North East Thames and the East Anglian regional health authorities respectively and detailed information is not collected centrally.

Information which relates the expenditure of the DHAs to their resident populations is shown in the table.

The figures which for the years before 1991-92 predate the national health service reforms, show the DHAs as providers of health care. Expenditure per head of population therefore reflects patterns of local service provision and the effects of patient flows across health authority boundaries.

The figures for 1991-92, which show the DHAs as purchasers and are not comparable to those for earlier years, reflect a transitional position as each RHA moves towards allocating funds to DHAs on a weighted capitation basis. Figures for total spending per capita include other resources, such as regional budgets and local income, in addition to allocations for resident population.

Revenue expenditure per head of population

Sources:

a. Annual accounts of the North East Essex, the Mid Essex and the East Suffolk district health authorities.

b. Mid-year estimates of resident population—1987-91 (Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys).

Notes:

1. For the years prior to 1991-92, the figures for the DHAs are based upon their total revenue expenditure on the services which they managed or accounted for in the relevant financial years. For 1991-92 the figures for the DHAs are based upon their total revenue expenditure on purchases of health care and directly related services through contracts placed with their own Directly Managed Units and other providers of health care. Expenditure incurred on the authorities' administrative and purchasing functions is excluded.

2. Capital expenditure incurred by the DHAs and all expenditure incurred by RHAs on behalf of their regions as a whole is excluded.

3. The population figures used make no allowance for people resident in particular districts who receive treatment in others. For consistency the population estimates employed are those based on the 1981 Census.

Wessex Regional Health Authority (Computer)

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the money lost by Wessex regional health authority in attempting to install a new computer system; and if she will make a statement on the current situation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to the reply, 10 February, column 701]: A comprehensive report in the public interest on this subject was published in July 1992. In addition, the district auditor decided to provide further material to Wessex regional health authority in confidence, to enable the authority to pursue all avenues for legal action. When I was informed of these documents, I instructed the chief executive of the national health service to ensure that rigorous remedial action was taken by the region and closely monitored by the national health service management executive; and that every opportunity for legal and police action was fully explored. Wessex regional health authority made all the material available to the police, whose inquiries are continuing. Legal action is still in progress.

It is very important that these serious matters should be fully studied and lessons learnt. I understand that the Public Accounts Committee has commissioned a further report on the project from the Comptroller and Auditor General and I shall consider it very carefully. It is important that as much information as possible should be in the public domain. With regard to the confidential reports to the regional health authority, I am advised that under section 30 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982, disclosure would require the consent of the people to whom the information relates. All the major points of concern are, however, set out very fully in the district auditor's public report.

Drug Addiction

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individual general practitioners provided notifications of drug addiction in the last year.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

In 1991, the last year for which figures are available, there were 3,075 general practitioners in the United Kingdom who provided such notifications to the Home Office.

Radiation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to reduce the United Kingdom's radiation dose limit to 0·3 milliSieverts and the lifetime radiation dose limit to 21 mSv.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom's radiation dose limits, for the public and for workers, comply with the current EC Eurotom directive on basic standards for radiation protection. Revision of this directive, and the dose limits therein, will begin later this year. My right hon. Friend has no plans to reduce dose limits in advance of revision of the directive.

ENVIRONMENT

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Howard: A provisional list of the regulations for which this Department is responsible and which impact on business has recently been prepared. I will arrange for it to be placed in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the firms of consultants used by his Department as part of the market testing programme since November 1991 together with the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My Department has used the following consultancy services to assist it in the development of the market testing process since November 1991:

Dr. Alan Kemp
Shreeveport
Simon Thorpe Consultancy
Hoskyns Group plc
Prime Strategy Consultants
Symonds
Capita Management Consultancy
Civil Service College
Coopers and Lybrand
Peter Burholt Consultancy Ltd.
Lane Whittlesey Business Consultants.

The total cost of consultancies let to date is £302,004.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the meetings his Ministers have had with representatives of the voluntary sector to discuss the impact of the reduction of the urban programme, including an account of the representations made; and what action he intends to take as a result of these representations.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have met representatives of the voluntary sector to discuss how the changes to the urban programme might affect them. I welcome the valuable work that the voluntary sector does in urban areas and I am pleased that the urban programme will be able to continue to fund voluntary sector projects that have been approved in this or previous financial years, for up to four years. The voluntary sector draws its funding from a wide range of sources and non-urban priority authorities support such groups without additional assistance from central Government.

Forest of Dean Council

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the indebtedness of the Forest of Dean district council in each year since 1980.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table:

Total external debt (temporary and longer-term)

Year End	Forest of Dean £000
1979-80	20,000
1980-81	22,000

Local Government Debts, Essex

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the indebtedness of Essex county council, Colchester borough council and Maldon district council in each year since 1980.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table:

Total external debt (temporary and longer-term)

Year end	Essex £000	Colchester £000	Maldon £000
1979-80	85,000	44,000	13,000

Local Government Debts

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish a table showing the indebtedness of each district authority in ascending order;
(2) if he will publish a table showing the indebtedness of each county authority in ascending order.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have today placed the information requested about the outstanding debt of county and district councils in the Library of the House.

Community Charge

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people registered for the community charge became liable to pay the charge as a result of attaining the age of 18 years after 31 March 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire: Individual community charge registration officers hold information about charge payers; there are no central records.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend the community charge reduction scheme to people registered who became liable to pay on reaching 18 years of age after 31 March 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

Refugees (Local Authorities)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources, additional to standard spending assessment provision, will be made available to local authorities providing support to refugees of former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Robin Squire: Details of the financial assistance in respect of 1992-93 which will be available to those local authorities most affected by the influx of displaced persons from the former Yugoslavia are set out in the Special Grant Report (No. 5) which was approved by the House on 3 February 1993. A further Special Grant Report incorporating details of a scheme of financial assistance for the financial year 1993-94 will be laid in due course.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish an advisory team to collate information on oil spill impact on the environment and pursue research into control and prevention measures.

Mr. Maclean: Information on oil spills and discharges throughout the north-east Atlantic is collected and evaluated by the Paris Commission, in which Department of the Environment officials play a full part. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has announced an ecological steering group to consider what lessons are to be learnt and what research is suggested by the MV Braer incident.

City Challenge

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 522, if he will place in the Library the information subsequent to the 1981 census which was used to amend the criteria for urban areas eligible to apply for city challenge.

Mr. Howard: Information on unemployment levels and derelict land was used to inform the selection of urban priority areas subsequent to the 1981 census. Both sets of information were published; unemployment data in the regular statistical series from the Department of Employment and derelict land from the Department of the Environment's survey—"Survey of Derelict Land in England 1982, DOE 1984".

Transfers of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to Cherwell district council and Hampshire county council on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Robin Squire: No guidance on the application of the regulations has been issued to either authority. My Department has, however, made clear in correspondence with Cherwell district council and with the local authority associations that in its view the regulations will not normally apply to the straightforward contracting out of local authority services in consideration of a fee. It is accepted that the regulations may apply in certain circumstances where the arrangements entered into with a contractor are more complicated, but any local authority which attempts to structure a contract to ensure that the regulations apply, or insists that contractors tender on the basis that they apply, may be guilty of anti-competitive behaviour and thus risk sanctions imposed by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Urban Partnership Fund

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities will receive assistance from the urban partnership fund; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the capital partnership programme.

Mr. Howard: There has been an enthusiastic response to our invitation to the 57 urban priority authorities to bid for a share of the £20 million urban partnership fund element of capital partnership. I am pleased to announce offers of support to these local authorities and their partners:

Birmingham, Bolton, Brent, Bristol, Burnley, Coventry, Derby, Doncaster, Dudley, Gateshead, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith & Fulham, Hartlepool, Hull, Islington, Kirklees, Knowsley, Leeds, Leicester, Lambeth, Langbaurgh, Liverpool, Manchester, Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Newham, North Tyneside, Nottingham, Oldham, Plymouth, Preston, Rochdale, Rotherham, Salford, Sandwell, Sefton, Sheffield, South Tyneside, Southwark, Stockton, Sunderland, Wandsworth, Wigan, Wirral, Wolverhampton.

Along with support from the fund, the authorities will make use of about £33 million capital receipts and, taken together, the projects are estimated to lever in over £130 million of private sector resources. The projects will provide a major boost to regeneration activity and continue the partnership approach to renewal which is a central feature of Government inner cities initiatives and crucial to achieving lasting regeneration.

A wide range of project proposals to benefit urban areas and their communities were submitted. Those selected were the ones which best met the criteria. These include: whether the proposals address the needs of local people and business in the area; whether they complement other activity in the area; and value for money, including whether they lever in resources which might otherwise not be available for renewal of the area.

Each authority has today been notified of the outcome of its bid. Authorities whose bids were not successful, due to the heavy demand on the funds available, will naturally be disappointed. We hope that at least some elements of the proposals can be taken forward using their capital receipts.

A full list list of proposed projects has been placed in the Library of the House.

The urban partnership fund is only the first of a number of components of capital partnership for which successful bids will be announced. The others are:

Housing Partnership, including the Housing Partnership Fund; Environmental Partnership, including programmes for recycling, waste management, contaminated land and landfill gas; and Countryside Partnership, covering programmes of the Rural Development Commission and Countryside Commission.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Public Appointments

Mr. Canavan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what public appointments he has made since 1 November 1992; and what information he has on the political affiliations of those appointed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend is responsible for a total of over 800 public appointments. A total of 114 appointments, including reappointments, to 21 public bodies have been made since 1 November 1992. We do not routinely collect information on the political affiliations of those appointed, although sometimes this information is already in the public domain. The readily available information about the public appointments for which my right hon. Friend is responsible is published regularly in "Public Bodies".

Motor Industry

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with his EC counterparts about the level of (a) Italian Government intervention in support of Fiat and (b) French Government support of Renault.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have consistently drawn to the attention of the Commission cases involving alleged unfair state aid in the vehicles sector. The Commission's investigations have included reviews of state support for Fiat and Renault and have resulted in legally binding decisions on the level of aid permissible.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will outline the research undertaken by his Department to date on (a) the quality and (b) pollution levels occuring when burning (i) deep-mined coal produced within the United Kingdom coalfields, (ii) open-cast coal produced within the United Kingdom, (iii) deep-mined coal from each country that exports coal into the United Kingdom and (iv) open-cast coal from each country that exports coal to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The key aim for Government support for clean coal technology research over the past few years has been to ensure that coal can achieve its full economic potential in contributing to United Kingdom energy supply taking account of the increasing severe environmental constraints. Although our programme has focused on improving the quality and reducing the pollution levels of using United Kingdom coals, much of the research would be applicable to deep mine and opencast coal from both the United Kingdom and overseas.

The present programme is funding a portfolio of 56 projects with a value of over £114 million. Many of these projects are collaborative projects undertaken in partnership with United Kingdom industry, universities, British Coal, and overseas organisations under the auspices of the European Commission and International Energy Agency. Most of this expenditure is funding research on advanced power generation such as British Coal's topping cycle technology, alternative uses of coal —for example, British Coal's coal liquefaction project at Point of Ayr, North Wales—and coal science research with universities and United Kingdom industry.

A wide range of reports on coal quality, emissions, and technologies applicable to both United Kingdom and overseas coals are published by IEA Coal Research which forms one of the projects supported by my Department. A list of its publications are in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what total funding for clean coal technology, including funding by the International Energy Association, has been given in the United Kingdom for each year since 1985; and what comparable information he has for Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The International Energy Agency does not provide funds of its own, but encourages voluntary collaborative arrangements between member countries who contribute funds to a number of agreements including those based on clean coal technologies. Figures for the distribution of such funds among member countries are not readily available and I cannot add any further financial information to my previous reply in the Official Report, column 206 on 3 February 1993. The United Kingdom has, however, participated in most of the coal-related IEA agreements.

Wave Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what change his Department has made in the method of calculating the cost of wave power since the report of the energy technology support unit (ETSU-R-26) on wave energy in 1985.

Mr. Eggar: The method of calculating the cost of wave power as part of the 1992 review of wave energy is detailed in ETSU report R-72, "A Review of Wave Energy", a copy of which is in the Library.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of employees in his Department are registered disabled.

Mr. Eggar: On 1 July 1992, the latest date for which information is readily available, 1·0 per cent. of the Department's employees were registered as disabled.

The Department also employs a number of people who are known to be disabled but have chosen not to register.

Japanese Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he had with the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry in relation to flows of Japanese investment in manufacturing industry into each European Community country.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 February 1993]: My colleagues and I hold regular meetings with the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry. Our discussions on Japanese manufacturing investment are of a bilateral nature only.

Coal Industry

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are directly or indirectly employed in the coal mining industry (a) in Scotland and (b) in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The latest available estimates of employees in employment show that there were 63,000 employees in the coal extraction and manufacture of solid fuels industry in the United Kingdom in September 1992. More detailed estimates are available only from the census of employment. The latest results relate to September 1989 and are as follows:

Employees in employment

	Coal extraction and manufacture of solid fuels	Of which Deep coal mines
Scotland	3,400	2,400
United Kingdom	96,000	88,700

Note: Estimates for 1991 will be published in April 1993.

The Department has no figures for people indirectly employed in any industry.

Ship Building

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many engineering apprenticeships were available in the United Kingdom ship building industry in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

Information relating specifically to the number of engineering apprenticeships available in the shipbuilding industry for the years 1974, 1979 and 1992 is not available.

PRIME MINISTER

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Ward: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the latest reports of the pay review bodies.

The Prime Minister: The 1993 reports of the review bodies on the pay of nursing staff, midwives and health visitors, the professions allied to medicine, the armed forces, and school teachers have now been published. Copies are available in the Vote Office. The Government are grateful to the members of the review bodies for the time and care which they have put into the preparation of the reports.

In November the Government announced that public sector pay settlements in the coming year would be restricted to a range of 0 to 1·5 per cent. In line with the approach to public sector pay restraint, the groups covered by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body, the Nurses Pay Review Body and the Armed Forces Pay Review Body would receive an increase in pay of 1·5 per cent. from 1 April 1993. These review bodies were, however, invited by the Government to continue work on other specific issues and consider their position on performance pay, as appropriate to their remit groups.

In accordance with this earlier statement, the Government will pay increases of 1·5 per cent. to doctors and dentists, nursing staff, midwives and health visitors, professions allied to medicine and the armed forces with effect from 1 April 1993.

The School Teachers Review Body had previously been directed to report on school teachers' pay and conditions in 1993-94. The Secretary of State for Education directed it to have regard to the Government's general approach to public sector pay restraint.

The School Teachers Review Body has recommended an across the board increase of 1 per cent. from 1 April 1993 together with restructuring of classroom teachers' pay effective from 1 September 1993. The recommendations would cost a total of 1·5 per cent. in the financial year 1993-94 and an additional 0·35 per cent. in the following year. The Government therefore propose to reduce the across-the-board increase for qualified classroom teachers at 1 April to 0·55 per cent., but to make a one-off payment of £90 to those teachers on 1 May 1993. This, together with the implementation of restructuring designed to develop the relationship between pay and performance in schools, will give teachers, like most other review body groups, an increase in pay of 1·5 per cent. whilst containing the total cost within the settlement limit. Head and deputy head teachers will, as recommended by the review body, receive an increase of 1 per cent. on 1 April.

The Top Salaries Review Body did not report this year. In common with Ministers and Members of Parliament, Top Salaries Review Body groups will receive no pay increase in respect of 1993. The Government will honour their commitment to pay the deferred second stage of the 1992 award, under which these groups will receive an increase of 2·9 per cent. from 1 April 1993.

The Doctors and Dentists Review Body also decided not to report this year, but recommended an increase in the number of distinction awards for consultant medical and dental staff. The Nurses Pay Review Body and Armed Forces Pay Review Body also produced a number of recommendations. The Government have accepted all of these recommendations.

The Government are also committed under the citizens charter to establishing a regular and direct link between a person's contribution to the quality of services and his or her reward. The review bodies have therefore been asked to consider the longer-term development of performance pay which will make this a reality.

The table shows the increases for each group, and their cost.

Review body	Pay bill increase 1993-94[1] Per cent.	Public expenditure expenditure cost £ million
Doctors and dentists (DDRB)[2]	1·5	[3][4]61
Nurses and allied professions (NAPRB)[2]
nurses and midwives	1·5	[3]114
professions allied to medicine (PAMs)	1·5	[3]12
Armed forces (AFPRB)[5]	1·5	85
School teachers (STRB)[6]	1·5	[7]157

[1] Percentages by which the awards would increase the estimated 1993-94 pay bill.

[2] Great Britain. Northern Ireland health service pay normally follows Great Britain but is decided separately.

[3] Includes cost of staff in NHS Trusts.

[4] Figures exclude general medical practitioners' expenses which are subject to negotiation.

[5] United Kingdom.

[6] England and Wales. Scotland and Northern Ireland have separate pay regimes for school teachers.

[7] Does not include any consequential increases in the paybill of sixth form colleges becoming Further Education Corporations on 1 April.

The cost of implementing these increases will be met from within the public expenditure planning totals published in the autumn statement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit Fraud

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what incentives he proposes to give councils to strengthen the numbers of staff engaged in the detection of housing benefit fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 November a number of measures to encourage local authorities to bear down on housing benefit fraud. From April this year, the level of benefit subsidy for housing benefit fraudulent overpayments will be increased from 25 per cent. to full rate 95 per cent. It is also proposed to allow local authorities to share in any weekly benefit savings above a specified level and generated through their anti-fraud efforts. These savings will be paid through the administrative subsidy arrangements.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to refund councils involved in the detection of housing benefit fraud their legitimate overhead costs, legal expenses and any other sums not recompensed by recovery from those convicted of fraud and conspiracy to defraud that council.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

Under present arrangements, there is no specific element in central Government funding, including the amount paid for administration subsidy by the Department, to cover those costs. However, under proposed arrangements from April 1993, authorities will be able to share in any weekly benefit savings, above a specified level, which their fraud staff generate.

Pensioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners had an income of less than £5,000 a year, at the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe [pursuant to her reply, 11 January 1993, c. 675]: The following information was incorrect.

'It is estimated[1] that 61 per cent. of single pensioners[2] had an income of less than £5,000 per year in 1988 (the latest available date).'

The correct information is as follows:

'It is estimated[1] that 61 per cent. of pensioners[2] had an income of less than £5,000 per year in 1988 (the latest available date)'.

Notes:

[1] Family Expenditure Survey 1988.

[2] Based on pensioner units—ie single people over state pension age and couples where the husband is aged 65 or over, regardless of whether they are drawing state pension.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Mohd Khalil

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision will be taken on an application made to the British post in Islamabad by Mr. Mohd Khalil (Ref. IMM/B4131) to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lenox-Boyd: A decision was made by the British high commission in Islamabad on 28 September 1992 to refuse entry clearance to Mr. Mohammed Khalil as the entry clearance officer was not satisfied, as he is required to be under the immigration rules, that the primary purpose of the marriage was not to gain entry to the United Kingdom. Furthermore, the ECO was not satisfied that there was adequate support and accommodation available for Mr. Khalil in the United Kingdom without recourse to public funds.

Due to an administrative error, the formal notice of refusal was not sent to Mr. Khalil, but the ECO will now shortly do so. Any inconvenience this may have caused to Mr. Khalil is regretted.

Ministers of Religion

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many complaints were received by the British post in Islamabad before 1989 from those applying for entry clearance to settle in the United Kingdom or to visit the United Kingdom concerning priority entry clearance procedures being applied to ministers of religion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1989 many complaints were received by the post in Islamabad from sponsors and Members of Parliament in the United Kingdom about the waiting time for interviews for members of families seeking to join heads of households settled in the United Kingdom. The numbers of complaints was not recorded.

In order to give priority to family reunification cases, the queues were reorganised. As part of that exercise ministers of religion were reallocated from Q1 to Q3. This is the correct queue for applicants wishing to remain in the United Kingdom for more than six months other than those qualifying for Q1; those with a right of abode; applicants with a prima facie claim to British citizenship; aged dependents over 70; compassionate cases; Q2, spouses and dependent children under 18; and Q4, reapplicants.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ministers of religion have applied for visas to enter the United Kingdom at British overseas posts in each year since 1987; and how many were (a) granted and (b) refused.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested could not be provided except at disproportionate expense. The records since 1987 would need to be checked manually at 156 posts worldwide.

Muslim Women (Rape)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence is being collated by Her Majesty's Government over the systematic rape of Muslim women in the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is collecting a large body of information about alleged breaches of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia, including information about the sexual abuse of women. We propose to submit any substantiated evidence to the United Nations Secretary-General.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent meeting between the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Grantham, and Mr. Salman Rushdie.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My meeting on 4 February was a significant step in raising the profile of Mr. Rushdie's continuing plight. It is almost four years since Ayatollah Khomeini issued his death threat against him. In the face of the continued threat to Mr. Rushdie and recent statements by senior figures in Iran, it was right to demonstrate our support by holding the meeting.

I brought Mr. Rushdie up to date on our continuing efforts to resolve the problem of the fatwa and our decision to raise our profile and encourage international leaders and organisations to rally behind his cause. I reassured Mr. Rushdie that we remained greatly concerned by the continuing failure of the Iranian authorities to repudiate the incitement to murder and the bounty offered in that respect by an Iranian organisation. This failure inevitably prevents the establishment of full and friendly relations with Iran.

Secret Intelligence Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the cost of modifications to the new secret intelligence service headquarters building; if he will categorise that expenditure with amounts; and what proportion the cost of modifications bears to the cost of construction.

Mr. Hurd: The latest estimate of the total cost of the new secret intelligence service headquarters is £236 million. The cost of the site and original construction was some £150 million and completion costs including fitting out and equipping the building are likely to be a further £86 million. Part of the cost relates to the specialised nature of the secret intelligence service's requirements. It is not usual or sensible to comment further on matters of this nature.

Overseas Missions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many tennis courts are attached to British missions abroad; how many have been built in the last 10 years; at what cost to the taxpayer; and what is the monthly maintenance cost.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 9 February 1993]: There are 81 tennis courts at Foreign and Commonwealth Office posts overseas. Eleven courts have been constructed in the past 10 years, at a total cost of about £225,000. The estimated monthly maintenance cost of an average tennis court is about £50.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many swimming pools are attached to British missions abroad; how many have been built in the last 10 years; at what cost to the taxpayer; and what is the monthly maintenance cost.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 8 February 1993]: There are 135 swimming pools at Foreign and Commonwealth Office posts overseas. Twenty swimming pools have been built in the last 10 years, at a total cost of about £750,000. The estimated monthly maintenance cost of an average pool is about £200.

SCOTLAND

Castle Fraser Estates

155. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide extra funds for Scottish Homes under the rural housing initiative to accommodate tenants to be evicted by Castle Fraser Estates; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No, Scottish Homes' total resources for 1993-94 already allow for a significant increase of 9 per cent. over its original programme for 1992-93. It is for Scottish Homes to decide on the relative priority of particular projects within its programme. The responsibility for dealing with any individuals who become homeless rests with local authorities which have a duty in terms of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 to provide advice and assistance to people in their area who become homeless.

Tied House Tenants

156. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce legal protection for long-standing tenants of tied houses on estates; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These tenancies are private arrangements between the tenants and their employers, and the conditions of tenure are known to the tenants when they enter into their contract of employment. However, tied tenants cannot be removed from their homes without a court order.

Drug Prescribing

157. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the savings achieved in Scotland in each of the seven therapeutic categories covered by the limited list regulations of 1985 in each of the years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991; and what were the total savings achieved in each year.

Mr. Stewart: In 1985-86, the first year of its operation, the selected list scheme saved £8·1 million on the Scottish NHS drugs bill. The savings in each of the therapeutic categories within the scheme were as follows:

	£ thousands
Analgesics for mild to moderate pain	2,400
Antacids	465
Benzodiazepine tranquillisers and sedatives	1,995
Cough and cold remedies	2,301
Laxatives	105
Tonics and bitters	35
Vitamins	772

It is not possible to make meaningful estimates for subsequent years, but we have no reason to doubt that significant savings will continue to be made.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prescription items per person in Scotland there have been each year since 1985.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 February 1993]: From the Scottish health service statistics the number of prescription items per person in each year since 1985 has been:

Year	Number
1985	6·96
1986-87	7·04
1988	7·33
1989	7·59
1990	8·00
1991	8·22
1992	8·63

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the general practitioners drugs bill in Scotland has been each year since 1985; if he will provide a breakdown by health board; and what has been (a) the expenditure on NHS medicines and (b) the total NHS drugs bill in Scotland in each year.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer of 9 February 1993]: The following are the cost of drugs dispensed in the community by health boards for each year since 1985 and the cost of drugs supplied to hospitals for the same years. Over 99 per cent. of the costs for drugs dispensed in the community relate to prescribing by GPs.

Holyrood House (Entrance Fees)

159. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of the entrance fees for Holyrood house for the latest year for which figures are available; and to what purposes the revenues are applied.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no responsibility for the presentation of the Palace of Holyrood house to the public. The amount collected in entrance fees, which is directed towards the administrative and conservation costs of the royal collection, is a matter for the director of the royal collection, to whom the hon. Member may wish to write.

Tourism

160. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of "Tourism in the UK: Realising the Potential" as it applies to his Department's responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In respect of the tourism issues relating to Scotland, the following action has been taken. The work of the task forces charged with improving arrangements for training in the tourist industry, developing arts-based tourism and implementing environmental tourism management schemes have been advanced. A new initiative to help tourists with disabilities has been launched. The Scottish tourist board has fully committed itself to the principles of the citizens charter. In addition, we have set in train a fundamental review of the structure of arrangements under which support is provided to the industry.

Skye Bridge

161. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in respect of the construction of the bridge to Skye what changes have been made relevant to the planning inquiry to (a) the design of the secondary bridge, (b) the route of the approach road and (c) the construction of the prefabrication plant on the Plock of Kyle; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The changes made relevant to the public local inquiry held into the Skye bridge in early 1992 were: (a) the design of the secondary bridge was confirmed as a cast in-situ single spine beam deck launched incrementally on to single elliptical piers; and (b) the level of the approach road was lowered in front of Lochalsh road. The reporter was advised and took into consideration (a) and (b) before making her recommendation to the Secretary of State. This information therefore formed part of the inquiry and decision-making process.

The method of construction of the secondary bridge requires a temporary facility, to launch incrementally the deck of the bridge. The "cast and push" facility is contained within the boundaries of the confirmed road line and is a matter of construction for the contractor.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many suckler cow premium application forms were processed during each month of 1992; and what was (a) the shortest period and (b) the longest period to elapse between receipt of the application and payment of the claim.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 February 1993]: The number of suckler cow premium applications processed for payment during each month of 1992 is set out in the following table. The information on the shortest and longest periods between receipt of application and payment of claim is not available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

1992	Number of claims processed
January	1,075
February	777
March	233
April	134
May	31
June	39
July	0
August	594
September	2,253
October	1,834
November	1,305
December	1,709

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many late applications were received for suckler cow premium in respect of 1990 and 1991; and how many of these were (a) paid in full, (b) paid in part and (c) refused.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 February 1993]: Under the 1990 suckler cow premium scheme a total of 80 late applications were received. All these were received between the closing date of 31 January 1991 and 14 February 1991, thereby qualifying for the 70 per cent. of premium specified by the European Community rules of the scheme.

Under the 1991 scheme a total of 67 late applications were received. Of these 62 were received between 31 January 1992 and 14 February 1992, qualifying for a 70 per cent. rate of premium. Five claims received after 14 February 1992 were refused as required by the rules of the scheme.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many late applications for suckler cow premium in respect of 1992 he has received to date.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 February 1993]: A total of 101 applications have been received since 15 December 1992, the closing date for the 1992 suckler cow premium scheme.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations and discussions he has had about the continuation of the less favoured areas supplement to the suckler cow premium; and what plans he has to continue the less favoured areas supplement to the suckler cow premium.

Sir Hector Monro: [holding answer 8 February 1993]: I announced on 12 November 1992 that the rate of suckler cow premium from 1993 onwards would be limited to that part of the premium which is entirely funded by the European Community. In 1993 the rate will be £65·73, which represents an increase of 10 per cent. on the rate currently payable in the less-favoured areas.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the beef special premium in each year since 1979; and what was the less favoured areas supplement to the suckler cow premium in each year since 1990.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer of 9 February 1993]: The beef special premium scheme commenced in the United Kingdom in April 1989. Throughout the period 2 April 1989 to 31 December 1992 the premium was 40 ecu, but the amount paid to farmers varied with the value of the green pound on the date of receipt of their claims. The beef special premium increased to 60 ecu on 1 January 1993. The sterling value of the premium since its introduction is shown in the following table:

Date of Change	Rate £
2 April 1989	28·42
1 May 1989	29·19
11 January 1990	29·32
14 May 1990	31·81
17 June 1991	31·82
17 September 1992	32·33
22 September 1992	32·76
19 November 1992	35·22
26 November 1992	35·90
1 January 1993	56·34

The LFA supplement to the suckler cow premium was £4·26 in each year from 1990 to 1992.

Criminal Justice

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to amend section 80 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 so as to substitute the age of 16 for the age of 21 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to amend section 80 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has, following the issue of Crown Office circular No. 2025/1, on 20 December 1991, to amend the law relating to offences listed under statute or under common law; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to amend the law in this area.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on his prosecution policy in relation to prosecution of offences under section 80 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980, and similar offences under the common law.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Prosecution policy is a matter for my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate. A review of prosecution policy in relation to such offences which was instructed by the Lord Advocate in December 1991 is continuing.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what account he has taken of research by the Law Society of Scotland into the differing levels of remuneration for civil legal aid work by solicitors in (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales in assessing proposed changes to legal advice and assistance in civil legal aid in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has considered the comparisons made on behalf of the Law Society of Scotland in November 1990. These comparisons are not, however, directly relevant to the proposed changes to eligibility for advice and assistance and civil legal aid. Legal aid fees in Scotland are set to take account of the circumstances of the Scottish legal and legal aid systems.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cost of administration of the civil legal aid system by the Scottish Legal Aid Board for each financial year since 1987-88; and if he will show this as a percentage of the net payments from the civil legal aid fund in respect of each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

£ million

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Administrative costs for civil legal aid	2·915	3·138	3·479	3·796	3·850
Net civil legal aid payments	11·694	11·379	10·769	11·715	12·343
Administrative costs as a percentage of net civil legal aid payments	24·400	27·600	32·300	32·400	31·200

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in each of the past five years his permission has been sought prior to legal proceedings being instituted by the Scottish Legal Aid Board.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. There is no statutory requirement for the Scottish Legal Aid Board to obtain my right hon. Friend's permission before instituting legal proceedings.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and source of representations he has received from the individual members or committees of the Scottish Legal Aid Board in relation to changes to legal advice and assistance and to civil legal aid to be instituted on 1 April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations from individual members of the Scottish Legal Aid Board. The board itself and its legal aid committee submitted advice to my right hon. Friend on the proposed changes to eligibility for advice and assistance.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the gross payments for civil legal aid in each financial year since 1987-88; and if he will show each year's figure in real terms, using 1987-88 at base 100.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table shows (a) the gross expenditure on civil legal aid in each year since 1987-88, including actual expenditure in 1992-93 to January 1993 and estimated expenditure for the full year 1992-93; and (b) the same figures revalued where appropriate in line with the GDP deflator and expressed on a 1987-88 base of 100.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the net sum met from civil legal aid in each financial year since 1987-88 after deducting from gross payments those amounts recovered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

MV Braer

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the aftermath of the grounding of the MV "Braer".

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 February 1993]: Follow-up action to the Shetland oil spill received the highest priority. The Government's bridging fund for businesses facing economic hardship is now in place; the health survey of people living in the vicinity has started; the remit and chairman, Professor William Ritchie, of the ecological steering group have been announced and the remaining membership will be shortly; and the fishery exclusion zone has been extended. The Government will continue to ensure that all necessary steps are taken.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) business frauds, (b) cheque, credit and cash card frauds, (c) thefts from companies, (d) thefts from employees, (e) offences of shoplifting, (f) offences of vandalism against business and (g) assaults at the workplace were committed (i) in Scotland and (ii) in each police force area in 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The only available information collected centrally is given in the table.

Number of cases of theft by shoplifting recorded by the police in Scotland, 1991

Police force	Number
Northern	905
Grampian	2,329
Tayside	2,918
Fife	1,064
Lothian and Borders	5,750

Strathclyde	14,862
Dumfries and Galloway	547
Scotland	30,098

Scottish Record Office

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future organisation of the Scottish Record Office.

Mr. Lang: I have decided that, under the next steps initiative, the Scottish Record Office should be considered for executive agency status.

Sports Council

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, on a parliamentary constituency basis, all the projects in which the Scottish Sports Council has made a financial contribution in the current year and for the years 1991-92 and 1990-91.

Sir Hector Monro: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Muir Russell

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how often Mr. Muir Russell of his Department has met representatives of Stagecoach Holdings plc, in connection with his official duties, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: Prior to the first discussion of his possible appointment as a non-executive director, which was held on 1 December 1992, Mr. Russell had no meetings with representatives of Stagecoach Holdings plc.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to deal with under-age drinking in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Scotland Act 1990 prohibited the unsupervised sale of alcoholic liquor by under-age persons; required the sale of alcoholic liquor in wholesale quantities by under-age persons to be specifically authorised by responsible adults; and made it an offence to sell alcohol by wholesale to an under-age person. These provisions complemented existing legislation under which it is an offence for a licensee to allow a person under 18 to consume liquor in a bar and for alcoholic liquor to be sold to people under 18 or to be purchased on their behalf. The impact of experimental byelaws prohibiting drinking in public places in parts of Motherwell, Dundee and Galashiels is currently being assessed. If found to be effective my right hon. Friend will consider applications for the introduction of similar byelaws elsewhere.

The Government encourage schools to tackle alcohol education. Two conferences for student teachers were held in Scotland last year to increase teachers' awareness of the levels of alcohol misuse among young people and the ways in which alcohol education can be integrated into the school curriculum.

Much of the work of the Health Education Board for Scotland focuses on the young drinker. Further initiatives, bearing particularly on young people, are envisaged for 1993-94.

National Portrait Gallery

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to intervene in the proposed closure of the Scottish national portrait gallery; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received on the importance of the Scottish national portrait gallery as a scholarly resource and to Scottish life; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 February 1993]: When the trustees of the National Galleries of Scotland first announced, in August 1991, that they wished to establish a gallery of Scottish art, one member of the public wrote to my right hon. Friend expressing concern that such a proposal could lead to the demise of the Scottish national portrait gallery.

My right hon. Friend has not received from the trustees a firm and costed proposal for a Scottish gallery and has given no commitment to funding for such a proposal. The trustees have been specifically asked to examine the effect of the proposed gallery on the existing grouping of the national collections and on the buildings in which these are currently housed.

Severely Disadvantaged Areas

Dr, Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many regular full-time hired farm workers are employed on farm holdings in the severely disadvantaged areas according to the most recent figures for each year since 1978.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Figures for severely disadvantaged areas are not readily available. However, the employment information requested for holdings within the Scottish less-favoured areas is set out in the table below. Information for the years prior to 1982 is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the level of indebtedness among mostly sheep farmers and sheep and beef farmers, respectively, in the severely disadvantaged areas for each year since 1978.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The information requested is set out in the table. Figures are available only since 1986-87.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes there have been in the proportion of mostly sheep and sheep and beef farmers in severely disadvantaged areas in relation to the number of mostly sheep farmers and sheep and beef farmers in total for Scotland since 1978; and if he will chart the change.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 February 1993]: Information for severely disadvantaged areas is not readily available. The information requested comparing sheep and cattle and sheep holdings within the Scottish less-favoured areas with such holdings in Scotland as a whole is set out in the table. Information prior to 1982 is not available.

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 232, how many Caledonian MacBrayne ferry routes are unprofitable; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend does not consider it desirable to indicate which Caledonian MacBrayne's routes are profitable or unprofitable or to require the company to make public commercially sensitive information about operating surpluses and deficits incurred on individual routes.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in support of separating the two branches of the Forestry Commission into separate organisations; and what discussions have taken place.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The House of Commons Agriculture Committee, in its report "Land Use and Forestry", published in February 1990, recommended that the Forestry Commission's forestry authority and forest enterprise functions should be divided between separate departments. The Government did not accept this recommendation, but subsequently agreed that the Forestry Commission should carry out an internal reorganisation to distinguish clearly between its functions as a Government Department and its role in managing publicly owned forests. This reorganisation took place with effect from 1 April 1992.

The Government have since received some representations in support of splitting the two parts of the Forestry Commission into separate organisations, most notably from the Centre for Policy Studies and the Adam Smith Institute. No discussions have taken place.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public access in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England has been lost since 1981 when Forestry Commission land was sold to the private sector.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The Government have retained no direct interest in such land following its sale by the Forestry Commission and no official statistics on the provision of access by the new owners have therefore been collected.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Forestry Commission land in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England has been sold to the private sector each year since 1981; and how much money has been raised in each case.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The areas of land sold by the Forestry Commission in each year since 1981 are shown in the following table. These include woodlands and other land such as agricultural land and residential properties. The total receipts from these sales are also shown. A breakdown of the receipts by country is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken or intends to take, to introduce legislation which will ensure public access before and after Forestry Commission land is sold.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the announcement made on this subject by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for Scotland on 21 November 1990, Official Report, columns 164-66. The Government have no plans to introduce legislation.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of land the Forestry Commission has held in each of the years since 1979 in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England; and what percentage of total land this is.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The information is given in the following table:

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many access arrangements, and how many access agreements, the Forestry Commission have made in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England in each year since 1991.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: Arrangements for securing continued public access to Forestry Commission woodlands after sale, by means of prior agreements entered into between the Commission and local authorities, were introduced in October 1991. No access agreements were completed in that year, but three were concluded in 1992, two in Wales and one in England.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of (a) Forestry Commission and (b) private planting each year since 1981 in (1) Scotland, (2) Wales and (3) England have been (i) new planting of conifers, (ii) restocking of conifers, (iii) new planting of broadleaf trees and (iv) restocking of broadleaf trees.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her yesterday at column 634.

Forestry

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations he has received, and what discussions he has held, in respect of increasing forestry in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England;

(2) what plans he has for increasing forestry in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I have had many representations on the need for increasing forestry in Britain. The Government made clear their support for "a steady expansion of tree cover to increase the many, diverse benefits that forests provide"

in a statement published in September 1991 under the title "Forestry Policy for Great Britain", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. This continues to be our policy, and we shall be reviewing the effectiveness of the incentives currently available for forestry investment in accordance with the commitment we gave in our election manifesto. This review will be completed later this year.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of afforestation in Great Britain has been in Scotland each year since 1981; and how much of this has been coniferous.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The information is given in the following table.

Year ended 31 March	Area afforested in Scotland as percentage of area in Britain	Area of conifers planted as percentage of total area planted in Scotland
1982	89	100
1983	85	99

1992	74	78

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of forest have been planted each year in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England without a grant from the woodland grant scheme since its introduction.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The Forestry Commission's estimates of the area of new woodlands planted without grant-aid each year since the woodland grant scheme was introduced are given in the table.

(hectares)

Year ended 31 March	Scotland	Wales	England	Total
1989	38	22	136	196
1990	2	4	185	191

Forestry Commission (Privatisation)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to privatise the Forestry Commission; and what consultations he has held.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The Government have no plans at present to privatise the Forestry Commission.

Fishing Nets

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the approximate cost to the Scottish Office of the recent prosecution of the owner of the Moyallan for carriage of a monofilament net.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The case has been handled through the normal procedures that exist for dealing with alleged breaches of fisheries law. It has involved a number of different officials who have spent small amounts of time over a period and for that reason it is not possible to estimate the costs involved.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's policy towards the carriage of monofilament nets in Scottish waters by fishing boats which are (a) United Kingdom-registered flag of convenience boats and (b) United Kingdom-registered in ports other than in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: Under the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986 the carriage of monofilament gill nets by any British fishing boat, including United Kingdom-registered flag of convenience boats and United Kingdom boats registered in ports other than in Scotland, is prohibited in the 0 to 6 mile sea area adjacent to the coast of Scotland.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many grants have been paid out under the woodland grant scheme in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England; and how much this has amounted to in each of the years since 1988.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The numbers of applications approved under the woodland grant scheme in each of the last four financial years, together with the grants paid, are shown in the following table. Applications associated with the farm woodland scheme have been included, but the grants paid do not take account of any annual payments made under that scheme.

	1988-89		1989-90		1990-91		1991-92

Total	3,221	629	5,472	10,205	4,500	13,499	3,253	14,595

NHS Drugs Committee

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appointees serve on the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs; and how many more seats there will be when the Committee is extended.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 February 1993]: There are currently 15 members on the advisory committee on NHS drugs; a further five members are being appointed.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had about extending the increase to the SAP less-favoured areas supplement after the current year; ane when the SAP less-favoured areas supplement will be paid.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I have received no such representations. An LFA supplement of 5·5 ecu was paid to Scottish sheep producers in late summer. The further 1·5 ecu agreed by the Agriculture Council in December is expected to be paid in April 1993.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the value of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments for the forthcoming year; and what was the value of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in each year since 1979.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The great majority of sheep and cattle which qualify for HLCAs in Scotland are located in the severely disadvantaged area of the less-favoured area. The HLCA sheep and cattle rates in the severely disadvantaged area in each year since 1979 were as set out in the following table:

Year	Cows £	Upland sheep £	Hill sheep £
1979	29·00	2·85	3·60
1980	35·00	4·25	5·50

Potatoes

128. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what national support schemes are planned within the proposed EC potato regime.

Sir Hector Monro Holding answer 9 February 1993]: The current EC proposals for potatoes make no provision for the recognition or maintenance of national support measures.

The EC considers that potatoes should be brought within the coverage of the CAP and that a harmonised regime is necessary for completion of the single market.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the operating costs of the Potato Marketing Board in each year since 1979.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The operating costs of the Potato Marketing Board are to be found in the annual report and accounts of the board. The figures in the table, for the period 1979 to 1991, reflect the total administrative costs incurred, excluding costs of market intervention.

	Administration cost
	£ million
1979	3·3
1980	3·9
1981	4·8
1982	5·0
1983	5·7
1984	6·0
1985	6·9
1986	7·0
1987	7·5
1988	7·8
1989	8·2
1990	6·9
1991	9·1

Source: PMB Annual report and accounts.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times the Government have intervened in the potato market; and what was the tonnage and cost in each year since 1979.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The Government do not intervene directly in the potato market but may pay a proportion of the cost of any intervention by the Potato Marketing Board under the provisions of the potato marketing scheme.

It is therefore difficult to link Government expenditure to tonnage. Since 1979 Government expenditure has been as follows:

	£ million
1981	13·5
1983	0·3
1985	12·9

Wool

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations and discussions he has received about retaining the British Wool Marketing Board's statutory guarantee duties; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I have received representations about the ending of the wool guarantee from a number of hon. Members, from the National Farmers Union of Scotland, from the Scottish Crofters Union and from the Scottish northern regional committee of the British Wool Marketing Board.

We announced our decision to terminate the wool guarantee in 1988. This element of direct involvement in the wool market has outlived its usefulness, particularly in the face of EC support measures under the common agricultural policy. Sheep farmers will continue to receive very substantial Government support through ewe premium and hill livestock compensatory allowances. Scottish producers currently benefit each year by over £100 million in direct subsidies from these sources.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the British Wool Marketing Board's standard guarantee price in each year since 1979; what was the world wool price in each year since 1979; and what the income from wool has been to producers in the less favoured areas in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The guarantee price for wool in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 is given in the table:

Year	Price (p/kg)
1979	112
1980-83	115
1984	120
1985-89	129
1990	125
1991	130
1992	117

The price of wool on world markets varies from country to country and is influenced by factors such as demand, availability and quality. The average price achieved for British wool at auction in each year since 1979 is given in the table:

Year	Price (p/kg)
1979-80	103·20
1980-81	87·64
1981-82	101·99
1982-83	99·86
1983-84	119·91
1984-85	138·70
1985-86	112·69
1986-87	116·72
1987-88	133·87
1988-89	136·38
1989-90	109·58
1990-91	61·85
1991-92	[1]61·08

[1] Provisional.

Information covering the income of producers in the less-favoured areas only is not available.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations and discussions he has had with regard to maintaining the current restrictions which ensure the milk quotas on remote and island areas in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: A number of representations have been received about ring-fencing milk quotas within the remote and island areas of Scotland. The Government are considering this matter in the light of new European Community regulations governing milk quotas.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table of farm income figures in Scotland in each year since 1979, at 1992 prices.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The figures requested are set out in the table:

Farming income at 1992 prices[1]

	£ million
1979	182·8
1980	47·5
1981	146·5
1982	226·5
1983	148·3
1984	281·4
1985	32·4
1986	125·0
1987	215·5
1988	138·9
1989	205·8
1990	153·3
1991	100·9
[2]1992	163·4

[1] Aggregate farming income in cash terms deflated by the retail price index (1992 = 100).
[2] Estimated.

Note: Farming income is the return to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial input and the capital they have in the farm business.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of redundancies among NHS staff for each year since 1989-90 dividing the figures by the reason.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 February 1993]: Statistics on redundancies in the NHS in Scotland are not collected centrally other than in respect of staff who are both over 50 years of age and have at least five years' reckonable service for superannuation purposes where a benefit is immediately payable under the NHS (Compensation for Premature Retirement) (Scotland) Regulations 1981. The total number of such premature retirement awards for the years since 1989-90 is as follows:

Year	Number of cases
1989-90	1,040
1990-91	480
1991-92	625

A breakdown by reason of redundancy is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Private Roads

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances EC funds can be sought to meet the cost of bringing a private road up to a standard where it can be adopted by the roads authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The normal method of attracting EC funding for a road project would be through the European regional development fund. To qualify, the project would have to be in an eligible area and be carried out by a public body. In Scotland, the areas eligible for ERDF are parts of Galloway, Lothian except Edinburgh city, parts of Central, Fife and Tayside regions, and all of Strathclyde and Highlands and Islands regions.

In the majority of circumstances roads projects can be funded by ERDF only if they make a direct contribution to the creation and maintenance of employment, economic development, and productive investment. They must also be essential to the efficient movement of industrial, commercial, or tourist traffic. I am unaware of any other EC funds which might be available for the stated purpose.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 February 1993]: A provisional list of regulations which impact on business has recently been put together. Consideration will be given to placing the list in the Library once it has been fully checked for accuracy and consistency of definition.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the capital spending allocation for the Greater Glasgow health board for each of the last five years together with the comparable figure for 1992-93 and the projected capital budget for each of the next three years both in cash and real terms.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1993]: The figures for total capital allocations to Greater Glasgow health board for 1987-88 to 1992-93 are given in the table.

Year	Cash	£ million at 1992-93 prices
1987-88	20·216	27·817
1988-89	21·365	27·403
1989-90	28·031	33·735
1990-91	22·341	24·900
1991-92	30·627	31·929
1992-93	41·613	41·613

For 1993-94, Greater Glasgow health board, along with all other boards, received capital allocations for the building programme and computer developments which will be carried out by its directly managed units. It has also received provisional allocations for its directly managed units' building programme for 1994-95 and 1995-96. However, these figures are not comparable with those for previous years since they do not include the building and computer programmes of the prospective trusts. Capital provision for those will be included in their external financing limits. Additional small capital allocations may also be made for other purposes. For all boards and trusts the provisional allocations for 1994-95 and 1995-96 reflect only the consequences of the 1993-94 allocation and do not take into account potential new approvals given in the course of 1993-94. The figures are:

	Cash	£ million 1992-93 prices
1993-94 Building and computer programme	29·196	28·415
1994-95 Building programme only	20·048	18·897
1995-96 Building programme only	18·984	17·415

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all schools which have opted to adopt grant-maintained status.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 February 1993]: Parents at London Street primary school in Edinburgh and Dalmuir primary school in Clydebank have voted in favour of applying for self-governing status. The subsequent application by the London Street primary school board was rejected and the Dalmuir primary school board has been advised that I am considering rejection of their application.

Parents of three schools are currently being balloted by their school boards on self-governing status. The schools are St. Mary's Episcopal primary school, Dunblane where the school board has passed two resolutions calling for a ballot; and St. Gerard's and Queen's Park secondary schools in Glasgow where parents have presented the school board with a petition seeking a ballot.

Hospitals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce a guarantee for patients who wish to receive in-patient treatment at the same hospital they attended as out-patients.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 February 1993]: No. The decision as to how treatment should be carried out is a matter for discussion between the patient and his or her general practitioner and then the patient and consultant to whom he or she is referred. This may lead to a decision that the in-patient treatment may be most appropriately provided at another hospital.

TRANSPORT

Tourism

Mr.Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of "Tourism in the UK: Realising the Potential" as it applies to his Department's responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department recognises that travel is an integral part of tourism and continues to make progress in the areas of work which are described in "Tourism in the UK: Realising the Potential". As foreshadowed in the report a number of initiatives have been taken to assist tourist coach operation in central London, including the provision of over 160 additional parking spaces for the 1992 summer season.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Two market tests have taken place in the Department of Transport since November 1991:

1. Subject: Procurement and Storage of Protective Clothing. Service was contracted out. Contractor is Greenham Trading Limited.
2. Subject: Bulk/High Speed Reprographic Services. Service was contracted out: a split award, the contractors are HMSO Reprographics and Multiplex Technics Limited.

These services were examined and tenders invited under the procedures obtaining before the publication of the White Paper "Competing for Quality" in November 1991. It is likely that any remaining items from this original programme will be dealt with under the new procedures, including the in-house bid. None of the items included in the new programme, published in the citizens charter first report, has reached tender stage.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The equivalent of eight full-time staff are assigned to the market testing programme. The approximate costs, including consultancies since November 1991 are £250,000.

Pedestrian Crossing, Dorrington

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to respond to representations on the need for pedestrian crossing facilities on the A49 in Dorrington, Shrewsbury.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Discussions on the need for pedestrian crossing facilities on the A49 in Dorrington have been proceeding for some time. The Department's officials are arranging to meet representatives of Shropshire county council and Condover parish council later this month to discuss the options.

Exmoor

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the representations by the Exmoor Society about the protection of moorland and villages from increased motor traffic.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am aware that the Exmoor Society has expressed to the national park authority its concern about traffic on Exmoor. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has not been asked to consider this matter which is one for the local authorities concerned.

Rail Freight

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what tonnage of freight was transported by railway in each year since 1974; and what percentage this represented of total freight movements.

Mr. Freeman: Annual freight tonnages moved by rail can be found in table 9.3 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1992," a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Rail's percentage share for the years 1981 to 1991 is shown in table 1.9; comparable data for ealier years may be found in previous editions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 418-19, if he will now make public payment for track costs of rail freight operations in advance of conclusions to the parliamentary consideration of rail privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: No. Such payments must await the clear identification of track costs which the formal establishment of Railtrack will bring and the designation of the Secretary of State as the competent authority under EC regulation 1893-91.

Maritime Radar

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost of a maritime radar installation with a recording facility.

Mr. Norris: It is not possible to estimate the costs of a radar installation without knowing the details of the location and type of facility proposed.

Lorries

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken on the night and weekend exemption system for lorries in parts of London, on its costs and benefits, and on the average cost of each lorry refused an exemption permit in each year of operation of the scheme.

Mr. Norris: The Londonwide overnight and weekend lorry ban was adopted by a number of London borough councils following the abolition of the Greater London council. It is administered by the London Boroughs Transport Committee. None of the information requested is readily available to my Department.

Fuel Consumption (Motorways)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the revenue from duty on fuel consumed on motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Approximately one eighth of the petrol and one quarter of the diesel fuel used in this country is consumed on motorways. The duty paid on this fuel would have been about £1·7 billion in 1991-92.

Trans-Pennine Routes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 493, what route across the Pennines he intends to exclude from consideration.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The route referred to by my right hon. Friend in that answer was a dual carriageway on the A628-A616 through the Peak District national park. I shall consider any suggestions about extension of the M65 which may emerge from the current consultation on the trans-Pennine study strategy report.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the terms of reference for the consultants responsible for the trans-Pennine study strategy report.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: To study traffic levels on the existing routes across the Pennines; to identify existing and future problems on the road network taking into account planned network developments and forecast increases in traffic and the role of public transport; and to identify potential solutions and assess their environmental and economic impact.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies and reports he has commissioned on the extension of the M65 eastwards from Colne.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None apart from the trans-Pennine study, which looked at all major routes across the Pennines.

Stockport Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to hold the next public inquiry into the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I cannot yet say when we shall be able to hold the next public inquiry. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Railway Staff

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will conduct an examination of the consequences of the cessation of national negotiating machinery for weekly wages railway staff on their respective responsibilities.

Mr. Freeman: No. Collective bargaining arrangements are a matter for negotiation between employers and employees.

Rail Franchises

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what timetable he expects to be followed in the award of the initial franchises for existing British Rail services.

Mr. Freeman: Subject to Parliament approving the Railways Bill, we expect the franchising director to award the franchise contracts for the initial franchises in time for the first private sector railway franchises to commence services in 1994.

Railway Investment

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received from external sources on the effect of the cost of capital to private investors relative to the cost to the public sector on the level of future investment in the railways.

Mr. Freeman: We receive advice on a regular basis from our merchant bank advisers, Samuel Montagu. The cost of capital to private sector companies involved in the railway will depend on the market's view of the risks and rewards involved.

Railway Equipment

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the length of time it will take to renew existing British Rail bridges, trains, signalling and power supply equipment at the present rate of replacements; and what information he has on the average design life of each category or main type of (a) bridge, (b) train, (c) signalling and (d) power supply equipment.

Mr. Freeman: An assessment of this kind would not yield meaningful results given the varied durability of the different assets mentioned. The design life of bridges varies from 20 years to more than a century, of trains from 25 to 40 years and for signalling and power supply equipment from 20 years upwards. Asset lives assumed for the purpose of calculation of amortisation and depreciation charges in British Rail's annual report and accounts for 1991-92 are set out in note 4 on accounting policies in that report.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oil tankers travelled through United Kingdom waters in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to provide 24-hour availability of tugs to assist oil tankers in distress.

Mr. Norris: The provision of salvage tugs is a matter for commercial salvage companies and other owners of suitable vessels. Suitable Ministry of Defence vessels will offer emergency assistance if they are available and no suitable commercial vessel is within reach. The Government have no plans to provide salvage tugs themselves, other than for Ministry of Defence purposes. The Government are aware of work being done by the international salvage industry on the availability of salvage services and will consider carefully the implications of the forthcoming report by the industry's salvage working group. In addition, Lord Donaldson has identified that one of the topics which he expects his inquiry to consider is whether present and traditional salvage arrangements are satisfactory in the context of a hazardous cargo, and at its recent meeting the EC Council noted that the Commission intends to include in its communication on maritime safety > "Initiatives to . . . promote measures concerning emergency services, in particular towing and co-ordination of the availability of salvage capacities".

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ban oil tankers built before 1980 from British waters.

Mr. Norris: There is no justification for banning tankers on a basis of age. A well-operated pre-1980 tanker presents less risk to the environment than a badly managed new vessel. This will be considered by Lord Donaldson in his inquiry, taking account of the economic implications as set out in his terms of reference.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to advocate mandatory standards at international level for alcohol policies and fail-safe mechanisms on oil tankers.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom already gives support at the International Maritime Organisation to international endorsement of a legal intoxication standard based on blood-alcohol level or equivalent and has a leading role in ensuring international recognition of the highest possible standards of design and construction for oil tankers and other merchant ships, having regard to detailed Classification Society requirements and any ship's specific company requirement related to the intended nature of service.

Sea-going Tugs

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many sea-going tugs are available in British waters; and where they are stationed.

Mr. Norris: According to the records held by the Registrar General of Shipping and Seamen, there are approximately 455 tugs. Information as to where they are stationed is not recorded.

Community Transport, London

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the community transport budget for London in each year since 1987.

Mr. Norris: The provision of community transport is primarily a matter for individual London boroughs. My Department does, however, provide funds for the Dial-a-Ride service through London Transport. Expenditure on this since 1987, in cash terms, is as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	6·000
1988-89	6·270
1989-90	7·270
1990-91	8·270
1991-92	10·015
1992-93	10·500

ScotRail

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the public service obligation grant requirement of regional railways was allocated to ScotRail in each year for which figures are available; and what was the amount in each year.

Mr. Freeman: PSO grant is given in relation to the total requirements of Regional Railways and Network SouthEast. It is not allocated to particular sectors within these businesses.

Chelmsford Bypass

Mr Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to begin on widening the Chelmsford A12 bypass.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 11 February 1993]: We expect to consult the public by the end of this year and announce a preferred option in 1994. Further progress will be dependent on the successful outcome of statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 218

SESSION 1992–93

1st February, 1993—12th February, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
